By Mr. WHITTHORNE: The petition of F. T. McLowrine, for compensation for property taken for the use of the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 19, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. VOORHEES, Mr. VANCE, Mr. PENDLETON, Mr. WINDOM, and Mr. BLAIR as the select committee to investigate the causes which have led to the emigration of negroes from the Southern States to Northern States, under the resolution of the Senate adopted yesterday.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 916) to authorize the United States to secure a title to certain military and timber reservations; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SITE OF ENGRAVING BUREAU.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire as to the necessity of enlarging the site on the south side of the building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the probable cost of the same, and report thereon to the Senate by bill or otherwise.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. THURMAN. It is obvious that there is no quorum here, and I think there is no probability that there will be one to-day. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the Senate stands adjourned until Tuesday, January 6, 1880, at twelve o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 19, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

VENTILATION OF THE HALL.

Mr. LORING. I present, Mr. Speaker, a report from the advisory board charged with carrying out, through the Architect of the Capitol Extension, certain changes in the heating, lighting, and ventilating apparatus of the Hall of the House of Representatives; and I also desire to move a suspension of the rules and the adoption of two resolutions to carry out the recommendations of that report.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. Does the gentleman desire the report which he presents read to the House?

Mr. LORING. I do; and then I shall ask for unanimous consent to introduce for action at this time two resolutions touching the subjects treated of in that communication.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 17, 1879.

SIR: The advisory board charged with carrying out, through the Architect of the Capitol Extension, certain changes in the heating, lighting, and ventilating apparatus of the Hall of the House of Representatives, by resolution of the House, dated February 27, 1879, has the honor to report:

That the plans prepared by the Architect, in accordance with the recommendations of the previous commission on this subject, having been approved by the advisory board on the 18th of April, work was commenced immediately after the adjournment of the extra session of Congress, and has been carried on through the summer under the immediate direction of the Architect of the Capitol Extension.

For architectural reasons, it was deemed expedient to place the mouth of the duct for the fresh supply of air at some distance from the point where this supply duct would have emerged on the terrace. In doing this it was found necessary to move a sewer, and to make special arrangements for a large gas-main supplying

Capitol Hill. This, together with a somewhat greater cost than was anticipated for decorating the lobby in the rear of the Speaker's chair, has made it impossible to complete all the work contemplated in the original recommendations of the board, from the amount of money appropriated for that purpose.

It is the opinion of the board that some additional registers, to be covered by stationary sofas or seats, are still wanting on the floor of the Hall. It is also considered desirable that there should be in the engineer's room means of registering the velocity of the air which is entering, also that which is passing out of the Hall. This is to be effected by means of small stationary anemometers, registering at a distance by means of electricity. It is also desirable that additional ventilating flues should be connected with the lobby in the rear of the Speaker's chair, and that still further change should be made in the upholstering of the seats in the gallery.

With the changes already made it is found that from 15 to 20 per cent. more air can be introduced into the Hall, without causing perceptible draughts, than could be done last year. It is desirable, however, to still further increase this quantity, and to give the engineer the means of knowing at all times precisely what work his machinery is doing in the way of air supply, as well as the temperatures in different parts of the Hall.

That this work may be completed during the recess of the Christmas holidays, it is respectfully recommended that the sum of $4,000 be appropriated for that purpose.

In its final report, which will be presented during the present session, the board will probably recommend some means for getting rid of the carpet on the floor of the Hall, which is a source of great discomfort and some danger to health, but as this will probably involve the relaying of at least a portion of the Hall in hard wood, and the use of some material to replace the carpet, for the purpose of deadening sound, which work cannot be carried out during the brief interval of the Christmas recess, the board will not make any recommendation on this subject at present.

Respectfully submitted.

ABRAM S. HEWITT,
Chairman Advisory Board on the Ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives.
GEO. B. LORING,
Of Advisory Board on Ventilation.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is that a report of any committee?

The SPEAKER. It is a communication from a commission established by law, having for its object the better ventilation of this Hall.

The report was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LORING. I now ask the Clerk to read the resolutions which I have submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, to be expended under the direction of the advisory board charged with the ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives, for completing the work and procuring electric registering anemometers, and other recording instruments necessary for the ventilation of the Hall, in accordance with the recommendations contained in their report, this day submitted to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be requested, and hereby authorized, to instruct the Clerk of the House of Representatives to furnish during the recess of Congress the lobby and corridor in the rear of the Hall of the House, and also the east vestibule of the House, for use as a reception-room.

Mr. CONGER. Let the Clerk read again that last resolution. I do not understand it.

Mr. LORING. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were again read.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before the gentleman demands the previous question I wish to make an inquiry.

Mr. LORING. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question and yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to state in his own way the exact purport of the resolutions. There was much confusion in the House during the time the resolutions were read, and I know there are a number of gentlemen present who desire exactly to know what it is that is proposed to be done.

Mr. LORING. If there is no objection, I will state simply what the object of the report and resolves is. As members of the House are well aware, the effort to ventilate this House, during the recess of Congress, has been eminently successful. They are also aware that it is not yet perfect, and the advisory board having the matter in charge recommend certain additional changes. They desire especially to avoid the draught through the floor, in reference to which members complain, and in order to do that the ventilating grates in the floor must be enlarged to balance with those in the ceiling of the House. The advisory board also desire that certain regulating apparatus shall be added to the ventilation, and in order to accomplish this and make it perfect, according to the best scientific rules of ventilation, the board estimates that an additional sum of $4,000 will be necessary. That is the object of the report of the board, and of the first resolve which I have offered.

The second resolve simply provides, Mr. Speaker, for furnishing the room in the rear of the Speaker's chair in order that it may be a comfortable and sightly room for the use of the members of the House. It also provides, at the suggestion of some of the officers of the House, that in the east end of this wing shall be provided a room as a substitute for the reception-room recently occupied by the ladies calling upon members of the House. It is considered, I understand, by the Sergeant-at-Arms that some such substitute should be provided, and that resolve has been added in order that that provision may be made. I am ready to answer any other question which the gentleman may propound.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask whether it is the purpose of the board to convert that hall in the east end of the wing into a room in the way of constructing a new partition or anything of that sort?

Mr. LORING. It is not.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is to be done, then?

Mr. CLYMER. It is a mere matter of furniture.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will be good enough to explain why it seems to be necessary to build so high a tower down yonder on the grounds. Is that a part of this ventilating machinery?

Mr. LORING. I desire to state to the gentleman from Ohio that that is for the admission of pure air and not for the egress of air—to avoid what is considered in Washington, indefinitely, malaria; I only know it came near killing me, but exactly what it is I cannot tell. We understand for these northern men who come down here it is necessary to get air from heaven and not from the earth. This tower was built to come as near heaven as possible. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the necessity of building a tall chimney to get draught for fire, but I do not see why we should disfigure our beautiful grounds by the erection of an immense chimney in the center of them unless science says we have to go up to heaven to get pure air. If so, I suppose we shall have to do it.

Mr. LORING. It was the edict of science. The health of members was considered of more importance, Mr. Speaker, than the beauty of these grounds. That is all of it.

Mr. STEPHENS. Now let us have the question on the resolution.

Mr. PRICE. I suggest to the mover of the resolution that by the language used we not only establish as a reception-room the vestibule in the east end of this wing, but also the corridors in the rear of the Speaker's chair. The language of the resolution makes the room in the rear of the Speaker's chair a reception-room as well as the east corridor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes not.

Mr. PRICE. I say the language of the resolution makes it so.

Mr. CLYMER. Let the last resolution be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be requested, and hereby authorized, to instruct the Clerk of the House of Representatives to furnish during the recess of Congress the lobby and corridor in the rear of the Hall of the House, and also the east vestibule of the House, for use as a reception-room.

Mr. PRICE. It covers them both. The copulative conjunction "and" has the effect to make the lobby and corridor, as well as the east vestibule, into a reception-room.

Mr. CLYMER. Let the resolution then be modified so as to provide that the lobby in the rear of the Hall of the House shall be for the use of members only.

Mr. PRICE. But the resolution does not say that.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to accept that amendment.

Mr. LORING. Certainly I will accept that amendment.

Mr. CLYMER. That the lobby in the rear of the Hall of the House be for the use of members only. The gentleman consents to the modification of the resolution in that way.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be now read as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be requested, and hereby authorized, to instruct the Clerk of the House of Representatives to furnish during the recess of Congress the lobby and corridor in the rear of the Hall of the House for the use of the members only, and also the east vestibule of the House for use as a reception-room.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I suggest a further amendment to include the clerks—that is for the use of members and clerks only.

Mr. CLYMER. There is no necessity for that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman accept that modification?

Mr. LORING. I do not. I understand that the room will be under the control of officers of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is understood.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. LORING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR AT MICHIGAN CITY, INDIANA.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to have a correction made in the RECORD, so as to show the introduction of a bill by myself on Monday last immediately after the introduction of bills by my colleague, Mr. HOSTETLER. It was a bill appropriating $200,000 to aid in the completion of the harbor at Michigan City, Indiana, and was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Bills appropriating for rivers and harbors go into the box under the rule.

GENERAL INDEX OF JOURNALS.

Mr. STEPHENS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Rules, made a report in writing on the general index of the Journals of Congress; which was ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. STEPHENS also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules are instructed to report whether the system adopted by them for the general index of the Journals of Congress can be applied to indexing the current publications of Congress, and to report such measures as may appear to them necessary for that purpose or for otherwise improving the methods of indexing the current publications.

REVISION OF RULES.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to inquire of the Chair when the Committee on Rules will report on the revision of the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is able to say that the Committee on Rules will make that report to-day. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has the report, and will make it during the morning. He is also authorized to make a statement to the House on the subject.

SAINT JOHN'S CATHEDRAL, INDIANAPOLIS.

Mr. DE LA MATYR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3058) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on an altar from Rome, Italy, for the Saint John's Cathedral, of Indianapolis, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH H. BODINE.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3059) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Bodine; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NICARAGUA CLAIMS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint the select committee of five members provided for by resolution now on the Public Calendar, the same having been favorably reported and a like committee having been appointed on the part of the Senate to inquire into the claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua and to examine those filed in the Department of State, and to report to this House.

Mr. KEIFER. There will be time enough for that after the recess.

Mr. ACKLEN. The committee if appointed now would be able to work during the holidays. There is no expense connected with it.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it will be time enough to consider that resolution when we come to it.

Mr. ACKLEN. I trust that the gentleman from Ohio will not object.

Mr. KEIFER. I do object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the resolution is not before the House.

EXPENSES OF SUB-COMMITTEE OF COMMERCE.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the resolution which I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House is hereby directed to pay out of the contingent fund upon the vouchers of the chairman of the sub-committee of commerce appointed by resolution of this House, adopted June 4, the expenses paid and incurred by him and other members in carrying out said resolution, not to exceed $700.

A MEMBER. Let that go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution. I will say in the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL] that a portion of these expenses has been paid by certain members of that committee already, and other portions have been incurred by members of the committee under resolution of this House. I think under those circumstances objection will not be made.

Mr. BREWER. I object.

Mr. ACKLEN. Does the gentleman object to the resolution going to the Committee of Accounts?

Mr. BREWER. I do not.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

REVISION OF RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report to this House the proposed revision of its rules that has been drafted in obedience to a resolution passed by this House at its first session, and in conjunction therewith to submit a report explanatory of the changes suggested and submitted. I am directed by the committee to say further, Mr. Speaker, that it is its purpose now simply to ask that the House shall direct this revision and report to be printed and recommitted to the committee, so that within the next few days each member of the House can be provided, whether here in the city or by having it mailed to his address at home, with a copy of the proposed revision and may thus be afforded an opportunity of examining it during the holidays. At some time after the reassembling of the House the Committee on Rules have determined to ask the House to set a day when it will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House under such restrictions as to debate as to the House may seem proper to take up and consider, at such length as it may choose, the proposition submitted by the Committee on Rules which I hold in my hand for a revision of the terms on which the legislation of this House shall be conducted.

The report I make is the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules, the several members of that committee reserving to themselves the right to offer amendments where they deem it proper upon the consideration of the report. I ask that the report and the proposed revision may be printed and recommitted.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Kentucky for information with regard to the printing of the report and of the rules as revised: whether the committee ask in the report that the rules proposed to be changed shall be printed along with the rules as revised, or whether simply the revision as reported by the committee shall be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to the gentleman from Indiana I will say that the suggestion he makes has not been adopted or recommended or asked for by the committee, for this reason: the Manual with which each member of the House is now provided shows precisely what the rules are as they stand to-day. We ask to have printed simply the proposed revision of the rules. The comparison can be made by each member, by taking the Manual of the rules as they now stand and comparing it with the proposed revision submitted by the committee.

And I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the journal clerk of the House will be able to furnish each member who will make the request of him, at his home, or in this city, or at any address he may give him, a printed copy of this revision within the next three or four days, provided the House shall order the report and proposed revision to be printed.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I understand that the Committee on the Rules——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will explain further, if the gentleman will permit me, that the report which the committee submit in conjunction with this proposed revision is simply by way of explanation. The sole object and purpose of that report is to explain to the House and to each member of it the changes made in the rules as at present by those which we now propose, and the reasons that have operated upon the committee in suggesting the proposed changes.

Mr. CALKINS. With the permission of the gentleman, I want to make this observation; because if the committee have considered that question I shall not attempt to undertake to get the House to change their report. But I had hoped that the committee would allow the rules to be printed along with the amendments which are suggested by the committee, so that at a glance each member of the House could see precisely what change is proposed or suggested to be made. The House knows that each member is now full of work. We have but little time at best to perform the duties which we are called upon to perform here. And in my judgment every moment's time that we can save would certainly be of advantage.

I only want to say one further word, and that is that each member of the House knows that the rules of the House are its life-blood, and as far as possible every member ought to understand those rules. It is for that purpose that I made the suggestion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not want the House to remain unadvised as to any action that may have been taken or any purpose that may be held by the Committee on Rules. I am very sure that the action the committee have taken in thus submitting this revision of the rules and its report, and asking to have them both printed so that they may be in the hands of members during the two or three weeks of vacation we are to have, and then its foreshadowed action asking to have this House go into Committee of the Whole and take one day or one week, or whatever time it may choose, for the fullest investigation, discussion, and interchange of opinion, will sufficiently demonstrate the fairness of purpose on the part of the committee. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] that it was not possible, in the judgment of the committee, to adopt the suggestion he has made. The rules as they now stand number one hundred and sixty-six. In the proposed revision submitted to the House those rules are cut down to forty, in round numbers, and occupy seven of the ordinary pages of proof print which I have sent to the Clerk's desk. Owing to this abbreviation, owing to the material changes made in the revision, as compared with the present system of rules, it was deemed by the committee impossible to print the rules as they stand at present, together with those now proposed by them, so as to make the one stand as an amendment or change of the other.

The Manual which each member holds to-day contains every rule which this House has adopted and which is now in force. The revision of the rules now submitted by the committee for printing contains every rule that the House will have if that report and revision shall be adopted for its government. The report which accompanies this revision of the rules explains in detail what has been done with regard to every present existing rule, whether it has been abrogated or altered, and if altered, in what respect, as well as the history of each rule itself, and the motives that have induced the committee to suggest the proposed change.

I think the House will find that, whatever judgment it shall pronounce when it comes to consider the work done and submitted to it, every opportunity has been afforded and will be afforded, and will be insisted upon by the Committee on Rules, to have the fullest, fairest, and freest discussion that we can possibly get. After the House shall have made its order upon the motion which I have submitted, I have the ordinary resolution which I desire to submit, simply to expedite the matter, directing the Public Printer to go on during the holidays and print the ordinary number of copies (which I believe is two thousand) of the Digest for the second session of this Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] if it is supposed that the ordinary number will be sufficient to answer the purpose?

Mr. BLACKBURN. When I spoke of two thousand copies as the ordinary number, I referred to the Digest for this session of Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. I am speaking of the report of the committee. I suggest whether it is not desirable that an extra number of copies of this revision be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman; and if the House shall order the proposed report and revision to be printed, as I trust it will, I hope that double the usual number will be printed.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what time he proposes to fix for taking up this report for consideration by the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to the gentleman I will say that the Committee on Rules have indicated very plainly to me, in directing me to make this report, that, after the opportunity which each member will have during these two or three weeks' vacation to examine the revision, it is the purpose of the committee, immediately upon the reassembling of Congress, to ask the House to fix a day, as soon as may be, when it will go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up and considering, at such length as it pleases, this revision.

Mr. HOOKER. As this revision proposes, as I understand, changes of the most radical character in the rules for the governance of the House, I suggest that we had better fix the day of the reassembling of Congress, and by order of the House give a preference to the consideration of this matter until the House shall have passed upon the report.

Mr. FRYE. In answer to the suggestion made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] I desire to say that the committee considered the proposition made by him; and it was found to be an utter impossibility to adopt any such proceeding. Take, for instance, the rules defining the duties of the Speaker. They run all over our present book of rules. We have taken those scattered provisions and embodied them in one rule, very much abridging the rules as now existing and changing them in many respects.

In the report which has been prepared we have pursued precisely the course that is pursued in laying out a map for the guidance of a pilot. The report contains references to every rule which has been touched by the committee, so that any boy fifteen years of age can take our present rules and the revision which we report and without the slightest difficulty can trace all the changes right through.

Mr. CALKINS. If the report of the committee will serve the purposes of comparison as well as an annotated copy of the revision, I am satisfied. In order to get a further explanation, I ask the gentleman whether or not a marginal annotation referring to each rule that has been changed would not greatly facilitate inquiry as to the changes which are proposed.

Mr. FRYE. I am satisfied that it would not. No man who reads the report would think for a moment of asking any more than the report contains. It certainly furnishes all the information that is necessary.

While on the floor, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] whether it is not better now to fix the day when we shall proceed to the consideration of these new rules. The vacation about to begin will afford ample opportunity to every member to examine critically the report and the rules which we submit to-day for the action of the House. For one I am desirous that we shall commence the consideration of these rules as soon as possible after our return. I believe that a thorough discussion of this report in Committee of the Whole, taking it up rule by rule, will give to members a better understanding of the rules than experience under the present rules would give a member after a service of four years. I hold that this discussion will serve an admirable purpose, even though you reject every rule reported, by informing us what the rules are. I would like to feel convinced to-day that the House will occupy one solid week—every day of a whole week—in considering the rules now reported. I believe that it would be a week well spent. If the gentleman from Kentucky regards the proposition favorably, I would like to have a day fixed on which the consideration of this report shall commence.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then, Mr. Speaker, unless some member of the Committee on Rules shall object, I will indicate to the House now that if it shall agree to the motion that this report and proposed revision be printed and recommitted, I will ask that the 7th day of January next (the day after the reassembling of Congress) be fixed as the day on which this report shall be taken up.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think that day is already engaged.

The SPEAKER. The 9th of January is the earliest unoccupied day except the 6th, the day on which the House will reassemble.

Mr. FRYE. We had better fix the 9th.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the 6th had better be fixed; the subject could be resumed on the 9th.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think there will hardly be a full attendance of members on the 6th.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In response to inquiries made around me I desire to state that the wish and purpose of the committee is, that when the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration and discussion of this proposed revision there shall be no impediment offered, no objection made, to any amendment that any member may see fit to offer to any rule, it being considered that we go through this report just as we do through the general appropriation bills. Thus every member will have the fullest opportunity to correct any defect that the revision may contain.

To testify the earnestness of the committee to obtain a prompt consideration of this subject, I notify the House that if the report and revision be ordered to be printed and recommitted, I will at once move that the House shall, on Tuesday the 6th day of January, the day on which Congress reassembles, take up this report for consideration, or then fix a day in its pleasure to proceed to dispose of it. I move that it shall be on the 6th day of January.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman from Kentucky let me offer this as a suggestion? If we do that, we have two difficulties in our way: first, the uncertainty of having a quorum on that first day, or rather the certainty there is we shall have but a slim attendance in the House; and, secondly, the certainty the two following days in having the consideration of this subject interrupted by business already set apart as special orders for those days. I therefore think it would be better to fix the 9th of January, the first day of open time in the House, and I ask the gentleman to say the 9th of January next, after the morning hour, and from day to day after the morning hour, to the exclusion of all other business until concluded.

A MEMBER. What day in the week is that?

Mr. WHITE. Friday.

A MEMBER. But that is private bill day.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is of more importance than private bills. Let us waive all other business after the morning hour until this has been concluded. Let us say to the exclusion of all other orders.

Mr. WHITE. Make it the 9th, then.

Mr. FRYE. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, I will say that I don't like this postponement to the 9th of January. If you set down the consideration of the revision of the rules on the first day the House meets after the recess, members will return here. It is an unjust commentary upon the fidelity of members of Congress to say that after the lapse of a three weeks' vacation they cannot get here on the day appointed for the end of that vacation. Now, I believe if you fix the consideration of the revision of the rules for the first day, members will come here. [Cries, "That is right!"]

Mr. GARFIELD. If you fix it for the first day, then for three days afterward it will be interrupted by other business to the consideration of which those days have been mortgaged.

Mr. FRYE. I take it the House will postpone the other business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that it be taken up and considered to the exclusion of all other orders until completed.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the House shall make it a special order after the morning hour, and to the exclusion of all other orders, then the difficulties I have suggested will be obviated, and I cheerfully consent.

Mr. FRYE. Let the assignment be for the 6th of January, after the morning hour, to run from day to day until disposed of, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That, I think, is the best arrangement we can make, and consequently I make that motion.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman, in order that we may have an accessible and permanent record in the future, that this report of the Committee on Rules be printed in the RECORD; that is, that it shall be printed in the RECORD as well as in other print.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to recommit the report; to that the Chair hears no objection, and the report is received and recommitted.

The gentleman from Kentucky now moves that double the number of copies usually printed of bills shall be printed of this report; and, further, that on the 6th day of January next, after the morning hour, it shall be made the special order, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; that is exactly my motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. And from day to day until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. And from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest also, Mr. Speaker, that it be printed in the RECORD as well as in the usual print.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will listen to a suggestion on my part, I think he will withdraw that request.

Mr. CONGER. Let me say this, that very often in looking for the history of a change in the rules we have easy access to the RECORD, when we could not perhaps find the document printed in the usual way. Now, this is one of the most important changes ever proposed in our rules—the most important that has occurred for many years—and I do not understand why there should be any objection to having it printed in the RECORD so we may see it, and so it may be easily accessible to members.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will bear with me for a moment I will state the objection I have to his suggestion. Now, as double the usual number of copies of the committee's report and revision is proposed to be ordered by the House to be printed for the use of members, and as this is the last day of the session of the House prior to the adjournment for the holidays, if the report and revision as submitted this morning should be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning, there would be no way to correct errors typographically or otherwise, which now remains to us in the printed copies the House orders for the use of members. Like the gentleman from Michigan, I would like to have the report and revision printed in the RECORD, but I do not see any way of providing absolutely against mistakes, if that revision is to appear in to-morrow's RECORD.

Mr. HUBBELL. Let me make a suggestion, that when the report is read in the House after the recess it will go in the RECORD as a matter of course.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I agree to the suggestion of publishing the report and revision in the RECORD on the 6th day of January.

The SPEAKER. There is no RECORD on the 6th day of January. It can be printed in the RECORD of the 7th, which will contain the proceedings of the 6th.

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, let it be published on that day in the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. I agree to that.

Mr. HUBBELL. If it is read on that day it will necessarily go into the RECORD on the next day.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee has been received, accepted, and recommitted, and the House is now asked to make it the special order for the 6th day of January, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of, to the exclusion of every other order. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

On motion of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] it is now proposed that this report shall be printed in the RECORD of the 7th of January. Is there objection to that request?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now ask, Mr. Speaker, the adoption of the usual resolution providing for the printing of two thousand copies of the Digest of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, and I will state to the House that the reason for entering that order at this time is to expedite the printing and delivery of the Manual and Rules as revised to members as soon as that revision has been perfected by the House. If that order be not made at this time, and we shall allow three weeks to intervene, and the order is not made until after the House reassembles, I am informed that such is the pressure of work at the Public Printing Office, we will not be able to get our copies of the Manual for this session before April or May next.

Mr. CONGER. Do we need any more copies of the old Manual for the use of members?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman does not understand my proposition. The printing of Jefferson's Manual will be completed by the time the House shall have done its work, whatever it may be, on this revision of the rules, and the book will be in an advanced state, so that the only object in adopting the order I propose is to hasten the completion and delivery of the Manual, with the revised rules, to the members of the House.

Mr. CONGER. It is proposed, then, to have in the Manual, which the gentleman asks us to order to be printed, whatever amendments the House may make.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir, to contain whatever revision of the rules shall be adopted by the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, the point is just this: The Digest, as it stands, is based on the rules of the House as they now are. As now printed it will be almost valueless to us if we shall adopt the new rules, because nobody could find by any of the numbers in that Digest the proper reference. There will have to be a complete reproduction of the Digest to make proper reference to opinions already settled and to the numbers of the new rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me suggest to the gentleman the object of this resolution now offered is simply to direct the Public Printer to go on with the printing of the two thousand copies. The Public Printer will only proceed to print the Constitution of the United States and Jefferson's Manual, which, of course, apply to the present and all future rules. He will only do that part of the work until the House shall have completed its revision, and then that will be all which will remain to be printed to complete the work.

Mr. WHITE. That is all right.

Mr. FRYE. One word before this matter is disposed of. There was some confusion when the gentleman made his announcement some time ago, and I simply desire to repeat that the members of the House who desire a copy of the report and the revision of the rules can have it sent wherever they direct, on leaving their names with the journal clerk, Mr. Smith.

Mr. BLACKBURN'S motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 819) to authorize the laying of a telegraphic cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island; and

An act (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC SHIP-CANAL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following committee on interoceanic ship-canal:

J. FLOYD KING, of Louisiana; JAMES W. SINGLETON, of Illinois; W. C. WHITTHORNE, of Tennessee; BENJAMIN F. MARTIN, of West Virginia; OSCAR TURNER, of Kentucky; JOHN C. NICHOLLS, of Georgia; WALDO HUTCHINS, of New York; H. F. PAGE, of California; OMAR D. CONGER, of Michigan; WILLIAM P. FRYE, of Maine, and DUDLEY C. HASKELL, of Kansas.

COMMITTEE ON YORKTOWN CELEBRATION.

The SPEAKER also announced the appointment of the following committee on the Yorktown celebration:

JOHN GOODE, of Virginia; J. G. HALL, of New Hampshire; GEORGE B. LORING, of Massachusetts; N. W. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island; JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, of Connecticut; NICHOLAS MULLER, of New York; LEWIS A. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey; SAMUEL B. DICK, of Pennsylvania; E. L. MARTIN, of Delaware; J. F. C. TALBOTT, of Maryland; JOSEPH J. DAVIS, of North Carolina; JOHN S. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, and HENRY PERSONS, of Georgia.

VACANCIES ON COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER also announced the following appointments to fill vacancies:

Hon. WALDO HUTCHINS, of New York, on the Committee on Education and Labor; and on the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. MORRISON.

Hon. C. P. BERRY, of California, on the Committee on Public Lands and on the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Hon. HORACE DAVIS, of California, on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and on the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. H. S. NEAL.

Hon. ROMUALDO PACHECO, of California, on the Committee on Private Land Claims and on the Committee on Public Expenditures.

Hon. WILLIAM G. THOMPSON, of Iowa, on the Committee on Mines and Mining and on the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Hon. HORACE F. PAGE, of California, on the Committee on Education and Labor and on the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Hon. POINDEXTER DUNN, of Arkansas, on the Committee on Public Lands, in place of Mr. STEELE, and Hon. WALTER L. STEELE, of North Carolina, on the Committee on the state of the laws respecting ascertainment and declaration of result of election of President and Vice-President, in place of Mr. DUNN, by an arrangement between the gentlemen.

Hon. JAMES B. BELFORD, of Colorado, on the Committee on Mines and Mining.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] demands the regular order.

Mr. KENNA. I ask the gentleman to yield to me that I may make a report and a request.

Mr. BRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman provided it is to cause no debate.

Mr. KENNA. No debate is required. The action I ask for will be by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I yield to the gentleman.

STEAMBOAT BILL.

Mr. KENNA. Under instructions from the Committee on Commerce I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to report at this time House bill No. 1029, known as the steamboat bill, and I ask that it be made the special order for the first Tuesday in February, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that the accompanying report be printed.

The SPEAKER. After the morning hour and from day to day thereafter until disposed of?

Mr. KENNA. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must object unless the gentleman excepts appropriation bills.

Mr. KENNA. Of course it is not expected that it is to antagonize appropriation bills. None of us desire that. I agree to the restriction suggested by the gentleman.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1029) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, was reported from the Committee on Commerce, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and recommitted and made the special order for the first Tuesday in February, 1880, after the morning hour, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

NAVIGATION OF ALLEGHENY RIVER.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby requested to inform the House, at as early a day as practicable, the manner in detail of the expenditure of the money appropriated by the Forty-fifth Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Allegheny River in the State of Pennsylvania, and of the amount which may be necessary to complete the plan of the improvements already commenced, and also the results of the survey of such river from the mouth of French Creek to Olean, New York, and of the amount necessary to improve the navigation of such river from Olean, New York, to the headwaters of the Ohio at Pittsburgh.

Mr. FIELD. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest that the gentleman yield for bills for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under obligation to recognize a number of gentlemen, and understands that the gentleman from Georgia withdraws his motion to adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do; but only for the introduction of bills for reference.

Mr. COX. The gentleman cannot make the withdrawal of his motion conditional.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If the motion is not withdrawn and the regular order is demanded, a vote must be taken on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand that the motion is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not withdraw it except conditionally, and if the regular order is demanded that vacates the condition.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 57, noes 71.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. PRICE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] will yield to let bills be introduced for reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the power to yield, the regular order being demanded. The morning hour begins at fifteen minutes past one o'clock. This being Friday, reports from committees of a private nature are in order.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 84, noes 45.

Mr. PRICE, Mr. SPRINGER, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 32; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. WILSON. Count the other side.

The other side being counted, there were noes 97.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 65, not voting 119; as follows:

Also, the petition of Eugene O. Sullivan, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 6, 1880.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and ever-living God, we bless and adore Thee as our creator, our preserver, and our most bountiful benefactor. We rejoice that Thou art on the throne, and that Thy kingdom ruleth over all. We thank Thee, O God, for Thy manifold blessings to us. Especially do we thank Thee for Thy watchful providence over us since last we met together in this Chamber, and that we are permitted to enter upon the duties and responsibilities of a new year under circumstances of great mercy.

O God, it hath seemed good unto Thee, in Thine inscrutable providence, to remove by the hand of death another member of this venerable body from the scene of his honors, his labors, and his responsibilities into the future and eternal world. We pray that our hearts may be deeply touched by this sad dispensation of Thy Providence, and that we may be reminded of our own mortality and of the necessity of being ever prepared for our departure, for we know not when we shall be called hence. We invoke Thy especial blessing to rest upon the bereaved family of the deceased Senator. Comfort them in the hour of their affliction; bind up the broken-hearted; and may this affliction be sanctified to them.

We invoke Thy blessing to rest upon our rulers, upon the President, the Vice-President, the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and upon all others in authority. May they rule in the fear of God and for the good of our common country. Watch over us during all our appointed time upon earth, choose all our changes for us, be with us in the last sad change that awaits us upon earth, and finally receive us into Thy kingdom above, we ask for Christ our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 19, 1879, was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the final report of the Hot Springs commissioners, together with schedules showing the names of the parties in whose favor awards were made, the number and valuation of lots, and a list of persons to whom certificates were issued for property condemned; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the act of June 18, 1878, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, forwarding a report from Colonel J. H. Simpson, Corps of Engineers, of a survey and examination made to estimate damages to riparian owners of lands in front of the town of Venice, Illinois, by reason of Government improvements on the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with other papers connected with the subject, the petition of Captain Joseph Conrad, Eleventh Infantry, brevet colonel United States Army, praying for the passage by Congress of a bill authorizing his retirement as of the grade of colonel; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARPENTER presented the petition of Patrick Murphy and others, soldiers in the late war, praying for an increase of pension for loss of leg above the knee or arm above or below the elbow from $24 to $30 per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Frederick Wedemeyer and 32 others, soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of a law allowing to every soldier of the United States Army who has served twenty years a pension equivalent to three-fourths of the full pay of the grade which he held at the date of his discharge; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William Coventry H. Waddell, late marshal of the United States for the southern district of New York, praying for the passage of a law granting him compensation for services rendered by him as marshal; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LOGAN presented the memorial of Thomas W. Scott and others, citizens of Wayne County, Illinois, remonstrating against the extension of the Cook patent used in the manufacture of the products of sugar-cane, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of David Swing and others, citizens of Colorado, praying for the passage of a law granting one section of land in the Ute reservation in Colorado to Susan, wife of Chief Joseph, for her kindness to the whites in the recent massacre at White River; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of George K. Wood and others, inmates at the National Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, praying that an increase of pension from $24 to $30 per month be granted to soldiers of the late war who lost a leg above the knee or an arm above or below the elbow; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOOTH presented resolutions of the land committee of the board of regents of the University of California, in favor of the passage of a law by Congress empowering that board to invest funds arising from the sale of lands from the congressional grant in United States 4 per cent. bonds; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of David Earnest and others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of the States of Illinois, Missouri, Ohio, and Kentucky, praying for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of J. W. Passmore, president of the Saint Louis and Texas Railway Company, praying for the passage of a law removing the tariff duty on steel rails; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, Missouri, in favor of an additional appropriation for the improvement of the Missouri River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a similar memorial of the Board of Trade of Kansas City, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Westphal, Hinds & Co. and others, citizens of the United States, praying the passage of a law reducing the specific duty upon sheet zinc from two and one-fourth cents to one cent per pound; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING presented the memorial of Thomas Delany and others, citizens of New York, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill (No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of owners and agents of steam and sailing vessels on the northern lakes, remonstrating against the construction of a swing-bridge across the channel of the Detroit River near the city of Detroit, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Isaac J. Covert and others, citizens of Ovid, New York, praying for the passage of a law authorizing a grant of land in Texas for the cultivation of tea and coffee and the raisin-grape by a company designated the Texas Tea Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of ship-owners of the city of New York, in favor of an amendment to the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company and others, underwriters of the city of New York, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the removal of certain obstructions in the harbor midway between Brooklyn and Governor's Island; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented resolutions of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the State of Illinois, in favor of supplying States and Territories in which bureaus of statistics may be established duplicate copies of the returns of the tenth census for the State or Territory in which such bureaus may be situated; which were referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to correct an error in the act "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) for the relief of M. M. Herr.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 819) to authorize the laying of a telegraphic cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CARPENTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 917) providing for the ascertainment of and compensation for patented inventions used in the Springfield breech-loading system by the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 934) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Coquille River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 935) making an appropriation for the improvement of the bar and entrance to Yaquinna Bay, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 936) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements at Coos Bay, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 937) appropriating $500,000 for continuing the work of constructing locks at the Cascades, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 938) authorizing the Astoria and Winnemucca Railroad Company to construct bridges across Young's Bay or River and Lewis and Clarke's River, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 939) to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 940) to amend an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 941) for the relief of the State University of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 942) releasing the title of the United States in a certain parcel of land to the assignees of John Cutler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 943) to authorize Dr. Curtis E. Price, of the United States Army, to receive the pay allowed by law for discharging the duties of physician to the Hoopa Valley Indian reservation; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 944) for the relief of John Grierson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENDLETON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 945) to transfer certain claims from the Executive Departments to the Court of Claims for adjudication; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 946) for completing the work of improving the Missouri River at and near Kansas City, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 947) fixing the compensation of United States district attorneys, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 948) limiting the compensation of clerks of the district and circuit courts when one person holds both offices; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 949) fixing compensation of United States marshals and deputies, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 950) granting arrears of pension to Nancy Eubank; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 951) to pay W. W. Walden for building destroyed by fire while occupied by United States troops; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 55) in relation to the returns of the tenth census; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of W. Webster be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

DEATH OF SENATOR HOUSTON.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making known to the Senate the death of my colleague, Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON, of Alabama, who died on the last day of the last year at his home in Athens, Alabama, in the midst of his family and his friends, honored and regretted by all the people of that State. At some other time I shall ask the Senate to consider some resolutions commemorative of the virtues of my late colleague.

At this moment of time it seems to be required of me, as a painful duty, that I should make some contradiction of a statement which was made public on the day of his burial, to the effect that he and I were not on speaking terms—a gentleman for whom I had the highest personal regard, and in whose political opinions and mine there was perfect accord upon all subjects, so far as I am aware. I had received, as I was informed by his family, his most tender and kindly expressions of regard, even up to almost the very hour of his death. He was a noble, good man, in whose friendship I did sincerely rejoice and whose respect was to me one of the greatest boons of my personal as well as my political life.

Having said this much on that part of the subject, I will now, Mr. President, move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before the Chair puts the question, he desires to state that in the recess of the Senate, assuming that his action would meet the approbation of the Senate, he appointed Mr. MORGAN, Mr. EATON, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. COKE as a committee on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of the late Senator HOUSTON in Alabama, and if his action meets the approbation of the Senate it will be noted upon the Journal. The Chair hears no objection. The question is, Will the Senate now adjourn?

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 6, 1880.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Friday, December 19, 1879, was read and approved.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on behalf of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. NICHOLLS,] asks that Ex-Chief-Justice O. A. Lochrane, of the supreme court of Georgia, be invited to a seat on the floor of the House during his stay in the city.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection to the request as to this particular gentleman; but in order to be consistent with myself, I object as a matter of principle.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the States and Territories be called for bills and joint resolutions as of Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes simply to proceed with and conclude the full call of States and Territories?

Mr. COX. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] asks unanimous consent that there may be to-day a morning hour, as of Monday, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, and that the call of States and Territories be finished, even though it should extend beyond one hour.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Is not the special order for to-day the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. That would come up in Committee of the Whole after the morning hour. Still, if the gentleman wants to reach that business it is his right to object.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour begins at twelve minutes past twelve o'clock. The call of committees for reports rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INVESTIGATION OF THE UTE OUTBREAK.

Mr. SCALES. I report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs investigate and report to the House the origin of the recent outbreak of the Utes at the White River agency, in Colorado, and to this end that said committee be authorized to send for persons and papers.

The previous question was seconded, there being—ayes 68, noes 9.

The question being taken on ordering the main question, there were—ayes 83, noes 23.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCALES and Mr. CLAFLIN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 30.

Mr. DUNNELL. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. SCALES. I doubt whether there is a quorum in the House. I see no other course than to move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman might call the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

Mr. SCALES. Very well. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that the resolution be again read.

Mr. SCALES. Before the resolution is read I hope I may be allowed to say just one word.

Mr. WHITE. If the House could have some information as to the probable cost of this investigation there might not be the opposition which is now manifested.

Mr. SCALES. If I can be allowed one moment I will make an explanation which I think will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] consent that the gentleman from North Carolina shall make an explanation?

Mr. DUNNELL. I am willing that the gentleman should make his explanation, but I do not withdraw my point.

Mr. KEIFER. We object to the gentleman's explanation unless the whole subject be opened to debate.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to object unless debate be allowed to both sides.

Mr. SCALES. I can explain this matter in a few moments. I think there is a misapprehension on the part of some members as to what we design by this resolution. It does not provide for a roving commission, but simply an investigation by the Committee on Indian Affairs in their own chamber as to the causes of the recent outbreak among the Utes. This is a very serious question, which has claimed the attention of the country; and, so far as I have read the public prints, the country demands some action on our part looking into this matter, in order that we may settle the question as to where the blame really belongs. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KEIFER. I object to further debate. I am, however, perfectly willing that there should be debate if it be made general; in fact I desire it.

Mr. SCALES. I call for the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. WILSON. What will be the cost?

Mr. SCALES. But a small amount—just the cost of some witnesses.

The House divided; and there were ayes 76; more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 141, nays 39, not voting 111; as follows:

During the vote the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, is detained at home by important business; so also is my colleague, Mr. STEELE; and my colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, on all political questions.

Mr. ROBERTSON. My colleague, Mr. GIBSON, is paired with Mr. MARSH, of Illinois.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. FINLEY, is paired with Mr. BRIGGS, of New Hampshire.

Mr. MONEY. My colleague, Mr. MULDROW, is absent by leave of the House; and my other colleague, Mr. MANNING, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. BLISS. My colleague, Mr. O'REILLY, is paired with my colleague, Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. JOHNSTON, is detained from his seat by severe illness.

Mr. DAVIDSON. My colleague, Mr. HULL, is paired with Mr. HEILMAN, of Indiana.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SPRINGER, is paired with Mr. CALKINS, of Indiana. I have been requested to announce that Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio, is paired with Mr. BRIGGS, of New Hampshire.

On motion of Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 29.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WHITE RIVER AGENCY.

Mr. SCALES also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested to transmit to this House at an early day copies of all correspondence had by letter or telegram since the 1st day of January, 1879, by N. C. Meeker, late Indian agent at the White River agency, with the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and also copies of all correspondence by letter or telegram had by Governor Pitkin, General Hatch, General Adams, and Special Agent Pollock with the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs concerning the Ute Indians in the State of Colorado.

Mr. SCALES demanded the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMANDA M. COOK.

Mr. DEERING, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1076) for the relief of Amanda M. Cook with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The bill and report will be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEERING. I prefer to have the bill considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's right.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to deduct from any annuities due or to become due to the Cheyenne or Arapahoe Indians the sum of $2,000, and pay the same to Amanda M. Cook, formerly Amanda M. Fletcher, whose mother was killed and herself captured by the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians in the Territory of Wyoming in August 1865, while en route from the State of Illinois to California.

Mr. DEERING. I ask that the report accompanying the bill may be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House bill No. 1076, for the relief of Amanda M. Cook, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

It appears from a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated February 11, 1876, and other evidence on the subject, the father of Amanda M. Cook, while en route from Henry County, Illinois, to California with his family, was, in August, 1865, attacked at or near Rock Creek, in Wyoming Territory, by hostile bands of Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians; that his property to the amount of several thousand dollars was either taken or destroyed, his wife murdered, and his two daughters taken and held as captives. Amanda M. Cook, then fourteen years of age, was held for nearly a year by those Indians, during which time she was "horribly abused and compelled to do all the drudgery of the camp, subject to frequent beatings, and suffering daily the unaccustomed privations of a wandering Indian life." The evidence proves that the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians in council admitted the charge. (See letter of Commissioner of Indian Affairs above referred to.)

It is proper to further state that in the Forty-fifth Congress a similar bill (H. R. No. 2633, for relief of the same person) was introduced, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, was favorably reported by the committee and passed both Houses of Congress, but through lack of time it failed to reach the President for his approval.

The committee, in view of the foregoing facts, and in accordance with the precedent established by action on House bill No. 1697, Forty-fifth Congress, for the relief of Catherine and Sophia Germain, report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. DEERING. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word only in regard to this bill. As will be seen by the report, this bill passed both Houses of the Forty-fifth Congress, but failed to reach the President through lack of time. The Committee on Indian Affairs are now unanimous in reporting favorable action and recommending its passage. The bill is just, and ought to pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DEERING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESTORATION TO THE ACTIVE LIST OF THE NAVY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 673) to regulate applications for restoration to the active list of the Navy.

The bill was read. It provides that all applications of officers of the Navy for restoration to the active list, or for advancement to positions on the active list, and also similar applications on the retired list, as well as pay therein, shall be made to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall thereupon order a board of officers, not below the grade of the applicant, to investigate his case and report thereon; and said report, with the recommendation thereon of the Secretary of the Navy, shall be forwarded to Congress for its action thereon. No such application shall be made except as herein provided.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to have the gentleman state the object of this bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The object of the bill is to provide that before the two Houses of Congress are called upon to act on any application for restoration to the active or retired list of the Navy the matter shall be inquired into under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy in the first instance, and that he shall report all the facts in connection with the application to Congress before any action here is had. It is done in order to economize time, and in order that all of the facts may be known by Congress in acting upon these numerous applications to be restored to one or the other of these lists in the Navy. It does economize time, and it is the belief of the committee that it will redound to the interest and efficiency of the Navy itself. The last House committee reported a similar bill, which was unanimously passed. This bill is the unanimous report of the present committee.

Mr. ACKLEN. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question? How many officers are to compose this board which is to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy? The bill, as I have understood from the reading of it, makes no provision as to the number. Is that left to the discretion of the Secretary?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir; that is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. He simply reports the facts to Congress, and this action takes away no right possessed by any officer.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC MARINE SCHOOLS.

Mr. ELAM, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 2769) to amend the act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, so as to extend it to the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Galveston.

The bill was read. It provides that the act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, be, and the same is, amended so that it shall extend to the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Galveston.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. There are four minutes of the morning hour yet remaining.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] as the morning hour is now about to expire, and as his committee cannot get much advantage from it, to allow me to report back, in obedience to instructions from the Committee on Rules, the proposed revision of the rules of the House, with amendments and report accompanying the same, which has hitherto been reported to the House and ordered to be printed and recommitted. I ask leave to report it back to the House at the expiration of the morning hour in obedience to the order of the House taken on the last day of the session, before the holidays, that I may call it up as a special order.

Mr. COX. I do not desire to urge any business of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the few minutes remaining of this hour; but I wish it to be understood that the committee does not lose any part of the two hours to which it is entitled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent of the House to vacate the four minutes remaining of the morning hour. In that way the committee will still have its privilege of reporting for two hours. The Chair supposed that the House took considerable interest in getting back the report of the Committee on Rules and hence recognized the gentleman from Kentucky.

There being no objection, the remainder of the morning hour was vacated.

Mr. STEPHENS. Do I understand that the gentleman from Kentucky embraces in his motion the printing of the report according to the understanding, so that it may appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. That was the order of the House before the adjournment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under the order of the House the report will appear in the RECORD of to-morrow.

Mr. STEPHENS. I only wanted that to be understood by the House.

NAVIGABLE WATERS OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BERRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3060) for the protection and improvement of the navigable waters of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Commerce. That committee, to which was referred a resolution presented by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] asking for information from the Treasury Department, reports back the same with a favorable recommendation.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a statement of all moneys paid into the Treasury under the act of June 7, 1872, (title 53, Revised Statutes,) since the time of its enactment by the respective United States shipping commissioners.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOUNTY-LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. HAWK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3061) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands upon which have been located bounty-land warrants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES A. BROCKMAN.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3062) granting a pension to James A. Brockman, late a private Company A, Fifteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MILITARY RESERVATIONS OF FORT ABERCROMBIE, ETC.

Mr. BENNETT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands.

ICE HARBOR AT PARKERSBURGH, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3063) to provide for the construction of an ice harbor in the Little Kanawha River at Parkersburgh, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

W. S. MAXWELL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, introduced (for Mr. ATKINS) a bill (H. R. No. 3064) to remove the political disabilities of W. S. Maxwell; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 146) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission of engineers to examine the surveys of the contemplated canal across the Isthmus of Panama; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on the Interoceanic Ship-Canal.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN also, by unanimous consent, reported back from the same committee the bill (H. R. No. 2794) to provide for the appointment of an interoceanic commission to determine the best plan and route for the establishment of communication for trade and commerce between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans across the Isthmus of Darien; and moved that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on the Interoceanic Ship-Canal.

The motion was agreed to.

TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. REAGAN also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2573) to authorize registration and protection of trade-marks; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF RULES.

Mr. DUNNELL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now report back from the Committee on Rules the revision of the rules and the accompanying report, and move that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I further move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The report was received and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the report just referred.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before that motion is put, I desire to state that neither of the members of the minority side of this House belonging to the Committee on Rules is present to-day. It is not, however, the purpose of the Committee on Rules, in proceeding to the consideration of this revision at this time, to touch any matter upon which there is or has been any difference of opinion whatever among the members of the committee. I desire simply, in obedience to the instructions of the committee, to indicate its readiness to proceed with the consideration of this matter upon such subjects and points as there is likely to be no division of opinion upon.

I take it that the report will have to be read when we come to consider this subject in Committee of the Whole. Then if it be the pleasure of the committee at any time, in consequence of the absence of the members of the minority, to discontinue the consideration of the report, I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to say that it will also be its pleasure to stop whenever that point shall be reached.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] if it is his purpose at this time to fix a limitation of the general debate upon this report? How is this debate to proceed? Is there to be a time for general debate?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I take it it will be the pleasure of the House to have some limitation put on the debate. It is certainly the purpose of the committee to accommodate itself in all regards, in the motions it may submit, to the pleasure of the House. But I should judge that the five-minute rule will apply to the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole upon this matter. And so far as the members of the committee may find it necessary to make explanations of any portions of the report submitted by it, they will have to take their chance. I doubt whether it will be found necessary for any one member to occupy more than five minutes' time upon any one point that may be raised. Unless the House shall indicate a different wish, I do not know but what it would be well, in order to test the sense of the House, to move that the five-minute rule shall apply to the consideration of this report in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope no such order will now be made. There is a very grave matter to be acted upon contained in this report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will only indicate any time that will be satisfactory——

Mr. DUNNELL. I had supposed the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] would indicate the length of time to be consumed in general debate. I am myself very well satisfied that there are rules which have been reported favorably upon by the Committee on Rules that cannot be fully and fairly discussed under the five-minute rule. I think it would be unfair to confine any man in the presentation of his views upon even a single rule to five minutes. I only desired that the gentleman would indicate the mode or manner in which he proposed to conduct the consideration of this subject.

Mr. STEPHENS. I trust the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will let us go into Committee of the Whole, for the discussion of these rules without any limitation as to time, until the House shall have become satisfied with the general discussion.

The SPEAKER. The committee can at any time rise and obtain an order from the House upon that point.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to agree to that.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am for the most unrestricted and unlimited discussion of this subject. Let us go into Committee of the Whole, and leave the question of limitation of debate to be determined hereafter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the House that I am sure it is the pleasure of the Committee on Rules that any amount of time the House may desire shall be taken for the discussion of this proposed revision. I do not, myself, think it would be well to fix the time for general discussion arbitrarily in advance. I at least prefer, and I am sure the other members of the committee do, that the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole and take one day or one week, if it pleases, for general discussion; and that whenever the time shall have been satisfactorily employed in general discussion which may be desired, then the committee can rise and go back into the House and obtain its order for the application of the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman to make any motion for the limitation of debate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALKINS. Before that motion is put, I desire to ask the Clerk——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will submit the request to the Chair, the Chair will make the inquiry of the Clerk.

Mr. CALKINS. Very well, I will ask the Chair to inquire of the Clerk whether or not, in the original motion submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] before the holiday recess, it was not provided that the discussion of these rules should proceed in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can answer that question; it was not so provided. The gentleman will see at once that the present occupant of the chair would desire to be upon the floor when these rules were discussed, and such an order as he indicates might render that difficult.

Mr. CALKINS. That need not prevent it, for the Chair could call anybody else to preside.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the report made by the Committee on Rules, which report the Clerk will now proceed to read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it not first in order that the business upon the Calendar preceding the report shall be set aside in order to reach the report?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the order of the House to have been to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this report, which report was made the special order for to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I beg pardon of the Chair; that was not part of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] His motion was simply to go into Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair, who was not in the House when the first order was made, is informed that this subject was made a special order for to-day to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. STEPHENS. And from day to day.

The CHAIRMAN. And from day to day until completed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I propose that by unanimous consent we dispense with the reading of this long report, which is upon the desk of every member. We know that the reading of reports in this way gives very little information, because so few members listen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. BARBER. I object.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report; but was interrupted by

Mr. BARBER, who said: I withdraw my objection to dispensing with the reading.

There being no further objection, the reading of the report was dispensed with.

The report, which on the 19th of December last was ordered to be printed in the RECORD of to-day, is as follows:

The Committee on Rules, in pursuance of the resolution of the 25th of June ultimo, authorizing them to sit during the then coming recess "for the purpose of revising, codifying, and simplifying the rules of the House," ask leave to submit the following report:

The urgent necessity of a thorough revision of the rules of the House cannot be better illustrated and shown than by the simple statement of the fact that of the present one hundred and sixty-six rules sixty-three of that number, or portions thereof, were adopted prior to the year 1800, and that in the only revision and rearrangement of the rules ever made since that time at all approaching thoroughness, not less than thirty rules which were practically obsolete, in whole or in part, were allowed to remain among the standing rules of the House of Representatives.

In view of this fact, the committee decided that a complete revision and codification of the rules was not only a parliamentary but a practical business necessity, demanded both by the gradual change in parliamentary law and practice which has taken place since Jefferson's Manual was the standard recognized American authority, and by reason of the increased representation in the House, and the very large increase of business transacted, which can be best illustrated by the statement of the fact that in the Sixth Congress, which convened December 2, 1799, and expired March 3, 1801, with sixteen (16) States in the Union, having one hundred and forty-one (141) Representatives in the House, (one for every 33,000 inhabitants,) there were 298 bills introduced and reported and 347 petitions presented, while in the Forty-fifth Congress, which convened October 15, 1877, and expired March 3, 1879, with thirty-eight (38) States in the Union, having two hundred and ninety-three (293) Representatives in the House, (one for every 133,000 inhabitants,) there were 6,579 bills introduced and reported and 10,467 petitions presented.

The committee determined at the very threshold of their labors—it being, indeed, the first conclusion reached by them—that their reported revision should be the unanimous action and agreement of the committee, leaving intact only such rules as the committee could not agree unanimously to adopt or amend, reserving, however, to each member of the committee the right, individually, to offer such amendments as he might, on further consideration of the subject, deem proper or desirable; and the accompanying proposed code of standing rules for conducting business in the House of Representatives is, therefore, the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules. In submitting the same, it is proper to remark that the rights and privileges of the political minority of the House have in no respect been restricted or abridged therein, and that political or partisan considerations never entered into or disturbed its deliberations, or once divided the committee in respect to a single item or paragraph. The objective point with the committee was to secure accuracy in business, economy of time, order, uniformity, and impartiality, and to prepare, if possible, a simple, concise, and non-partisan code of rules, which should neither surrender the right of a majority to control and dispose of the business for which it is held responsible, or, on the other hand, to invade and restrict the powers of a minority to check temporarily, if not permanently, the action of a majority believed to be improper or unconstitutional, and to attain, if possible, the great underlying principle of all the rules and forms by which the business of a legislative assembly is governed, whether constitutional, legal, or parliamentary in their origin, namely, "to subserve the will of the assembly rather than to restrain it, to facilitate and not to obstruct the expression of its deliberate sense."

As a second conclusion the committee decided to arrange the proposed rules in such order as would make their connection and subject correspond, as nearly as practicable, consolidating in one rule the various provisions relating to the same subject, now embraced in several rules scattered about without regard to uniformity or system; and the order in which they have been arranged is as follows, namely:

1. Duties of the Speaker;
2. Election of officers;
3. Duties of the Clerk;
4. Duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms;
5. Duties of Doorkeeper;
6. Duties of Postmaster;
7. Duties of Chaplain;
8. Of the members;
9. Questions of privilege;
10. Of committees;
11. Powers and duties of committees;
12. Delegates;
13. Calendars;
14. Decorum and debate;
15. Calls of the roll and House;
16. On motions—their precedence;
17. Previous question;
18. Reconsiderations;
19. Of amendments;
20. Of amendments of the Senate;
21. On bills;
22. Of petitions and memorials;
23. Of Committees of the Whole House;
24. Order of business;
25. Miscellaneous rules.

As a necessary sequence of this action the next conclusion of the committee was that each distinctive subject should, so far as practicable, be disposed of in one rule, with subdivisions in the nature of clauses, to be numbered, respectively, 1, 2, 3, &c., the rule itself being designated by Roman numerals, as, for instance, "Clause 1, Rule V, or Clause 5, Rule III," and so known and described in the proceedings of the House, thereby preserving that feature of the rules which treats each item of the general appropriation and tariff bills as clauses, and also the principle of Rule 46 relating to division of a question, which may be briefly stated as follows, namely: that a question may be divided upon the demand of any member whenever it shall comprehend propositions in substance so distinct that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain for the decision of the House. This plan has enabled the committee to reduce the rules from 166, their present number, to 45, without, it is believed, in the slightest degree sacrificing the qualities of clearness and conciseness, to secure so large a reduction of quantity or volume, and will enable members to readily refer, not only to a particular provision of any rule, but to everything connected directly with the matter sought for.

With this preliminary statement of the general plan on which the committee proceeded, the disposition made in the revision reported, of each of the present rules of the House, will now be given, with such explanation as may be deemed necessary and proper.

TOUCHING THE DUTY OF THE SPEAKER.

Under the head of "Touching the duty of the Speaker" are now grouped nine rules, which are consolidated into and appear as Rule I in the revision, as follows, namely:

Rule 1, as clause 1.
Rule 2, as clauses 2 and 4.
Rule 3, as first part of clause 5.
Rule 4, as last part of clause 5.
Rule 5 incorporated in clauses 1, 3, and 7.
Rule 6 is incorporated with Rule 155, and, as amended, transferred to the rules under the head of "Miscellaneous," and appears as Rule XXIII.
Rule 7 appears as clause 6.
Rule 8 is divided, the first portion of the same appearing as clause 4, new Rule I, and the last portion transferred to and appearing in clause 3, new Rule III.
Rule 9 appears as clause 2.

No substantial or important changes have been made in these rules. They have simply been abbreviated, rearranged, and consolidated.

OF THE CLERK AND OTHER OFFICERS.

Under this head are grouped rules from 10 to 28, inclusive, providing for the election and prescribing the duties of the various officers of the House. These have been reduced to four in number, and appear as follows, namely:

Rule 10, which provides for the election of a Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster, has been retained with amendments, one striking out the word "appointed" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "chosen," another inserting the word "Chaplain," who has hitherto been elected as a matter of custom, which the committee deem proper to crystallize into a rule, and a third striking out the words "and the appointees of the Doorkeeper and Postmaster shall be subject to the approval of the Speaker." Whatever may have been the occasion of this provision it has long been obsolete, and for that reason the committee recommend that it be dropped. A clause is also added authorizing each of the above-named officers to appoint all of the employés of his department provided for by law, there being no provision either of law or rule in this respect. Relating as it does directly to the organization of the House, the rule has been adopted by the committee as Rule II.

Rule 11 has been dropped, being both obsolete and unnecessary.
Rule 12 has been retained intact and transferred under the head of "Miscellaneous" rules. It there appears as Rule XL.
Rules 13 and 19 appear as clause 2, Rule III.
Rules 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 21, as clause 3, Rule III.
Rule 20 has been dropped, the subject-matter being provided for by law. (See act of June 20, 1874, which imposes on the Secretary of State the duty of preparing an index to the acts passed each session.)
Rule 22 appears in clause 1, Rule IV.
Rule 23 appears as clause 2, same rule.
Rule 24 is dropped, for the reason that by the act of June 20, 1874, Revised Statutes, section 53, it is provided that the Sergeant-at-Arms shall receive, directly or indirectly, no fees, other compensation, or emolument whatsoever, for performing the duties of his office or in connection therewith.
Rule 25 is incorporated in new Rule IV, and appears as last part of clause 1.
Rule 26, as amended, appears as clause 3, Rule IV. The principal changes made are: first, the amendment requiring the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend in person the House during its sittings; second, the amendment increasing his bond from ten, the present limit, to fifty thousand dollars; third, the amendment making him and his bondsmen responsible for the moneys received by him for disbursement of expenses of select committees; and, fourth, the amendment providing that no member of Congress shall be accepted as bondsman.
Rule 27 appears as new Rule V, with the addition of Rule 166, as the duties prescribed therein more properly belong to the Doorkeeper, and have been so transferred.
Rule 28 appears as Rule VI, with the additional requirement that the Postmaster shall be held responsible for the safe delivery of mail to members, officers, and employés of the House.
An additional rule has been created, numbered VII, requiring the Chaplain to attend at the commencement of each day's session, and open the same with prayer.

OF THE MEMBERS.

Under this head are grouped rules from 29 to 33, inclusive. These have been consolidated, save one, and appear, as amended, as new Rule VIII, as follows:

Rules 29, 30, 31, and 33 have been substantially incorporated in the proposed Rule VIII, clause 1.
Rule 32 has been transferred, and appears in clause 1, Rule XXII.

The principal changes made under this head are as follows:

First. The committee propose a second call of the roll, when the names of those not voting on the first are again called over, and after that is completed no member shall be allowed to vote;

Second. That no member outside the railing inclosing the seats shall be counted; and Third. That pairs shall not hereafter be announced by members, but that after the completion of the second roll-call the Clerk shall read a list of pairs handed him by members, which list shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following the names of those not voting, which last provision appears as clause 2, Rule VIII.

The committee believe that these changes will not only greatly facilitate the calling of the roll, which now occupies half an hour, but that it will insure greater accuracy, a matter of the first importance when the House is closely divided politically.

OF CALLS OF THE HOUSE.

Under this head appear Rules 34 to 37, inclusive. These have been consolidated into one rule and numbered XV, and appear as follows, namely:

Rule 34 appears as clause 2.
Rule 35, as clause 1.
Rule 36, as clause 2.
Rule 37, as the last part of clause 2.

The principal changes herein made provide for a second call of the roll, and drop what may be termed the penalty system for absenteeism. Sections 40 and 41 of the Revised Statutes provide for a deduction of pay of a member for absence without leave, and section 53 provides that the Sergeant-at-Arms shall receive no fees whatever for performing the duties of his office or in connection therewith. The rule has been for many years a dead letter, and for that reason the committee recommend that it be dropped entirely.

ON MOTIONS, THEIR PRECEDENCE, ETC.

Under the above head are Rules 38 to 50, inclusive. The committee consolidated these into one rule, numbered XVI, composed of eight clauses.

Rule 38 appears in clauses 1 and 2.
Rule 39 appears in the same clauses.
Rule 40, as clause 2.
Rule 41, as clause 3.
Rule 42, as clause 4.
Rule 43 has been transferred to another rule, and appears as clause 2, Rule XIII.
Rule 44, as clause 5.
Rule 45, as the last part of clause 5.
Rule 46, as clauses 6 and 7, Rule XVI.
Rule 47 has been dropped as both obsolete and unnecessary, being otherwise provided for in the present and proposed rules.

Rule 48. The last portion of Rule 48, to wit: "No bill or resolution shall, at any time, be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith any other bill or resolution pending before the House," was adopted September 15, 1837, (first session Twenty-fifth Congress.) As then reported by the Committee on Rules it contained, after the word resolution where it occurs the second time, the words "the substance of." These words were stricken out by a close vote, and the practice of the House has since permitted the substance of any bill or resolution pending before the House to be offered as an amendment or substitute for the pending proposition.

The committee believe the correct principle to be the proposition reported by the Committee on Rules in the Twenty-fifth Congress, excluding an amendment which contained the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House. The rules and practice of the House of Commons, from which this proposition was substantially taken, restricted the right of substituting one subject for another to motions for reading (that is, of proceeding to the consideration of) the orders of the day, thus giving the House an opportunity to select the particular subject it would first consider, and preventing the practical inconvenience that would result from public business being obstructed by substantive motions which had no connection with the orders of the day. Under the present rule "a bill or resolution pending before the House" may be moved as an amendment to a pending proposition, if germane, by simply changing a word or two in no sense important or material, thereby accomplishing indirectly what the rules prohibit doing directly; a species of parliamentary legerdemain that certainly ought not to be countenanced or permitted by a rule.

Rule 49 has been retained substantially intact. A proviso has been added that a motion to reconsider made during the last six days of a session shall be disposed of when made, thus placing it beyond the power of a single member, voting with the prevailing side for the purpose of placing himself in a situation to make the motion, to arrest business which a majority have decided to dispatch.

Rule 50 has been dropped as unnecessary, being otherwise provided for by way of amendment.

The principal changes recommended by the committee with respect to the foregoing rules are as follows:

First. The order of motions has been changed by making the motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn first in order, thereby conforming to the practice of the House since the Twenty-ninth Congress, by the addition of a motion for a recess next in order to a motion to adjourn, and by making the demand for the previous question non-debatable, which is a transfer of the first clause of Rule 133.

The order of reference of a subject has been changed so as to provide that the question of reference of any proposition offered by a member shall be put first to a standing committee and second to a select committee, while the order of reference of a proposition reported by a committee shall be put in the same order as now provided in Rule 43.

This change will secure the preliminary consideration by a standing or select committee of the House of all matters of proposed legislation, as provided in the first paragraph of Rule XI.

The hour of actual adjournment is hereafter to be entered on the Journal instead of the hour at which the motion is made, thus preventing the anomaly of the Journal stating a motion of adjournment at, say, three p. m., while proceedings might be (and indeed have been) had, delaying actual adjournment for two hours.

ORDER OF BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

Under this head now appear rules from 51 to 56, inclusive, while another rule, 130, which properly belongs to this subject, appears under another head. The above rules have been grouped and consolidated into one, and appear in the revision as Rule XXIV, as follows, namely:

Rule 51, providing for and regulating the call of committees, appears as clause 2, or so much thereof as is essential to the plan proposed by the committee, hereafter explained.

Rule 52 is substantially provided for by the last paragraph of clause 2, the contingency therein provided for being rare, and at best of doubtful propriety as a matter of practice.

Rule 53 has been dropped, being otherwise provided for in clause 1.

Rule 54, regulating the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, is embraced in clause 5, without substantial change.

Rule 55 is dropped, being otherwise provided for by present Rule 145 and proposed Rule XXVIII.

Rule 56 appears as clause 4, without change, except that it is slightly condensed.

The present order of business, under the practice, has become somewhat cumbrous, and, besides possessing an element of uncertainty as to the time of transacting the business therein provided for, is in some respects so incongruous as to lead to confusion, and in some instances to errors, as to the exact status of business.

In the revision submitted by the committee it is proposed to have a daily call of all the committees, all business reported, save that to which no objection is made to its "present consideration," to go to the Committee of the Whole House, whether public or private, and to a House Calendar composed only of bills not making appropriations of money.

This plan secures two desirable objects, namely:

1st. The printing of all bills and accompanying reports, thus giving time for their examination by members before consideration; and

2d. Saves unnecessary waste of time in preventing, by what is known as "filibustering" in the morning hour, the consideration of a bill reported by a committee, thus blocking the way against reports from other committees to which little or no objection would be made.

Numerous instances might be cited, during the past few years, where the "morning hour" has been consumed by dilatory motions for days, and even weeks, thus making it possible at the close of a session to defeat action on an important bill, which could only be reported by unanimous consent or by a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote, which vote might not be obtained.

The change made as to the time of disposing of business on the Speaker's table so as to immediately follow the disposition of the unfinished business pending at the last adjournment is really not a departure from the present rule and practice as to that class of business, but rather a transfer of the unfinished business from its present rank of being first in order after the reading of the Journal to follow the call of committees, which plan the committee believe will be found more satisfactory than the present practice.

The committee then provide that after unfinished business—if there be any—and business on the Speaker's table is disposed of, motions shall then be in order as follows, namely:

1st. To go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration, first, of bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then to other business on its Calendar.

2d. To proceed to the consideration of the House Calendar of public bills not appropriating money or raising revenue.

3d. On Friday, after the morning hour, a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The committee believe this plan will be found more satisfactory than the present order of business, as it gives precedence in each day's sitting of the House and Committee of the Whole House to business of a necessary public character, and enables the committees to promptly report on all matters which they have matured or agreed upon.

OF DECORUM AND DEBATE.

Under this head are rules from 57 to 66, inclusive, which have been consolidated into one, (No. XIV,) and are disposed of as follows, namely:

Rule 57 appears as clause 1.

Rule 58, as the last part of clause 1.

Rule 59, as the first part of clause 2.

Rule 60, as clauses 2 and 3 of Rule XIV, and clauses 5 and 6 of new Rule XXIII.

Rule 61, as clause 4, Rule XIV.

Rule 62, as clause 5.

Rule 63, as clause 6.

Rule 64 has been dropped as obsolete.

Rule 65 appears as clause 7.

Rule 66 has been retained with a slight amendment making the rule more definite, and appears as Rule XXV.

There have been few changes of importance made in this group of rules. They have been greatly condensed as well as simplified, and have been adapted to the later practice of the House, which, by reason of the greatly increased representation, as well as amount of business transacted, is essentially different from that in vogue when most of these rules were adopted. It was not until 1847 that the House took a decided step toward abridging or restricting debate, the representation having increased from 141 in 1800 to 223 in 1847, and from that time the tendency has been, without exception, to restrict rather than to enlarge or extend the limits of debate, and this remark applies also to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

On the 19th of March, 1860, the House adopted an amendment providing that debate might be closed at any time after the five minutes debate on proposed amendments had taken place, thus enabling a majority to get a bill out of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, after a reasonable time had been occupied in debating amendments. This was adopted at the same time with an amendment to the present one hundred and twenty-third rule, the effect of which was to prevent a practice of doubtful propriety, by which the friends of a bill were in the habit of taking it out of the Committee of the Whole by adopting a recommendation to strike out the enacting clause without permitting either debate or amendment, and upon reaching the House to disagree to the said recommendation, and then, under the operation of the previous question, passing the bill. The main provisions of the present rule have been retained, with slight modifications.

OF COMMITTEES.

Under the subhead "Of committees," commencing with Rule 67 and ending with Rule 103, are thirty-seven rules, while under the head of "Miscellaneous" are seven rules, numbered, respectively, 148, 150, 151, 152, 153, 156, and 160, prescribing the duties of committees created since January 21, 1864, save one rule, (151,) which further prescribes the duties of the Committee of Ways and Means.

All these rules are consolidated and combined in two, numbered, respectively, X and XI, which embrace and cover all the matters of powers and duties of the several standing and joint committees of the House, as will hereafter appear in detail. The titles of the several committees have been made uniform, all being in the revision submitted "Committee on," four of the present titles being "Committee of," namely: Elections, Ways and Means, Claims, and Accounts, and one being "Committee for the District of Columbia."

The arrangement or order of call of committees is also slightly changed, the proposed order being arranged with general reference to the amount, character, and importance of the business referred to or reported by the several committees, preference being given to those committees having exclusively the consideration of public business. The position of a committee in regard to the call of committees is, however, under the plan submitted in the new rule, which contemplates a daily call of all the committees, a matter of but slight importance. All business, except that to the consideration of which there is no objection, when reported, is to be referred to a calendar or to the Committee of the Whole House, all committees thus being placed on an absolute equality, save that the Committees of Elections, Ways and Means, Appropriations, Printing, Accounts, and Enrolled Bills shall have the right to report at any time, as provided in clause 47 of Rule XI.

Rule 67, as originally adopted April 17, 1789, directed that the Speaker should appoint all the committees, except in cases where they consisted of more than three members, in which case they were chosen by ballot. On the 13th of January, 1790, it was changed to its present form, though the method of selecting committees therein prescribed has not been resorted to for many years past, it having been the practice until the Thirty-sixth Congress for the House to adopt an order "that the Speaker be authorized to appoint the regular standing committees."

The Committee on Rules have accepted the latter practice of the House, and in the first clause of Rule X provide for the appointment by the Speaker, at the commencement of each Congress, of the standing committees of the House, unless otherwise specially ordered by the House.

Rule 68 has been left intact, and appears as clause 3, Rule X.

Rules 69, 70, 71, and 72 have been dropped, for the reason that they are either obsolete by long practice, unnecessary, or otherwise provided for.

Rule 73 is incorporated in Rule X, and appears as clause 4.

Rule 74 is also incorporated in Rule X, and appears in clause 1.

Rule 75 appears as clause 1, Rule XI.

Rules 76 and 77, which prescribe and define the duties and powers of the Committee on Appropriations, are consolidated, and appear as clause 3, Rule XI. It is believed that the same fully embraces and comprehends all that is essential in the two rules named. The last portion of Rule 76, relating to appropriations to carry into effect treaties, is dropped as unnecessary, as providing for an extraordinary contingency, which can be best provided for by special action when the occasion should arise. The first clause of Rule 77 is dropped for the reason that it has been obsolete for the last twenty years, and the time of reporting the general appropriation bills may properly be left to the discretion of the committee, which may be instructed by the House in that regard should occasion arise therefor.

The second clause of the same rule has been dropped, (for the reason that the titles of the general appropriation bills are fixed by law, see Revised Statutes, section 11,) except the concluding portion, giving the committee the right to report for commitment at any time. The last clause of the same rule is dropped for the reason that it is a detail which ought properly to be left to the discretion of the committee.

Rule 78 appears as clause 27, Rule XI, and has been made more definite.

Rule 79 appears as clause 7 of Rule XI, with the additional provision that the Committee on Commerce shall mature and report the bill known as the "river and harbor bill" for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The committee deem it proper to present fully the reasons which influenced them to make this recommendation, but will do so as concisely as possible.

The "river and harbor" appropriation bill, although not one of the "general appropriation" bills, (see Rule 77,) has for many years past been one of the regular annual appropriation bills, and has been usually reported by the Committee on Commerce. Prior to and during the late war the Committee of Ways and Means reported all the general appropriation bills. On the 2d of March, 1865, (second session, Thirty-eighth Congress,) the Committee on Appropriations was created, and by Rules 76 and 77 their powers and duties were prescribed.

The authority of the Committee of Ways and Means to report a general appropriation bill at any time, conferred on the 19th of March, 1860, was transferred to the Committee on Appropriations at the time the committee was created, and the latter committee was also clothed with all the powers and privileges with respect to general appropriation bills possessed by the former. Up to that time no general river and harbor appropriation bill had ever been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, although it had reported in a sporadic way bills for the repair, preservation, completion, or construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors.

In the Fortieth Congress, as appears from the statement of Mr. DAWES, on the 8th of February, 1873, (third session, Forty-second Congress,) the Committee on Appropriations, being busily engaged with other matters, permitted the Committee on Commerce to originate and report the river and harbor appropriation bill, and, by an arrangement made in a conference between Mr. DAWES, representing the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Commerce, the latter committee was permitted to prepare and report the said bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations, which committee agreed, after consideration, to report it back to the House with such recommendations as they believed the general expenditures of the country required them to make, and that course has several times been pursued since that agreement, although it is true that during the preceding two Congresses (Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth) the Committee on Commerce has exclusively had control and charge of the river and harbor bill.

The Committee on Rules are of opinion, in consideration of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations are required under the rules "to report the general appropriation bills," (in which class the river and harbor appropriation bill should, by reason of long custom and practice, be included,) that they should have entire charge of all those bills, in order that they might the more fairly and fully control the entire question of appropriation of revenue for carrying on the several departments of the Government. It follows as a logical sequence that, if any other committee is to take charge of one of the general appropriation bills, the interests therein involved and considered will stand separate and apart from the interests involved and considered in the other bills, and as a further result any scheme of reduction of expenditures made necessary by a deficit of revenue for that fiscal year must be executed by the Committee on Appropriations without respect to the interests involved in the bill so taken from them, thereby leaving that particular interest to stand independent of and without any relation whatever to the other interests for which appropriations are annually made.

For these reasons the Committee on Rules have made the foregoing recommendations with respect to the river and harbor bill, believing that no good or valid reason exists why the Committee on Commerce should originate and have complete control of the river and harbor bill that does not apply with equal force to the theory that the Committee on Military Affairs should originate and control the Army, the Committee on Naval Affairs the naval, the Committee on Indian Affairs the Indian, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the Post-Office, the Committee on Foreign Affairs the consular and diplomatic, or the Committee on Invalid Pensions the pension appropriation bill.

Rule 80 appears as clause 13, Rule XI.

Rule 81, as clause 12.

Rule 82, as clause 30.

It will be noted that the committee propose to abolish what is generally known as "District of Columbia day," namely, the third Monday of each month from the hour of two o'clock p. m., and place the Committee on the District of Columbia on precisely the same footing as other committees. The purpose of the Committee on Rules was to secure as complete uniformity and equality among the committees as was possible, giving preference only to revenue and general appropriation bills and to necessary business—such, for instance, as printing for the use of the House or two Houses, perfection of legislation by permitting the Committee on Enrolled Bills to report at any time, and also giving the same privilege to the Committee on Accounts, which is proper, as directly concerning and affecting the autonomy of the House. The committee are of opinion that the proposed abolition of "District of Columbia day" will not result in the least degree to the prejudice of the interests of the District or obstruct or retard the business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. It simply gives that committee the same opportunity to reach business reported by it that it affords all the committees, and instead of having only a part of one day in each month, as at present, it will by this plan have a chance to reach its business on at least four days out of a "possible five."

Rule 83, as clause 4.

Rule 84, as clause 28.

Rule 85 has been dropped entirely, for the reason that the committees on expenditures in the several Departments are separately required to do with the accounts and expenditures of each Department what the Committee on Public Expenditures is required to do with all. It follows, of course, without argument, that the last-named committee cannot "examine into the state of the several public Departments" as thoroughly as a committee appointed specially and solely to examine into the "accounts and expenditures" of a particular Department, and for this reason, as well as to avoid unnecessary labor as well as possible conflict of authority, the committee recommend that after the present Congress the said committee shall not be again appointed.

Rule 86 appears as clause 29.

Rule 87, as clause 10.

Rule 88, as clause 23.

Rule 89, as clause 11.

Rule 90, as clause 9.

Rule 91, as clause 15.

Rule 92 has been changed by dropping the title of Revolutionary Pensions, and creating in lieu thereof the Committee on Pensions, and giving it jurisdiction of pensions of all the wars of the United States other than of the late civil war. It appears as clause 26.

Rule 93 appears as clause 25.

Rule 94, as clause 16.

Rule 95, as clause 24.

Rule 96, as clause 19.

Rule 97, which formerly prescribed the duty of the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, was virtually rescinded by the resolution of July 25, 1868, abolishing the said committee and creating the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The first-named committee was created by resolution of December 14, 1795, (second session, Third Congress,) as follows, namely:

"It shall be the duty of the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business to examine and report what laws have expired or are near expiring and require to be revised or further continued; also to examine and report from the Journal of last session all such matters as were then depending and undetermined."

On the 25th of July, 1868, (second session, Fortieth Congress,) Mr. Elihu B. Washburne, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, namely:

"Resolved, That the rules be amended so as to provide for the appointment, at the commencement of the next session, and at the commencement of each Congress thereafter, of a standing committee on the revision of the laws, to consist of nine members, and that so much of the rules as provides for a committee of revisal and unfinished business is hereby rescinded."

This rule was adopted without division.

This change was made in anticipation of the report to Congress of the commissioners appointed under the act of June 27, 1866, "to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, which shall be in force at the time such commissioners shall make the final report of their doings."

By the act of May 4, 1870, the above-named act was revived and extended for three years, and was again extended by the act of March 3, 1873; and under authority of the last-named act Mr. Butler, from the joint committee appointed thereunder to provide for the preparation and presentation to Congress of the revision of the laws of the United States, on the 11th of December, 1873, (first session, Forty-third Congress,) submitted a printed report, which was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

That committee, on the 14th of January, 1874, by Mr. Poland, its chairman, submitted a report, which was considered from day to day until April 2, 1874, which finally became a law on the 22d of June, 1874.

It was the evident purpose of the Committee on Rules which reported the resolution of July 25, 1868, abolishing the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business and creating the Committee on Revision of the Laws, to restrict that committee to take charge of and report upon such revisions and compilations of the laws as did not require changes in jurisprudence.

At the time the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business was created there were but two standing committees of the House, namely, Claims and Commerce, the practice then being to create select committees, to whom were referred the President's messages and such general subjects of legislation as might be proposed from time to time. From January 7, 1802, (first session, Seventh Congress,) the date of the appointment of the Committee of Ways and Means as a standing committee, to the present time, additional standing committees have been created, until there are now forty-five standing committees, whose duties and powers are specifically described and defined, and which embrace and cover all the duties imposed on the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business.

The resolution which created the committee does not designate or specify its duties, indeed none whatever were prescribed, but its title was supposed to sufficiently define the same, especially as the commission appointed under the act of June 27, 1866, was expected to report during the following Congress.

It may further be added that the rule prescribing the duties and defining the powers of the Committee on the Judiciary would, under the well-known rule of law that the specification of one power excludes another, exclude the claim of any other committee to jurisdiction of any "matters or things touching judicial proceedings."

For these reasons the committee recommend that the duties of that committee be limited to the revision and codification of the Statutes of the United States, the duty of the Committee on the Judiciary being to consider "subjects relating to judicial proceedings, civil and criminal law."

Rule 98 appears as clause 42.

Rule 99, as clause 43.

Rule 100, as clause 45.

Rule 101 has been modified, the first clause being retained for manifest reasons, the Committee on Enrolled Bills having nothing but completed legislation to report, and the right of the Committee on Printing to report at any time being confined to printing for the use of the House or the two Houses by a subsequent rule.

Rule 102 has been incorporated in Rule XI, and appears as clauses 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39.

Rule 103, which prescribes and defines the duties of the committees named in the preceding rule, appears as clause 32, Rule XI, and is believed to therein embrace and cover all the essential points of the old rule.

OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE.

Under this head are grouped Rules 104 to 114, inclusive, which have been consolidated into one rule, and appear as Rule XXIII.

Rule 104 has been dropped, being substantially provided for in clause 6, Rule XXIV, and clause 3, Rule XXIII. The first part of this rule is inconsistent with the present rule providing that the morning hour shall only be dispensed with by a two-thirds vote.

Rule 105 appears as clause 1.

Rule 106, as clause 2.

Rule 107 has been dropped as obsolete. It was adopted in 1789, at a time when all bills were in manuscript, and not printed as at present.

Rules 108 and 109 have also been dropped as obsolete, and being otherwise provided for.

Rule 110 appears in clause 3.

Rule 111 has been dropped as obsolete and unnecessary.

Rule 112 appears in clause 3, with the addition of the words, "or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property," which is designed to cover a class of legislation hitherto not required to be first considered in the Committee of the Whole House.

Rule 113 appears as clause 8, with the exception of the last portion relating to debate, which has been dropped.

Rule 114 appears as clause 4, in connection with Rule 129, which has been consolidated with it.

The committee propose that when a bill is reached on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and objection is made to its consideration, the House shall decide whether or not the bill shall be passed over, instead of the committee deciding that question, as the rule now provides. When a bill is reported from a standing or select committee of the House and committed to the Committee of the Whole House, it is thereby given a position on the Calendar entitling it to precedence over business reported later by other committees, and ought not to be displaced therefrom except by the House which fixed that position. Such, indeed, is the rule of the House now, as will appear by reference to Rule 116, which requires that all "bills shall be dispatched in order as they were introduced, unless where the House shall direct otherwise."

The committee believe that this change will expedite business, save the large amount of time now wasted in struggles to secure precedence of a particular bill, and give to the friends of each bill on the Calendar an opportunity to test the sense of the House as to whether or not it shall be taken up for consideration in its order. The committee cannot better illustrate the importance of securing a uniformity of proceeding in business than by quoting what Mr. Jefferson says on this point, namely: "A settled order of business is, however, necessary for the government of the presiding officer and to restrain individual members from calling up favorite measures or matters under their special patronage out of their just turn. It is useful also for directing the discretion of the House when they are moved to take up a particular matter to the prejudice of others having priority of right to their attention in the general order of business."

By clause 6, Rule XXIV, preference is given to bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills over other business. The last clause of Rule 114 has been dropped, for the reason that if the Calendar be proceeded with in order, there will be little or no occasion to make a bill a "special order."

In the Committee of the Whole House it is proposed that bills on the Private Calendar shall be taken up in order and disposed of. No good reason appears to the committee why the present artificial distinction should be kept up with respect to bills on the Private Calendar. The bills thereon are reported from at least two-thirds of the committees of the House, and the distinction of "objection" and "consideration" days now existing creates an inequality that has often worked great injustice to equally deserving claimants. It is at least a doubtful question whether one member should possess the power by his single objection to nullify, even temporarily, the recommendation of a standing committee of the House which has perhaps unanimously reported the bill to which objection is made. If a member is in possession of information in regard to a private bill which convinces him that it ought not to pass, he will have opportunity during its consideration to impart that information to the Committee of the Whole House, where the debate is rarely restricted. The fact that it has been favorably reported by a committee, which it is presumed has carefully and thoroughly examined the whole subject, certainly gives to the bill at least what may be termed the prima facie right of consideration, and for this reason the committee propose that where objection is made to the consideration of a public bill the question shall be decided by the House without debate. Finally, it may be urged that there can be no good reason for perpetuating a system which, in addition to facilitating the passage of certain bills solely by reason of their accidental position on the Calendar, creates confusion and leads to errors in the consideration of the Private Calendar. For these reasons the committee recommend the incorporation of Rule 129 with the present Rule 114, and as amended they appear as clause 4, Rule XXIII.

OF BILLS.

Under this head are now grouped rules from 115 to 127, inclusive. The committee have consolidated them into one rule, numbered XXI, and they appear as follows: Rules 115, 116, 117, and 118 are incorporated in clauses 1 and 2 of Rule XXI and clause 1 of Rule XXIV.

Rule 119 has been dropped for the reason that general appropriation bills have been, with bills for raising revenue, constituted a class and given preference in the order of business, and making any of them a special order would in no respect facilitate their consideration and disposition.

Rule 120 has been retained intact, the committee not being unanimous as to its amendment.

Rule 121 has been dropped as unnecessary, being substantially provided for by another rule. (See clause 6, Rule XVI.)

Rule 122 has been dropped as obsolete and being provided for by law.

Rule 123 is retained intact.

Rule 124 is dropped as unnecessary, being otherwise provided for. (See clause 4, Rule XVI, fixing order of motions.)

Rule 125 is also dropped as unnecessary, it being a reasonable supposition that the Clerk of the House would, without specific requirement to that effect, see that all bills passed by the House were properly engrossed, a matter of far less importance than their correct enrollment in a "plain, round hand," for which no provision is made.

Rule 126 is also dropped as unnecessary, being otherwise provided for. (See clause 1, Rule XVII.)

Rule 127 appears as clause 3, Rule III.

LOCAL OR PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Under this head are two rules, namely, 128 and 129, which have been disposed of as follows, namely:

Rule 128 is retained intact and appears as Rule XXVI.

Rule 129 is dropped for reasons stated in regard to the disposition of Rule 114.

OF BILLS ON LEAVE AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under this head appears but one rule, (130,) although it may be said to really comprehend three distinct propositions and subjects. In the revision it has been transferred to and incorporated with the rules under the head of "ORDER OF BUSINESS," where it properly belongs. The provisions of the present rule have been retained, save that portion of the rule first adopted in 1838, providing for the consideration of resolutions introduced on the call of States. The committee have so framed the revision submitted as to secure the consideration by a standing or select committee of every proposition presented to the House, save such as are submitted under a suspension of the rules, and have accordingly dropped that portion of the rule which permits a resolution to be submitted on the second call of States, and, by securing the previous question, without permitting debate or amendment, bring the House to a direct vote thereon, thus avoiding the necessity of its lying over, as would be the case if debate should arise thereon. The order of the call of States has been arranged alphabetically, there now being no rule or provision on the subject. Another rule (52) provides that in the morning hour, after reports of committees have been "presented and disposed of," the Speaker "shall call for resolutions from the Members of each State and Delegate from each Territory, beginning with Maine and the Territory last organized, alternately."

This rule was adopted January 14, 1829, (second session, Twentieth Congress,) while the first part of Rule 130, providing for a call of States and Territories for "bills on leave," was not adopted until February 6, 1838, (second session, Twenty-fifth Congress,) and without any rule to that effect the order of the call of States and Territories for resolutions was followed, except the feature or provision of alternation between "Maine and the Territory last organized." At the time of the adoption of this rule, Maine was next to the last State admitted to the Union. The Territory of Michigan was then the "Territory last organized," and this rule was probably adopted with the view of affording the amplest opportunity for the Representatives of the youngest States and Territories to present the wants and wishes of their people, it then being in order to present a bill (due notice having been given thereof, as provided in Rule 115) on the call of States for resolutions.

As there has been no restriction on the introduction of bills for many years, and as all bills introduced under this call are "referred, without debate, to appropriate committees," the initial point of the call becomes a matter of slight importance, and the committee have accordingly provided that the States shall be called alphabetically as the names of members are, by Rule 35, (adopted April 7, 1879,) required to be called, thus making the rules uniform and harmonious in this respect.

OF PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Under this head but one rule (131) appears, and the only change made therein is to provide that the Clerk, who has entire custody of the petitions and memorials presented under the rule, and who is required to make a list of the same for publication in the Journal, shall furnish a transcript thereof to the official reporters of debates for publication in the RECORD, and also providing that all petitions and memorials inappropriately referred may be properly referred by the committee having possession of the same in the same manner as originally presented.

The last clause of Rule 165 requires the official reporters "to prepare a list of the memorials, petitions, and other papers, with their reference, presented under Rule 131, without requiring a brief statement of their contents, as the last-named rule is construed to require. The committee were of opinion that a transcript of the Journal entries as to petitions and memorials furnished for publication in the RECORD would secure greater uniformity and better methodize their disposition, and accordingly recommend the changes proposed. It appears as Rule XXII.

OF THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

Under this head appear two rules, namely, 132 and 133, which, as amended, appear as Rule XVII, clauses 1, 2, and 3.

The committee are of opinion that the operation of the previous question should be modified in one respect, namely, that it should not be so sweeping and comprehensive as at present; and they accordingly recommend that its effect shall be to bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been ordered. It is therefore proposed that the previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions in order under the rules, an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments, and its effect shall be to carry the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal, to its passage or rejection. The committee also propose that, pending a motion for or after the previous question has been ordered on the passage of a bill, it shall be in order for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee, thus affording the amplest opportunity to test the sense of the House as to whether or not the bill is in the exact form it desires.

As pertinent to the subject the committee append a statement of the history of the previous question.

The previous question was recognized in the rules established April 7, 1789, and could be demanded by five members, (the parliamentary law places it in the power of two members—one to move, the other to second.) On the 23d December, 1811, it was placed on a footing with the yeas and nays—that is, at the command of one-fifth of the members present. It remained so until the 24th February, 1812, when the rule was changed to its present form of a majority. According to the former practice, the previous question brought the House to a direct vote on the main question; that is, to agree to the main proposition, to the exclusion of all amendments and incidental motions; but on the 14th of January, 1840, it was changed to embrace, first, pending ameadments, and then the main proposition.

The original intent of the previous question was to ascertain the sense of the House, in the early stages of a subject, as to the propriety of entertaining the matter; and, if decided affirmatively, the debate went on; if decided negatively, the debate ceased, and the subject passed from before the House without motion or further question. This was the practice of Congress under the Confederation; and it is still the practice in the British Parliament. Now, by the practice of the House, as well as by the terms of the rule, it is reversed; if the motion for the previous question is decided in the affirmative, debate ceases, and the House proceeds to vote; if in the negative, the proceedings go on as if the motion for the previous question had not been made. Until the revision of the rules in March, 1860, whenever the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, pending a motion to postpone, the motion to postpone was cut off.

OF ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Under this head is Rule 134, which has been rearranged and made more comprehensive, and amended by adding to the list of persons to be admitted the President, and clerks of committees, when business from their committees is under consideration. A clause has also been added making it out of order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule. The committee propose, however, to set aside a portion of the west gallery for the accommodation of distinguished visitors and others to be admitted only on the cards of members. As there are only a sufficient number of seats on the floor to accommodate the Members and Delegates entitled to occupy them, it follows that the admission to the floor of those not entitled to its privileges will have the effect to frequently deprive members of their seats, especially those sitting on the outer circle or row, and will also add to the noise and confusion caused by private conversation and moving about of the three hundred and fifty persons usually present on the floor during the sittings of the House. As the practice in regard to admission to the floor has been varying, it is deemed proper to give a résumé thereof.

The first rule for the admission within the Hall of other than members was adopted on the 7th January, 1802, and was confined to "Senators, officers of the general and State governments, foreign ministers, and such persons as members might introduce." On the 11th January, 1802, an attempt was made to amend so as to exclude persons "introduced by members," which failed. On the 8th November, 1804, a proposition was made to confine the privilege to Senators, which also failed. On the 17th December, 1805, officers of State governments were excluded. On the 1st February, 1808, a proposition was made to admit ex-members of Congress and the judges of the Supreme Court. After a good deal of debate it was rejected. On the 11th February, 1809, the rule was enlarged so as to admit judicial officers of the United States, as also ex-members of Congress. On the 25th February, 1814, those who had been heads of Departments were admitted. On the 10th February, 1815, officers who had received the thanks of Congress were included; on the 12th January, 1816, the Navy commissioners; on the 21st February, 1816, governors of States and Territories; March 13, 1822, the President's secretary. On the 26th January, 1833, the rule was further enlarged by admitting "such persons as the Speaker or a member might introduce," and on the 10th December, 1833, the House, by a vote almost unanimous, rescinded that amendment. On the 23d of December, 1857, soon after removing into the new hall in the south wing of the Capitol extension, the privilege of admission was restricted to "members of the Senate, their Secretary, heads of Departments, President's private secretary, the governor for the time being of any State, and judges of the Supreme Court of the United States." On the 19th of March, 1860, it was adopted in its present form, excepting the last clause, a proposition to admit ex-members having been rejected. The last clause, adopted March 2, 1865, was intended to prevent persons not entitled to the privilege of the Hall from occupying the cloak and other adjoining rooms. January 29, 1878, the House adopted the following resolution, by yeas 155 to nays 92, namely: "Resolved, That the rule in regard to the admission of persons to the privileges of the floor be enforced, and the Speaker is requested to discontinue the practice of issuing passes, which has been indulged in by common consent." (See Journal, first session, Forty-fifth Congress, pages 316 and 317.)

As amended it appears as new Rule XXXIV.

OF REPORTERS.

Under this head appears but one rule, (135.) It confers upon the Speaker authority to admit under certain conditions to the reporters' gallery stenographers and reporters to take down the debates. The committee recommend that the rule be abbreviated by striking out all after the word "chair," in line 3, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe." It is not the purpose of the committee to modify in any respect the requirements of the present rule, but, on the contrary, to give more authority to the Speaker respecting the reporters' gallery than the present rule confers. The words "and proceedings" have been inserted after the word "debates" in line 2, and as amended embraces, it is believed, everything essential to secure the proper disposition of seats therein and control of persons so admitted. A clause has also been added authorizing the Speaker to assign two seats on the floor to Associated Press reporters and regulate the occupation of the same, which merely embodies in a rule the resolution of the House of January 11, 1867, (second session, Thirty-ninth Congress,) providing that reporters of the Associated Press and reports made by them should be under the same rules and regulations as the reporters and reports of the Globe, now the RECORD. As amended it appears as clause 2, Rule XXXVI.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Under this head appears Rule 136. The first part thereof was adopted March 17, 1848, (first session, Thirtieth Congress,) which, on the 14th of August following, became a joint rule. The last clause was adopted March 16, 1860, prior to which date it had been the practice for the House at the close of a first session of a Congress to adopt a similar provision, and this amendment was adopted to avoid the necessity of passing a similar resolution at every session. The first clause of the rule is identical with the former twenty-first rule, and the second clause with the present fifty-ninth rule of the Senate. In the revision it appears as Rule XXVII.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Under this head appear rules from 137 to 166, which have been severally disposed of as follows, namely:

Rule 137, providing for a secret session, has been retained, though greatly abbreviated, it being thought that occasion might arise when it would be desirable, and as modified it appears as Rule XXX.

Rule 138 has been retained intact, and appears as Rule XXXVII.

Rule 139 has also been dropped for the reason that the subject-matter is provided for in the present Rule 100, which appears as clause 45, Rule XI.

Rule 140. The first clause of this rule has been dropped for the reason that the subject-matter is provided for by law, (see Revised Statutes, sections 1764 and 1765,) and the last clause is retained without change and appears as Rule XLIII.

Rule 141 has been retained, with an amendment making it applicable only to papers "other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote," thus reaffirming or recognizing the right of a member to demand the reading of a paper on which he is called to vote. This is the long-established rule and practice of the English Parliament, and the committee quote as pertinent what is said on the subject by one of the most distinguished English writers on parliamentary law, Mr. Hatsel. He says:

"Where papers are laid before the House or referred to a committee, every member has a right to have them once read at the table before he can be compelled to vote on them, but it is a great though common error to suppose that he has a right, toties quoties, to have acts, journals, accounts, or papers on the table read independently of the will of the House. The delay and interruption which this might be made to produce evince the impossibility of the existence of such a right. There is, indeed, so manifest a propriety of permitting every member to have as much information as possible on every question on which he is to vote, that when he desires the reading, if it be seen that it is really for information, and not for delay, the Speaker directs it to be read without putting a question, if no one objects; but if objected to, a question must be put." It appears in the revision as Rule XXXI.

Rule 142 has been dropped as obsolete, there being indeed little or no occasion for the use of the motion "to postpone indefinitely." The motion has been retained in clause 4 of Rule XVI, without recommendation to the House, for the reason that the committee were not unanimous in favor of its exclusion.

Rule 143 has also been dropped as being both obsolete and in contravention of other rules of later date.

Rule 144 has been retained intact, though the occasions will be rare when Jefferson's Manual can be cited on a point not provided for by a rule or decision of the House. Compiled as it was for the use of the Senate exclusively, and made up almost wholly of collations of English parliamentary practice and decisions, it was never especially valuable as an authority in the House of Representatives, even in its early history, and for many years past has been rarely quoted in the House. It appears as Rule XLIV.

Rule 145 has been substantially retained, modified, of course, so as to be in harmony with the order of business prescribed by Rule XXIV, and, as amended, appears as Rule XXVIII.

Rule 146. The first part of this rule has been dropped as unnecessary, as being fully covered by the following rule, which has been retained intact. The last part of the rule has been transferred to Rule III, and appears as clause 1.

Rule 147, as above stated, has been retained intact, and appears as Rule XLV.

Rule 148 appears as clause 6, Rule XI.

Rule 149 has been substantially provided for by the last part of clause 2, Rule VIII.

Rule 150 appears as clause 20, Rule XI.

Rule 151, as clause 2, Rule XI.

Rule 152, as clause 5, Rule XI.

Rule 153, as clause 18, Rule XI.

Rule 154 has been dropped, for the reason that by the act of February 12, 1868, the allowance for stationery and newspapers is fixed at $125 for each session.

Rule 155 has been substantially retained and appears as Rule XXXIII.

Rule 156 has been dropped, for the reason that it was practically void, the House having, December 15, 1875, (first session, Forty-fourth Congress,) abolished the Committee on Freedmen's Affairs, whose duties it prescribed.

Rule 157 has been dropped, for the reason that the committee believe it should either be a joint rule or enacted into a law, and will make further recommendation as to this rule to carry out this view.

Rule 158 has been retained, with an amendment providing that the said messages shall be entered in the Journal and published in the RECORD of that day's proceedings. Such has been the practice for many years, the rule being practically nullified, and, as it stands, of little value. It appears as Rule XLI.

Rule 159 has been retained intact, and appears as Rule XLII.

Rule 160 appears as clause 22, Rule XI.

Rule 161 has been retained intact, and appears as clause 8, Rule XVI.

Rule 162 has been substantially retained, being made more specific, and appears as Rule XII.

Rule 163 has been retained, with additional provisions prescribing the time and manner of drawing seats. These additional provisions are substantially those observed for many years past, and it is believed furnish every safeguard for a fair and impartial drawing. It appears as Rule XXXII.

Rule 164 has been considerably changed, it appearing that it did not meet all the requirements as to the custody and disposition of papers presented to the House. The rule is, and has been since its creation, a dead letter, it being the custom, except during the last Congress, to grant all requests for the withdrawal of papers, whether there were adverse reports or not, and in cases where there were adverse reports and the request for withdrawal was "referred to the committee which last considered the case," no written report was ever made thereon.

The committee have adopted substantially the Senate rule on this subject, with certain necessary additional provisions conferring on the Clerk authority to do what has long been done without specific direction.

Rule 165. The first part of this rule has been retained, with an amendment inserting the words "for cause" after the word "removal," and the words "and the manner of the execution of their duties," and the last part has been dropped, being provided for in clause 1, Rule XX. As amended it appears as Rule XXXVI, clause 1.

Rule 166 has been incorporated in Rule V, prescribing the duties of the Doorkeeper, and appears as the last part of clause 3.

Seven new rules have been created and new propositions have been added to existing rules as follows, namely: Clause 3 of Rule XIV, and clause 2 of Rule XVIII, and Rules XIX, XX, XXIX, XXXII, XXXV, XXXVIII, and XXXIX.

Clause 3 of Rule XIV has been added for the purpose of covering a point not provided by the present rules, though settled by repeated decisions of the House on appeal or otherwise. It is intended to provide that where debate extends beyond the day on which the measure is reported, the member reporting the same shall, as the organ of the committee, have an additional hour in which to close debate, and this privilege is not given him in his individual right at all, but solely as the representative of the committee.

Clause 2 of Rule XVIII is added for the purpose of preventing a member from bringing back into the House, on a motion to reconsider, any matter which he has obtained unanimous consent to introduce or submit for reference or to report from a committee for printing and recommitment. Such proceeding being a matter of favor and courtesy outside of the regular order of business, it is certainly not proper that undue advantage should be taken of that consent by bringing up out of order any matter so introduced, submitted, or reported.

Rule XIX merely embraces in the form of a rule that which has long been the practice of the House without rule. Speaker Macon decided, in the Ninth Congress, that if a motion to amend the original matter was first submitted, it was not then in order to submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute. This decision was reversed by Speaker Polk, in the Twenty-fourth Congress, which was sustained on appeal by a decisive vote, and the practice has since been in accordance with the latter decision.

Rule XX provides that any Senate amendment shall be subject to the point of order that it shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole House; if originating in the House it would be subject to that point, thereby securing absolutely as to all legislation the principle of the present Rule 112, which is retained substantially unchanged as clause 3, Rule XXIII.

Rule XXIX merely crystallizes into a rule the practice of the House since the Thirty-first Congress, when Speaker Cobb decided that the report of a committee of conference was so highly privileged as to be in order pending a motion for a call of the House. Since that time it has been the practice of the House to receive a conference report at any time as a question of high privilege, and proceeds upon the theory that as such reports usually settle the differences between the two Houses and perfects legislation so far as Congress can, they should have precedence of new or proposed legislation. It may also be added that giving a conference report precedence over all other business is a parliamentary courtesy to the Senate, which may desire to promptly dispose of the subject and is prevented by non-action of the House, it being necessary that the report should be first made to the House agreeing to the conference.

Rule XXXII puts into the standing rules that which is required to be done by resolution at the commencement of the first session of each Congress, to which is added the present Rule 163, providing that no proposition for a second drawing of seats shall be in order during the same Congress.

Rule XXXV provides for and regulates admission to the galleries. The committee are of opinion, in view of the strictness of the rule as to admission to the floor, that some place should be assigned in one of the galleries for members of State Legislatures and governments, members or delegates of boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and the like, visiting the Capitol, the north gallery being occupied—especially in winter—almost exclusively by visitors whose punctuality of arrival is only exceeded by the pertinacity with which they adhere to the most eligible seats. For this reason the committee propose that that portion of the west gallery now assigned for the use of the families of members be assigned for the use of visitors of the classes above referred to, to be admitted on the card of members, and that the southerly half of the east gallery be assigned exclusively for the use of the families of members, (which shall include their visitors,) in which the Speaker shall control one bench.

Rule XXXVIII adds a requirement as to the disposition of papers referred to committees, and will effect a necessary reform in this regard, besides guaranteeing greater security to the files of the House.

Rule XXXIX provides that papers shall not be withdrawn from the files of the House without its leave, and that in all cases where leave is given to withdraw papers certified copies shall be left with the Clerk. It also adds a requirement as to the disposition of papers in cases which have been provided for by law, and merely confers specifically upon the Clerk authority to do that which has long been done without provision therefor.

In order to furnish all possible information in regard to the reported revision and proposed code of rules, and for convenience of reference, a statement is herewith appended showing the sources from which the several rules and clauses of the "revision" were derived, namely:

Present Rule 147.

As briefly summarizing the work of the committee, it may be stated that in the revision herewith reported and appended thirty-two of the present rules have been dropped entirely, twelve have been retained intact, and one hundred and twenty-two have been retained in some respect or feature, though necessarily greatly condensed and abbreviated; and in concluding their labors by its submission, the committee can only add the expression of hope that its consideration by the House may be governed by the same spirit of mutual concession and compromise that existed in the Committee on Rules from its first to its final meeting.

RULE I.

DUTIES OF THE SPEAKER.

1. The Speaker shall take the chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum, cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same.

2. He shall preserve order and decorum, and in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries, or in the lobby, may cause the same to be cleared.

3. He shall have general control, except as provided by rule or law, of the Hall of the House, and the disposal of the unappropriated rooms in that part of the Capitol assigned to the use of the House until further ordered.

4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and subpœnas of, or issued by order of the House, and decide all questions of order subject to an appeal by any member, on which appeal no member shall speak more than once, unless by permission of the House.

5. He shall rise to put a question, but may state it sitting; and shall put questions in this form, to wit: "As many as are in favor (as the question may be) say Ay;" and after the affirmative voice is expressed, "As many as are opposed say No." If he doubts, or a division is called for, the House shall divide; those in the affirmative of the question shall first rise from their seats, and then those in the negative. If he still doubts, or a count is required by at least one-fifth of a quorum, he shall name one from each side of the question to tell the members in the affirmative and negative; which being reported, he shall rise and state the decision.

6. He shall not be required to vote in ordinary legislative proceedings, except in case of a tie, or where his vote, if given with the minority, would make a tie, or will make or prevent a two-thirds vote where such vote is required, or where the House is engaged in voting by ballot; and in all cases of a tie vote the question shall be lost.

7. He shall have the right to name any member to perform the duties of the chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment: Provided, however, That in case of his illness he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding ten days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment, the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore, to act during his absence.

RULE II.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

There shall be elected by a viva voce vote at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are chosen, a Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Chaplain, each of whom shall take an oath for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office, to the best of his knowledge and ability, and to keep the secrets of the House, and each shall appoint all of the employés of his department provided for by law.

RULE III.

DUTIES OF THE CLERK.

1. The Clerk shall, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, preserve order and decorum, and decide all questions of order, subject to appeal by any member.

2. He shall make, and cause to be printed and delivered to each member, or mailed to his address, at the commencement of every regular session of Congress, a list of the reports which it is the duty of any officer or Department to make to Congress, referring to the act or resolution and page of the volume of the laws or Journal in which it may be contained, and placing under the name of each officer the list of reports required of him to be made; also make a weekly statement of the resolutions and bills upon the Speaker's table, accompanied with a brief reference to the orders and proceedings of the House upon each, and the dates of such orders and proceedings, which statement shall be printed.

3. He shall note all questions of order, with the decisions thereon, the record of which shall be printed as an appendix to the Journal of each session; and complete, as soon after the close of the session as possible, the printing and distribution to Members and Delegates of the Journal of the House, together with an accurate and complete index; retain in the library at his office, for the use of the members and officers of the House, and not to be withdrawn therefrom, two copies of all the books and printed documents deposited there; send, at the end of each session, a printed copy of the Journal thereof to the executive and to each branch of the Legislature of every State and Territory; preserve for and deliver or mail to each Member and Delegate an extra copy, in good binding, of all documents printed by order of either House of the Congress to which he belonged; attest all writs, warrants, and subpœnas issued by order of the House; certify to the passage of all bills and joint resolutions; and make or approve all contracts, bargains, or agreements relative to furnishing any matter or thing, or for the performance of any labor for the House of Representatives, in pursuance of law or order of the House.

RULE IV.

DUTIES OF THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

1. It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend in person the House during its sittings, to maintain order under the direction of the Speaker, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, under the direction of the Clerk; execute the commands of the House, and all processes issued by authority thereof, directed to him by the Speaker; keep the accounts for the pay and mileage of Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law.

2. The symbol of his office shall be the mace, which shall be borne by him while enforcing order on the floor.

3. He shall give bond to the United States, with sureties to be approved by the Speaker, in the sum of $50,000, for the faithful disbursement of all moneys intrusted to him by virtue of his office and the proper discharge of the duties thereof, and no member of Congress shall be approved as such surety.

RULE V.

DUTIES OF OTHER OFFICERS.

1. The Doorkeeper shall enforce strictly the rules relating to the privileges of the Hall and be responsible to the House for the official conduct of his employés.

2. At the commencement and close of each session of Congress he shall take an inventory of all the furniture, books, and other public property in the several committee and other rooms under his charge, report the same to the House, which shall be referred to the Committee on Accounts to ascertain and determine the amount for which he shall be held liable for missing articles.

3. Fifteen minutes before the hour for the meeting of the House each day, he shall see that the floor is cleared of all persons except those privileged to remain, and allow no person to enter the room over the hall of the House during its sittings.

RULE VI.

The Postmaster shall superintend the post-office kept in the Capitol for the accommodation of Representatives, Delegates, and officers of the House, and be held responsible for the prompt and safe delivery of their mail.

RULE VII.

The Chaplain shall attend at the commencement of each day's sitting of the House and open the same with prayer.

RULE VIII.

OF THE MEMBERS.

1. Every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and shall vote on each question put, unless, on motion made before division or the commencement of the roll-call and decided without debate, he shall be excused, or unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

2. Pairs shall be announced by the Clerk, after the completion of the second roll-call, from a written list furnished him by members, which list shall be published as a part of the proceedings immediately following the names of those not voting.

RULE IX.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, character, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

RULE X.

OF COMMITTEES.

1. Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint at the commencement of each Congress, the following standing committees, namely:

On Elections, to consist of fifteen members.
On Ways and Means, to consist of fifteen members.
On Appropriations, to consist of fifteen members.
On the Judiciary, to consist of fifteen members.
On Banking and Currency, to consist of eleven members.
On Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to consist of eleven members.
On Commerce, to consist of fifteen members.
On Agriculture, to consist of fifteen members.
On Foreign Affairs, to consist of eleven members.
On Military Affairs, to consist of eleven members.
On Naval Affairs, to consist of eleven members.
On the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to consist of eleven members.
On the Public Lands, to consist of eleven members.
On Indian Affairs, to consist of eleven members.
On the Territories, to consist of eleven members.
On Railways and Canals, to consist of eleven members.
On Manufactures, to consist of eleven members.

47. The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: the Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the Committee on Appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses; and the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

RULE XII.

DELEGATES.

The Speaker shall appoint from among the Delegates one additional member on each of the following committees, namely: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Agriculture; Military Affairs; Post-Office and Post-Roads; Public Lands; Indian Affairs; Territories; and Mines and Mining; and they shall possess in their respective committees the same powers and privileges as in the House, and may make any motion except to reconsider.

RULE XIII.

CALENDARS.

1. There shall be three calendars of business reported from committees, namely:

First. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character, directly or indirectly appropriating money or property;

Second. A House calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property; and Third. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, to which shall be referred all bills of a private character.

2. The question of reference of any proposition, other than that reported from a committee, shall be decided without debate, in the following order, namely: a standing committee, a select committee; but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided, without debate, in the following order, namely: House Calendar, Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Committee of the Whole House, a standing committee, a select committee.

RULE XIV.

OF DECORUM AND DEBATE.

1. When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and on being recognized may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

2. When two or more members rise at once the Speaker shall name the member who is first to speak, and no member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee, except as further provided in this rule.

3. The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon, and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

4. If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

6. No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms is charged with the strict enforcement of this rule.

RULE XV.

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

RULE XVI.

ON MOTIONS, THEIR PRECEDENCE, ETC.

1. Every motion made to the House shall be reduced to writing on the demand of any member, and shall be entered on the Journal with the name of the member making it, unless it is withdrawn the same day.

2. When a motion has been made, the Speaker shall state it, or (if it be in writing) cause it to be read aloud by the Clerk before being debated, and it shall then be in possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

3. When any motion or proposition is made, the question, Will the House now consider it? shall not be put unless demanded by a member.

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lie on the table, for the previous question, (which motions shall be decided without debate,) to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

5. A motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, a motion to adjourn, and to take a recess shall always be in order, and the hour at which the House adjourns shall be entered on the Journal.

6. On the demand of any member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

7. A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert; and no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

8. Pending a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.

RULE XVII.

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal of said motion, to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on the final passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or special committee; and a motion to lie upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

2. A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is ordered, unless it shall appear upon an actual count by the Speaker that a quorum is not present.

3. All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question, and pending such motion, shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

RULE XVIII.

RECONSIDERATION.

1. When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report, a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, or to take a recess, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

2. No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee, or reported therefrom for printing and recommitment, shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider; and all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

RULE XIX.

OF AMENDMENTS.

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

RULE XXI.

ON BILLS.

1. Bills and joint resolutions introduced for reference, and those reported by committees without such introduction, shall be read a first time by their titles and printed, the second time in full, the third time by their titles, unless the reading in full shall be demanded by a member.

2. Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by the title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: Shall the bill be engrossed and read the third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

4. No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

5. All bills for improvement of rivers and harbors and for the establishment or change of post-routes shall be delivered to the Clerk, as in the case of petitions and memorials, for reference to appropriate committees.

RULE XXII.

OF PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

1. Members having petitions or memorials to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal, together with the names of the members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript thereof to the official reporters of debates for publication in the RECORD.

2. Any petition or memorial excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented.

RULE XXIII.

OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE.

1. In all cases in forming a Committee of the Whole House the Speaker shall leave his chair after appointing a chairman to preside.

2. Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal.

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

4. In Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bills on the Calendar shall be taken up in their order, but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the House shall decide without debate whether it shall be disposed of or laid aside for the present.

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

6. The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

7. A motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend; and, if carried, shall be considered equivalent to its rejection. Whenever a bill is reported from a Committee of the Whole with a recommendation to strike out the enacting words, and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to the said committee without further action by the House. But before the question of concurrence is submitted, it is in order to entertain a motion to refer the bill to any committee, with or without instructions, and when the same is again reported to the House it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole without debate.

8. The rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committees of the Whole House so far as they may be applicable.

RULE XXIV.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Each Monday morning, during a session of Congress, all the States and Territories shall be called in their alphabetical order for bills, joint resolutions, and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures, and House resolutions, for reference, and, on this call only, resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order, to be submitted and referred to the appropriate committees, which shall report thereon to the House within one week.

2. On all days other than Monday, as soon as the Journal is read and approved, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed; and the Speaker shall call upon each standing committee in regular order and then upon the select committees; and if the whole of the hour is not consumed by this call, then it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of other business, but if he shall not complete the call within the hour, he shall resume it in the succeeding morning hour where he left off.

3. The morning hour for the call of committees shall not be dispensed with except by a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting thereon.

4. After the hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees, the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment shall be resumed, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than Monday, until disposed of; and the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

5. Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table, which, prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order:

First. Messages from the President and other executive communications.

Second. Messages from the Senate and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House.

Third. Bills and resolutions from the Senate on their first and second reading, that they be referred to committees or put on their passage; and the motions so to refer shall have precedence of all other motions touching their disposition.

Fourth. Engrossed bills and bills from the Senate on their third reading.

6. Business on the Speaker's table having been disposed of, it shall then be in order to entertain motions, in the following order, namely:

First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on its Calendar.

Second. To proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

Third. On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days.

RULE XXV.

Miscellaneous rules.

PRIORITY OF BUSINESS.

All questions relating to the priority of business shall be decided by a majority without debate.

RULE XXVI.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by a majority of the House.

RULE XXVII.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

After six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session of any Congress, all bills, resolutions, and reports, which originated in the House, and at the close of the next preceding session which remained undetermined, shall be in order for action, and all business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress in the same manner as if no adjournment had taken place.

RULE XXVIII.

CHANGE OR SUSPENSION OF RULES.

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended, except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on every Monday after the call of States and Territories shall have been completed, and during the last six days of a session.

RULE XXIX.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition.

RULE XXX.

SECRET SESSION.

Whenever confidential communications are received from the President of the United States, or whenever the Speaker or any member shall inform the House that he has communications which he believes ought to be kept secret for the present, the House shall be cleared of all persons except the members and officers thereof, and so continue during the reading of such communications, the debates and proceedings thereon, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

RULE XXXI.

READING OF PAPERS.

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

RULE XXXII.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

1. The Clerk shall, at the commencement of each Congress, place in a box the name of each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives, written upon a separate slip of paper, and, at an hour to be fixed by the House, shall proceed in its presence to draw from said box, one at a time, the said slips of paper, and as each is drawn shall announce the name of the Member or Delegate thereon, who shall thereupon choose his seat for the present Congress.

2. Before said drawing shall commence, each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during the same Congress.

RULE XXXIII.

HALL OF THE HOUSE.

The Hall of the House shall be used only for the legislative business of the House, and for the caucus meetings of its members, except upon occasions where the House by resolution agree to take part in any ceremonies to be observed therein; and the Speaker shall not entertain a motion for the suspension of this rule.

RULE XXXIV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The persons hereinafter named, and none other, shall be admitted to the Hall of the House or rooms leading thereto, namely: The President of the United States and his private secretary, judges of the Supreme Court, members of Congress and members-elect, the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, heads of Departments, foreign ministers, governors of States, the Architect of the Capitol, such persons as have, by name, received the thanks of Congress, ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and clerks of committees, when business from their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule.

RULE XXXV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE GALLERIES.

The Speaker shall set aside a portion of the west gallery for the use of the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, justices of the Supreme Court, foreign ministers and suites, and the members of their respective families, and shall also set aside another portion of the same gallery for the accommodation of persons to be admitted on the card of members. The southerly half of the east gallery shall be assigned exclusively for the use of the families of members of Congress, in which the Speaker shall control one bench, and on request of a member the Speaker shall issue a card of admission to his family, which shall include their visitors, and no other person shall be admitted to this section.

RULE XXXVI.

OFFICIAL AND OTHER REPORTERS.

1. The appointment and removal, for cause, of the official reporters of the House, including stenographers of committees, and the manner of the execution of their duties, shall be vested in the Speaker.

2. Stenographers and reporters, other than the official reporters of the House, wishing to take down the debates and proceedings, may be admitted by the Speaker to the reporters' gallery over the Speaker's chair, under such regulations as he may, from time to time, prescribe; and he may assign two seats on the floor to Associated Press reporters, and regulate the occupation of the same.

RULE XXXVII.

PAY OF WITNESSES.

The rule for paying witnesses summoned to appear before the House, or either of its committees, shall be as follows: For each day a witness shall attend, the sum of $3; for each mile he shall travel in coming to or going from the place of examination, the sum of five cents each way; but nothing shall be paid for traveling when the witness has been summoned at the place of trial.

RULE XXXVIII.

PAPERS.

The clerks of the several committees of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence or testimony taken by such committee, under the order of the House, during the said Congress.

RULE XXXIX.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

No memorial or other paper presented to the House shall be withdrawn from its files without its leave, and if so withdrawn therefrom certified copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Clerk; but, when an act may pass for the settlement of a claim, the Clerk is authorized to transmit to the officer charged with the settlement thereof the papers on file in his office relating to such claim, or may loan temporarily to any officer or bureau of the Executive Departments any papers on file in his office relating to any matter pending before such officer or bureau, taking proper receipt therefor.

RULE XL.

BALLOT.

In all other cases of ballot than for committees a majority of the votes given shall be necessary to an election, and where there shall not be such a majority on the first ballot, the ballots shall be repeated until a majority be obtained; and in all ballotings blanks shall be rejected and not taken into the count in enumeration of votes or reported by the tellers.

RULE XLI.

MESSAGES.

Messages received from the Senate and the President of the United States, giving notice of bills passed or approved, shall be entered in the Journal and published in the RECORD of that day's proceedings.

RULE XLII.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Estimates of appropriations, and all other communications from the Executive Departments, intended for the consideration of any committees of the House, shall be addressed to the Speaker, and by him submitted to the House for reference.

RULE XLIII.

No person shall be an officer of the House, or continue in its employment, who shall be an agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or be interested in such claim otherwise than as an original claimant; and it shall be the duty of the Committee on Accounts to inquire into and report to the House any violation of this rule.

RULE XLIV.

JEFFERSON'S MANUAL.

The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable, and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House and joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.

RULE XLV.

These rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, for myself I do not desire, at least at this stage of the proceedings, to occupy the time of the House with any elaborate explanation of the motives which actuated or the purposes which controlled the Committee on Rules in the revision which they submit. Accompanying this proposed revision is a very full and elaborate explanation, in which the rules that have been omitted, as well as those which have been incorporated in the present revision, or modified, are noted and the reasons for the changes given. I think it will generally be found that the questions which will naturally come up, and which members will very properly submit, will in most cases be answered by consulting the report. I know that some very material alterations are proposed, which will necessarily, or at least naturally, evoke discussion. When that time shall come the committee will be prepared to give the reasons which have influenced their action. Until then I shall ask that the Clerk be permitted to proceed with the reading of the proposed rules by paragraphs, it being my understanding that under the order of the House the Committee of the Whole will now consider these rules clause by clause. The rules as reported are subdivided into clauses, which I take it will be considered separately, as paragraphs of a general appropriation bill are considered in Committee of the Whole. The committee reserves to each member of the committee the right to offer, during the consideration of this report, such amendments as he may choose. The committee further reserves the right (of which I now give notice) to offer, as a committee, certain amendments, not very material, but which they deem proper to be offered, as we proceed.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman whether, if we pass over these rules on this reading, it will be agreed that we may go back to offer amendments at any subsequent time?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I cannot without the authority of the committee agree to that.

Mr. KEIFER. The reason I suggest it is that the gentlemen on this side of the House who belong to the committee are absent, and there may be some very important amendments which they would like to suggest, for which purpose it might be necessary to go back. I desire very much that this arrangement be made. I think it will lead to no difficulty.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can see how the adoption of the gentleman's suggestion might lead us into inextricable confusion. This system of rules, as reported, must be considered as a whole. Its symmetry (if, indeed, it be entitled to claim any symmetrical proportion at all) may be seriously marred, if not absolutely destroyed, by alteration in some material point. I surely need not repeat that it is not the purpose of the members of the committee, or any one of them, to take any advantage whatever of the absence of their colleagues representing the minority of the committee; nor do I believe that until rule numbered 13 in this revision is reached we shall touch a single thing on which there was not absolute and perfect unanimity. If either of the absent members of the committee shall, upon their return, say that any action adverse to their views or conclusions has been taken by the Committee of the Whole in their absence upon any point I certainly should be the first to propose to reopen the question, and in this I think I speak for all the members of the committee now present.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman misunderstood my inquiry. I did not ask that much. What I did desire was an arrangement by which the members of the committee now absent, or others at their instance, might be permitted to offer amendments to any part of the rules that might have been passed on during their absence. I would hardly ask on their behalf that we should go back and reconsider every matter that might have been voted upon. It seems to me that my proposition is quite fair.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Ohio and myself, I am sure, can come to an agreement on this point. I do not wish to deprive the absent members of the Committee on Rules of the fullest opportunity to submit any suggestions in the nature of amendment that they may wish to offer, whether they affect matters which have not been reached on their return or matters which we have passed upon. But I do insist, and if the gentleman from Ohio will reflect a moment he will see, that if we leave the matter open for every member of the House at his pleasure to go back and offer amendments to clauses and paragraphs which have been discussed, closed, settled, and passed, our work may prove almost interminable.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not asked that at all. I ask that independent propositions which have not been considered in the absence of these gentlemen may be offered afterward.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand, then, that the gentleman from Ohio simply wishes to secure to the absent members of the Committee on Rules, and not to members generally, this right.

Mr. KEIFER. Not to members of the House generally.

Mr. BLACKBURN. To that I readily assent.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to make a suggestion? This report of the Committee on Rules has for the first time reached my hands this morning. Although I left my address with the Clerk of the House, I received under the frank of the gentleman from Kentucky the proposed rules simply, without any report. Therefore I have before me this morning for the first time twenty-seven closely printed pages, explaining in detail the changes recommended, with various references and annotations. It is utterly impossible, I think, for most members who have not given special attention to this subject to proceed at once to the consideration of this body of rules, without any explanatory remarks and without any opportunity thus far to examine the report. It was understood, Mr. Chairman, as I thought, at the last day of the session that we were to have a printed copy of the committee's report sent to us.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he received it just as soon as it came from the Public Printer. The fact that the report of the committee did not go out at the same time as the proposed revision of the rules was not the fault of any member of the committee or of its clerk, but because it was simply impossible to get it earlier from the Public Printer.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, it having been impossible to give us the report at the time it was supposed, and having only the revised rules before us and not the report of the committee, it seems to me the House is in no condition to consider this matter this morning. We should, I think, have some time to read and consider the committee's report before we are called upon to act upon the revised rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As I have indicated, it was the opinion of the Committee on Rules there was to be no division or difference of opinion to be apprehended until Rule No. 13 as numbered in this revision should be reached, and if it be the pleasure of this House, if it be the pleasure of this committee to postpone the further consideration or to withhold consideration of this revision until to-morrow, I am sure the Committee on Rules has no disposition to hasten action at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree, Mr. Chairman, it would be irregular to go back and retrace the steps already taken, but at the same time it is exceedingly unfortunate that we should have proceeded to the consideration of this subject this morning without having the report of the Committee on Rules before us. That committee of course has given it most careful attention; its members have acted with unanimity, and they are prepared, of course, to discuss the whole question. It is only fair, however, that the other members of the House should have some time to consider it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. To that the committee do not object.

Mr. ROBINSON. While it is not proper to go back, it is altogether wiser to postpone further action until to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The time is to be consumed in general debate on the subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; the proposition is to read the rules, rule by rule, and pass upon them.

Mr. COX. Although this matter is before the House to-day it is not well, in my judgment, to commence the discussion now, but we should allow it to go over until to-morrow. Nor should I like to agree that only two members of this House, members of the Committee on Rules, who are absent, one I believe in Maine looking after that State, and the other in Ohio looking after something, [laughter,] that those two men should be the only members privileged to make amendments at any stage of this business. It is very important business we have before us, the consideration of our rule of conduct, and I think my friend from Kentucky will facilitate the matter by allowing it to go over until to-morrow, as it is the special order from day to day until disposed of, having all the advantage of the most favored legislation. I will make the motion that the committee rise for that purpose if I have the consent of my friend.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the sense of the committee tested by the motion being made that the committee now rise with the view of postponing the consideration of this proposed revision of the rules until to-morrow..

Mr. COX. That is all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I will say it was my purpose to proceed with these rules clause by clause and paragraph by paragraph, insisting, where a paragraph had been passed and agreed to, the subject was closed so far as that paragraph was concerned, until discussion was reached or difference of opinion had in the House, when I myself would have moved the committee rise in order to postpone the further consideration of the whole subject until to-morrow.

Mr. COX. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I am willing to have the motion made by the gentleman from New York that the committee now rise in order that this matter may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. COX. I will not take the matter out of the charge of my friend for a single moment, as I do not wish to antagonize him or the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I was not disposed to make the motion myself; but I am willing the sense of the committee should be tested.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules on the proposed revision of the rules, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. URNER for one week and to Mr. FINLEY for two weeks, on account of important business.

MARGARET B. FRANKS.

On motion of Mr. BOUCK, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Margaret B. Franks, no adverse report having been made thereon.

DEATH OF HON. GEORGE S. HOUSTON.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce to this House the death of Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON, late United States Senator from the State of Alabama. He died at his residence at Athens, Alabama, on the 31st of last December. I desire, sir, to present the following resolutions; and I shall further ask that the House, at some future day, set apart some time for the consideration of appropriate memorial resolutions:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the members of the House of Representatives have heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. GEORGE S. HOUSTON, late Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama, and tender to his bereaved family their sincere sympathy and condolence.

Resolved, That, as a testimony of the respect they bear the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and accordingly (at one o'clock and forty-three minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 7, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WILLIAM SHARON, a Senator from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 673) to regulate applications for restoration to the active list of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1076) for the relief of Amanda M. Cook; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2769) to amend the act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, so as to extend it to the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Galveston.

The message also requested the return to the House of the bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following joint resolutions, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to correct an error in the act "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) for the relief of M. M. Herr.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, relative to the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Beaver, Pennsylvania, by the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting an estimate, amounting to $8,000, for collection and payment of bounty, prize-money, and other claims of colored soldiers and sailors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the medical director of the Department of the Missouri, suggesting that the act making appropriations for the subsistence of the Army for the current fiscal year be amended so as to authorize the selling of subsistence supplies to companies, detachments, and hospitals at cost prices, not including cost of transportation, upon the certificates of officers commanding companies or detachments or in charge of hospitals; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending legislation to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the title to the land upon which Fort Stockton, Texas, is situated; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of December 6, 1879, copies of all correspondence by letter or telegram between the Secretary of the Interior and N. C. Meeker, late Indian agent at White River agency, since the 1st of January, 1879; and also copies of all correspondence between the Secretary of the Interior and General Hatch, General Adams, the governor of Colorado, and Special Agent Pollock concerning the Ute Indians in Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, stating that in transmitting the correspondence with reference to the Ute Indians in Colorado, as called for by Senate resolution of December 8, 1879, he had retained two letters received from General Adams, the one concerning the testimony taken by the Ute Commission, and the other touching negotiations with the Utes in reference to their reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the petition of Charles C. Stockley and 88 others, citizens of Georgetown, Delaware, without reference to party affiliation, praying for the passage of a resolution providing for the abolition of the compulsory legal-tender power of the Treasury notes of the United States. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of George F. Brady and 35 others, citizens of Delaware City and New Castle, Delaware, praying for the repeal of the compulsory legal-tender power of United States Treasury notes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of Robert C. H. Denbow and 36 others, citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of Seth Smith and others, citizens of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the petition of J. D. Palmer and 51 others, citizens of the counties of Fillmore and Moore, Minnesota, praying that Congress will "refuse the continuation of the patent on the Cook evaporators and cane-mills now manufactured by the Blymer Company of Cincinnati, Ohio," alleging that in their judgment the extension of the patent would be greatly detrimental to the cane-growing interests of the State of Minnesota and the Northwestern States. I move its reference to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of George A. Robertson and others, citizens of Nebraska, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of William Solliday and others, citizens of Dawson County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of a law extending the provisions of what is popularly known as the "soldiers' additional eighty acres law" so as to include all the citizens who have taken only eighty acres as a homestead; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the citizens of Yankton, Dakota Territory, in favor of an appropriation of $25,000 by Congress for the improvement of the harbor at the city of Yankton and of the channel of the Missouri River in that vicinity; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of Stewart Mitchell and others, citizens living in the vicinity of Walnut Grove, Red River County, Texas, praying the extension of mail-route No. 31638 through to Clarksville, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, presented additional papers to accompany the bill (S. No. 111) for the relief of the city of Macon, Georgia; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of Marietta Mattison, of Oswego, New York, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the extension of a patent for improvements in machinery for packing flour; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of William J. Morris, of Jersey County, Illinois, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of Reese Lammey, of Maryland, praying for the passage of a law granting him a pension on account of services rendered by his late son, Captain John R. Lammey, Sixth Wisconsin Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John E. Wilson and 33 others, citizens of Cecil County, Maryland, soldiers who served in the Union Army during the late war, praying the passage of the bill known as the "equalization of bounties bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BALDWIN presented the petition of William E. Phillips and 46 others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Buhl, Ducharme & Co., and others, merchants of Detroit, Michigan, praying for the reduction of the specific duty on sheet-zinc; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of H. A. Hayden, president of the Jackson, Lansing and Saginaw Railroad Company, praying that the specific duty on steel rails shall be not to exceed $10 per ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 307) for the relief of L. C. Cantwell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 417) for the relief of John C. Comfort, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 24) for the relief of John S. Logan, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 212) for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William F. Shepard, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 952) for the relief of James Burke; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 953) for the relief of Kimberly Brothers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COKE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 954) to promote the immediate and rapid construction of the International and Great Northern Railroad of Texas from San Antonio, Texas, to the Rio Grande; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 955) granting a pension to William S. Fultz, of Muscatine County, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 956) granting a pension to John Hubbell, of Muscatine County, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 957) granting a pension to Charles Reed, of Muscatine County, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 958) granting a pension to Peter Gettert, of Muscatine County, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 959) granting a pension to Diedrick Blanck, of Muscatine County, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 960) for the relief of Marietta Mattison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 961) for the relief of Henry Head, of Quincy, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 962) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary here. I think that all bills for establishing United States courts have always gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. Of course I have no personal interest in the reference, but I think the bill had better go there.

Mr. LOGAN. The only reason why I ask its reference to the Committee on Territories is because a bill of like character was referred prior to this time to that committee and reported on, although the bill was not acted upon by Congress. For that reason I asked the reference of this bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I ought to move, Mr. President, as I do not see the chairman here, (although I am not in a majority of the committee, but I assume if it is not a political question I may make the motion,) to amend the motion of my friend so as to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, where I think it ought to go regularly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 963) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENDLETON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 964) to limit the time within which claims in behalf of or against the United States shall be prosecuted; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of D. T. Kirby; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAXEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 967) to extend the jurisdiction of the northern district of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 968) to equalize the price of lands between the Seminole and Creek tribes of Indians, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 56) authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 57) for the relief of Lewis Winters; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to give notice of an amendment which I intend to propose to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to Treasury notes. I ask to have it printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let the proposed amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add:

And said notes shall not be available for any of the reserves required to be kept by the national banks, but all such reserves shall be kept in coin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to be printed, I believe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENDLETON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 865) to provide for the investment of certain unclaimed pay and bounty moneys now in the Treasury of the United States, and to facilitate and encourage the education of the colored race in the several States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Jacob and Elizabeth Sener be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, to accompany Senate bill No. 354.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James Burke be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Julia E. Seeley be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there being no adverse report.

On motion of Mr. PENDLETON, (in behalf of Mr. THURMAN,) it was Ordered, That the papers of Mrs. Mary Hepperton be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MISSOURI RIVER IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. SAUNDERS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate such information as he may be in possession of regarding the condition of the Missouri River between Omaha and Plattsmouth, in Nebraska, and that such report include estimate of the probable expense of improving the navigation of said river between said points.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR HOUSTON.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the expenses incurred by the committee appointed to attend the funeral obsequies of the late Hon. George S. Houston be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was this committee appointed by the Senate? The sad event the resolution refers to occurred during the recess.

Mr. MORGAN. The committee was appointed by the Vice-President, and yesterday the action of the Vice-President was approved by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah! I did not know but that the resolution needed a little amendment as a mere technical thing. I think it is all right too.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair appointed the committee, assuming that his action would meet with the approval of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly. My only object was to see that there should be no technical difficulty at the Treasury. I think it is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair announced the fact and had it journalized.

The resolution was read the second time, considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND COMMERCE.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer a resolution, and ask that it be read, printed, and laid on the table.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to inquire as to the expediency of establishing an additional executive department of the Government, to be called the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, which shall embrace within its jurisdiction agriculture, domestic and foreign commerce, manufactures, mines and mining, public lands, geological and other surveys, railroads, and statistics; and that said committee report its conclusion by bill or otherwise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to say before the resolution passes from the Senate that I have long believed that such an organization of the Government as is proposed in the resolution would greatly promote the important industrial interests to which it refers. I shall take occasion at an early day, with the consent of the Senate, to make some remarks upon the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As the Senator from Minnesota, who has had long experience in both Houses of Congress, has introduced a resolution looking to the establishment of a department of agriculture and commerce, I wish to say that I agree with that Senator and believe that the country long since has demanded such a department. In fact I have had it in contemplation for some time to introduce a bill looking to the same object, and as the Senator has asked that his resolution lie upon the table so that he may make some remarks on it in future, I will introduce a bill and ask that it take the same course that his resolution will take.

The Senator from Minnesota comes from a district of our country that represents agriculture to a very great extent, and when we take into consideration that upon the crops, be they good or bad, the country shapes its course and business for the year, I think there is no subject that deserves the attention of Congress more than that of commerce and agriculture. It will be recollected that twenty or thirty years ago, from 1850 to 1860, our own vessels carried 75 per cent. or more of the commerce of the United States. To-day they carry less than 25 per cent. There is something wrong there, and I believe the attention of the country and Congress cannot at too early a day be called to the vast subject of agriculture and commerce.

Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce a bill, and I wish to have it lie on the table for the present, with a view to its taking the same course as the resolution of the Senator from Minnesota.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 966) to establish a department of agriculture and commerce; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CARPENTER. As I understand that the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from West Virginia propose soon to discuss this question, I shall esteem it a great favor if in that discussion they will point out what clause of the Federal Constitution gives Congress any power to establish an agricultural department or a mining department; what power Congress has over those two branches of industry more than it has over shoemaking and milling; and why the latter should not be embraced in that department, if such a department can be constructed.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the Senator that manufactures are embraced in my resolution. I suppose that general term includes shoemaking.

NEGRO EXODUS INVESTIGATION.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee appointed to investigate the exodus of negroes from the Southern to the Northern States be authorized to employ a clerk and such other attendants as may be necessary, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to the resolution, but I will say to my friend from Indiana that the term "other attendants" embraces a very large scope; and unless he wishes, as has been the rule, to confine it to a certain number, I would suggest to him to say what other attendants are needed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I can only say in reply that is not for me to state in advance what will be necessary on this subject; but I assure the Senator from West Virginia that he will not be disappointed in the effort of the committee to conduct its proceedings with strict economy.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is sufficient.

There being no objection, the resolution was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to take from the Calendar the bill (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what committee the bill comes from and how it gets here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment in line 11, after the word "semi-annually," to strike out the words "at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum" and insert "at the rate per centum which is required by treaty stipulation or by act of Congress, or, in cases where the rate is not stipulated, at 4 per cent.;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to deposit to the credit of the proper nation or tribe, in the Treasury of the United States, any and all sums belonging to the Indian trust fund now held or which may hereafter be received by him as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of various Indian tribes, whenever he is of the opinion that the best interests of the Indians will be promoted by such deposits in lieu of investments; and the United States shall pay interest thereon semi-annually at the rate per centum which is required by treaty stipulation or by act of Congress, or, in cases where the rate is not stipulated, at 4 per cent., from the respective dates of deposit; such payments to be made in the usual manner, as each may become due, without further appropriation by Congress.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Is there any report from the committee accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no written report accompanying the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It is something I do not understand from the reading of the bill.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will explain it to the Senator from Iowa with great pleasure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Ohio, seeing there was so much noise that it was impossible to hear the bill read, before he goes on to explain it, allow the bill and amendment to be again read, so that we can all hear them?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill and amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I should like to hear the explanation of the Senator from Ohio. I thought we were to hear the Senator from Ohio explain the condition of this matter.

Mr. PENDLETON. The bill is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs in accordance with a recommendation made both by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. The necessity for it exists in the fact that by the laws, as they have heretofore stood, the Secretary of the Interior is obliged to invest in bonds of the United States the funds which he may have belonging to the Indians. Some of those funds were invested in bonds bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. By law all these funds, where there is no express rate stipulated, are to be invested in bonds bearing interest at 5 per cent. It has so happened that the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds have been called in, and the Secretary of the Interior is left with these bonds on his hands and the interest stopped. He therefore has recommended, and I think very wisely, that the funds shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, inscribed there as a permanent loan under the law, and that interest at the rate stipulated in the treaty or law shall be paid without any annual appropriation. That is the intent of the bill and its provision.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator state what the funds are?

Mr. PENDLETON. I have here a list of the various funds held by the Secretary of the Interior. I should say, without pretending to give exactly accurate information, that there are funds belonging to thirty or forty different tribes under treaties made and laws passed at various periods in the past, by which funds have been set aside for the benefit of the Indians—funds arising from the sale of parts of their reservations or under treaty stipulations, whatever they may be.

Mr. CONKLING. Were all those funds invested in bonds?

Mr. PENDLETON. Not all of them; but originally they were to be invested at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in any bonds he saw fit. As the Senator probably remembers, a great many years ago a scandal arose from the fact that there was a defalcation in some of the bonds, and the Government of the United States lost a large amount of bonds that had been bought, not Government bonds or State bonds, but other bonds which were held in the Indian Department for their benefit.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Are all the funds now invested in Government bonds?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly most of them. I am not prepared to say that none others are, but I believe none others are. I have a volume of papers here, correspondence from the Secretary of the Interior, and the results of examination as to what these various funds are, and the rates of interest at which they were invested or were directed to be invested.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Fixed by treaty?

Mr. PENDLETON. Some of them fixed by treaty.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. And by law?

Mr. PENDLETON. And some of them fixed by law. The original bill sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs provided that all these funds should bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent.; but the committee thought that that was not a proper provision, but that the rate should be that which was prescribed by treaty or prescribed by law, and in case there were no provision as to the rate of interest, that it should be 4 per cent. This bill comes to the Senate with the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If it should so be that a portion of these funds now are not in Government bonds, what would become of those securities under this bill?

Mr. PENDLETON. The Secretary of the Interior would be at liberty to change the investment. The bill provides that this change shall be made whenever in his judgment it is thought best to do so. It may happen that some of these funds are invested in 4 per cent. bonds. It would not be necessary immediately to make a change in that case. Some of them were invested in 5 per cent. bonds, which were called in, and it was found that several hundred thousand dollars were upon his hands, and he had to reinvest in 4 per cent. bonds in order to prevent them lying there without producing any interest. It becomes necessary in a case like that, as the Senator can well see, that a special appropriation for the deficiency will have to be made.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. My inquiry looked to the possibility that some of the bonds might not be Government bonds, but such bonds as the Senator indicated the funds were formerly invested in. If any of them are there now what is to become of them?

Mr. PENDLETON. They can be sold and the money deposited in the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians; and that is the course that will be pursued.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to inquire if this is the same bill which was considered in the Senate, I believe, about a year ago?

Mr. PENDLETON. I have no knowledge on that point.

Mr. PADDOCK. At the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator from New York with the permission of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. It is substantially the same bill, except when that bill was before the Senate it was objected by Senators that it might be in violation of treaty stipulations, and one of the treaties was read showing that in some instances we had agreed to pay 6 per cent. interest. The bill before the Senate a year ago provided that in all cases 5 per cent. only should be paid, and the bill was amended, I believe, in accordance with the tenor of the provision now, that treaty stipulations should be adhered to where they had been made and were still in force.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will pardon me, did the bill thus amended pass the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. As amended, but it never passed the House. Now, if the Senator from Ohio will allow me——

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly; the Senator is more familiar than I am with the history of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand this bill it simply provides that where money comes into the Treasury, by the payment of bonds or otherwise, it shall be deposited in the Treasury and draw the rate of interest prescribed in the treaties with the several tribes, if a special rate is prescribed. There are some treaties where no rate is fixed, but in 1855 it was provided by law that where there was no special treaty stipulation the rate should be 5 per cent.; and in a number of treaties made since that time the rate has been fixed at 5 per cent. That law stands in full force; so that I think if this bill should pass we should be obliged to pay 5 per cent. interest upon all those treaty funds.

I wish to say in reply to my colleague, who made an inquiry with reference to other investments, that I do not understand this bill will apply to any money belonging to Indian tribes except that which is paid in in the regular course of bonds falling due. There is a large amount of bonds of the State of Arkansas and the State of Tennessee and of corporations in those States still held in trust by the Indian Bureau. I do not understand that those could be sold under the provisions of this bill; but the Government is regularly paying interest upon those bonds, as though the interest were paid to it regularly upon them, by making appropriations annually for the payment of the interest.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I ask him if it is not contemplated by the bill that all of the trust funds shall be placed to the credit of the Indians? Is not that the statement of the bill? I ask the Senator how he excepts the great number of State bonds, as I find here, the bonds of Arkansas, Tennessee, Florida, Virginia, and various others? How does he except them under the language of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not except them under the language of the bill. I only state that where the Government now holds bonds, for example of the State of Arkansas, it is paying by regular appropriation the interest upon those bonds just as though the interest was regularly paid into the Treasury, although not one dollar is paid. But this bill only contemplates, as I understand it, that where money is paid in on account of these bonds it shall be simply passed to the credit of the Indian Bureau in the Treasury, and not paid.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa another question, as he is familiar with this matter. As to the State bonds held in trust for the Chickasaws and Cherokees and other Indians, did the Indians invest their money in those bonds by their own option, or was it provided by treaty stipulation that the money should be put in that form?

Mr. ALLISON. A number of the treaties provide that these investments shall be made in the discretion of the Government. That discretion was exercised by the purchase of worthless bonds, and the Government has continuously paid the interest on those bonds regularly to the Indian tribes for more than twenty years, or for fifteen years at any rate.

Mr. TELLER. If that is in the discretion of the Government and the Government made a bad speculation, I should not feel very bad if the Government lost. If, however, it was provided for by treaty and it was understood and agreed that the Government should with this money buy a certain class of bonds, then the Indians ought to lose if the investment turns out unprofitable.

Mr. ALLISON. There were no treaties made with the Indians by which certain bonds were directed to be purchased; but the Government was made trustee of these funds and invested them in bonds that proved to be worthless. The Government has constantly paid the interest on those bonds from that time.

Mr. TELLER. If the Government does pay the interest, under those circumstances, there will be no great harm done, I guess.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Iowa adverted to an act which provided that whenever a treaty was blank as to the rate of interest, that rate should be 5 per cent. When was that act passed?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not remember the exact date of it. It was probably about 1855.

Mr. CONKLING. My recollection is that it was at least fifteen years ago, I think more.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps more.

Mr. CONKLING. Is the Senator advised whether treaties have been made with Indians since, in which the rate of interest is left blank?

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot answer definitely, but I can say that there are such treaties.

Mr. CONKLING. Assuming that to be so, I wish the Senator would explain the effect of the words: "Or in cases where the rate is not stipulated, at 4 per cent. from the respective dates of deposit." What is to be the operation of this act upon a treaty which names no rate of interest, but which was made leaving that rate blank after an act of Congress had been passed declaring that in all such cases it should be 5 per cent.? What is the reason, in other words, that, in effect, that is not a treaty stipulation? If an act of Congress declares that there being no rate named the rate shall be held and deemed 5 per cent., and a treaty has been made naming no rate, why is it not, in effect, a stipulation in the treaty that the rate shall be 5 per cent.? and if so, upon what principle is it, if we intend to observe treaty stipulations, that we propose this morning to declare that in all such cases hereafter the rate shall be not 5 per cent., but 4 per cent.?

Mr. ALLISON. I should say that in the case indicated by the Senator the rate would be 5 per cent., because the law, a law now in force, prescribes that the rate shall be 5; and this bill preserves that law.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend would not be willing, I think, to put a statute upon the book which he intended to treat in that way, because then the words which I have read to him would mean nothing: "or in cases where the rate is not stipulated" in the treaty——

Mr. ALLISON. Or by law.

Mr. CONKLING. "At 4 per centum." Now the Senator says he would commit to the court or somebody else to construe this language and to say whether, in spite of a statute which on its face certainly does by implication repeal or attempts to repeal a prior statute, the prior statute does not still live and prevail over this. The Senator says he thinks it does. I will not differ with him, because I do not think that it behooves a Senator perhaps to express an opinion on such a point when with the bill before us we can make it absolutely certain so that there will be no possibility of mistake and no need of the expression. If the Senator thinks that the court in construing this act would make the exception, and he means that the court shall make the exception, then I submit that manifestly we ought to adopt terms apt and appropriate to signify that intention, and not pass words which will leave a cloud of uncertainty which the court may dissipate if it can, and the Senator thinks it will, in a particular way. If I were going to express an opinion, I should think there would be a great deal of doubt about it.

Mr. ALLISON. For myself I should be entirely willing that the latter provision should be stricken out.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to interfere with the bill; the Senator knows more about it than I do. I say this only by way of making a suggestion, knowing that if there be anything in it Senators instructed in the subject will make such provision as they think wise.

Mr. PENDLETON. The Senator can move to strike out those words.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Iowa said that this bill passed the Senate, and I thought he was right. On reflection I am satisfied he was mistaken about that. It came up in the Senate and was discussed; attention was called to the points which have been adverted to this morning; and the bill was recommitted to the committee. The Senate never voted on it; and it came back afterward with this proposed amendment; so that it has never received the action of the Senate except that the recommittal of the bill, as Senators will remember, took place because of the kind of objection which we are at this moment considering. It was recommitted because the Senate, as far as it expressed any judgment, expressed the opinion that nothing should be done to unsettle or disparage treaty stipulations or the faith of the Government in observing them; and now it seems to me, looking at this bill only for a moment that the words to which I have called attention would appear still to infringe upon that idea.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind the Senator from Ohio that there is a special order for to-day, being the bill (S. No. 206) relative to the transportation of animals, which is now entitled to precedence.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will this bill take a long time?

Mr. PENDLETON. I did not suppose it would. I am not in a condition, however, to say whether it will take a long time or not. I did not suppose originally it would give rise to any discussion.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am willing to wait a while.

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope it will be finished within a very few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be continued under consideration without prejudice to the special order, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it may be desirable in order that we can fully understand this business, to see what the state of the law is about these trust funds. On the 10th of June, 1876, Congress passed an act upon the subject, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all stocks, bonds, or other securities or evidences of indebtedness now held by the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the benefit of certain Indian tribes shall, within thirty days from the passage of this act, be transferred to the Treasurer of the United States, who shall become the custodian thereof; and it shall be the duty of said Treasurer to collect all interest falling due on said bonds, stocks, &c., and deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States, and to issue certificates of deposit therefor, in favor of the Secretary of the Interior, as trustee for various Indian tribes. And the Treasurer of the United States shall also become the custodian of all bonds and stocks which may be purchased for the benefit of any Indian tribe or tribes after the transfer of funds herein authorized, and shall make all purchases and sales of bonds and stocks authorized by treaty stipulations or by acts of Congress when requested so to do by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That nothing in this act shall in any manner impair or affect the supervisory and appellate powers and duties in regard to Indian affairs which may now be vested in the Secretary of the Interior as trustee for various Indian tribes, except as to the custody of said bonds and the collection of interest thereon as hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will be seen, Mr. President, that the depositary of all these trust funds is already the Treasurer of the United States, who is to invest and reinvest according to the provisions of the various treaty stipulations, which are one thing as to one tribe and another thing as to another, and so on. That is all right and as it should be, and it has been done, so that the Secretary of the Interior now has not the lawful custody of any of these trust funds except those that come in by way of income, which is to be expended by him according to the provisions of the respective treaties. As to some of them the money is to be paid over bodily to the Indians, and as to others, a part is devoted to schools and whatever it may be,—various special uses named in the treaties.

Now then the effect of this bill will be evidently one of two things, or perhaps both, but probably chiefly this first one that I name, if it means anything as of course it does; and that is, that the income, being the only sums that the Secretary of the Interior now receives at all, is to be deposited to the credit of these respective Indian tribes and is to draw interest. As income, it is not entitled to draw interest because the Secretary of the Interior is bound by the treaty and by this act of Congress, which merely transfers the management in a certain sense and does not change anything else, to pay the income, the annual interest over to the tribe, or to pay it for the use of the tribe, according to the provisions of the particular treaty. Therefore, so far as this bill relates to the interest that is received on these stocks, bonds, &c., a list of which now in the Treasury I have in my hand, it is a thing that we ought not to do. The United States ought not to undertake to pay interest on these temporary deposits which are merely the interest belonging to the Indians and which by treaty stipulation we were not bound to pay interest on at all, but only to pay over through the Secretary of the Interior to the Indian tribes or for its benefit according to the stipulations of the respective treaties. That is the way it seems to me.

Then if this bill is not supposed to refer to income (as it clearly must in point of law because it says the Secretary of the Interior shall deposit "any and all sums belonging to the Indian trust funds now held or which may hereafter be received by him as Secretary of the Interior" in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the proper tribe and that these deposits shall draw interest,) what is to be its effect? These sums ought not to draw interest at all, as it appears to me, where they are made up merely of the annual income which we have not agreed to pay interest upon but which we have agreed to pay over through the Secretary of the Interior to the proper parties or for their benefit according to the treaty. If this means, as it seems to do in point of law, to provide for something in the nature of an investment of accumulating interest, I do not see what obligation we are under to do it. If it means, on the other hand, or further that these trust funds, as the principal falls due on these investments, instead of being reinvested according to the treaty which in a given case I will suppose to be to require the United States through the Secretary of the Interior, or the Treasurer of the United States now, to invest them in the best securities that he can so as to make the most out of them possible by way of income for the use of the beneficiary, then is it right to say by an act of Congress and without the consent of the Indians that we will absorb this fund ourselves and, as the Senator from New York has said, where a special rate has not been agreed upon that we will invest arbitrarily at 4 per cent. because we choose to borrow it ourselves at the lowest possible rate of interest? Would that be right? The duty of a trustee plainly is, even if he is the trustee of an Indian, to do the best he can for the benefit of his beneficiary; and if he can invest in a good State bond at 5 per cent. instead of investing in a United States bond at 4 per cent. he ought to do it; if he can invest in a United States bond at 4 per cent., instead of leaving the money in the Treasury at 4 per cent., and that bond has a long time to run and is going to produce a premium, every principle of equitable law as well as every principle of morality will require him, whether he was the Treasurer of the United States or a private trustee, to make that investment according to the spirit of the treaty in the bonds of the United States in that case that may have twenty or thirty years to run so that his constituent can get the benefit of the value of a long investment as a corresponding advantage against the low rate of interest that is named on the face of the bond.

This bill provides in simple and specific terms, apparently, that all sums which hereafter fall due are to be kept in the Treasury of the United States in lieu of investment, and where the treaty does not provide specifically for the rate of interest, then only the sum of 4 per cent. shall be paid, though it may not be five years, it may not be three, or even one year, before the rate of interest for perfectly immaculate securities which we are bound to invest in for these unprotected persons will be 5 per cent. or more, and though the money could honestly and readily be made for them at that rate. Is it right to tie this up absolutely and say we will keep this money ourselves and pay only 4 per cent. on it, without the benefit of long time to run, without the benefit of the advantage of the value of premium, &c., that the trust fund might get? That is a question which I think ought to be considered.

Then there is another suggestion that I should like to make to the committee while I am upon the subject of the form of this bill. Of course that can be readily corrected if there is anything in it. The fourth line says that these sums, whatever they are, shall be deposited "to the credit of the proper nation or tribe." That makes "the proper nation or tribe" on the books of the Treasury the person and the only person that can draw the money; and in a given case, the treaty with the proper nation or tribe provides not that it shall be paid over to the council of the Indians, the headmen or whatever they are, but it shall be paid out by the Secretary of the Interior for certain special purposes for their benefit, and yet you have tied it up on the books of the Treasury, so that the Secretary of the Interior cannot draw a cent of the money, cannot devote it to the uses the treaty had provided, and you have merely left it to the mercy of agents, the headmen of Indians who are somewhat thick around Washington sometimes, to take and do whatever happens to be done with it, as we know what is done with Indian moneys sometimes. It will be seen that the act of 1876 provided against that, and that the income of these moneys should be paid over to the Secretary of the Interior in trust to be devoted to the purposes and in the manner the treaties provided. If this bill is to pass, I suggest that it would be well to make the same provision for this income that is made for the income under the act of 1876.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill if there is a written report accompanying it.

Mr. PENDLETON. There is none.

Mr. GARLAND. About a year ago, Mr. President, a bill similar to this was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs—a bill I believe that had passed the House—and at that time, as the RECORD will show, the various questions which have been raised this morning were discussed pretty much at length, besides several others of very great importance, and this subject, though apparently this morning when the bill was read was of little importance, grows in importance as we discuss it, it grows heavier as we handle it.

At the last discussion, about a year ago, I think, the question as to the good faith of the trustee and what he was compelled to do—the same point now raised by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Vermont—was considered; and when the history of these various investments was produced and gone into, finding that they had been in this kind of stock and the other kind of stock, and at this rate of interest and the other rate of interest, finally some Senator, I do not recollect who now, stated the proposition that the United States ought not to be compelled in any instance to pay on an investment of this sort more than the rate of 4 per cent. Some Senators insisted that she should not be compelled to pay exceeding 3 per cent. interest The main difficulties which at that time presented themselves to my mind from the remarks made by the Senator from Texas who sits to my right [Mr. MAXEY] have been obviated by this bill, but at last taking it altogether we are now disposing of the investments of these people, I will not say in an ex parte manner, but somehow to suit ourselves, and we are not dealing with them under this bill as we should. They should have some voice in this matter. We should not pass a law here on our own motion limiting them in this manner or the other. We should not make their investments any better than they were; and we should not make them any worse.

A very serious question is presented by this bill, whether the United States should be compelled to pay as a constant investment 4 per cent. Other questions that have been raised so well by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Vermont deserve consideration. At the time of the discussion to which I have adverted I had traced to a considerable extent the history of these investments and the different treaties and the different laws on the subject, which I have not now at my desk, but I have it at my room; and as the Senator from Ohio who reports this bill sees at once many questions that are presented by it, I hope that he at least will agree to let it lie over until to-morrow or some day when we can look into it as it should be, and, if possible, not too late to give us the benefit of a written report upon it.

The more we consider this subject the greater grow the questions involved. The Senator from Iowa, who reported the bill last year, recollects a great many difficulties that were then suggested, and the bill came in then apparently as free of objection as this bill. I make the suggestion for a postponement now because I am not prepared to enter into the discussion; and in view of the statements which have been made I think the bill should be passed over until it can be considered a little more thoroughly.

Mr. PENDLETON. I certainly for myself (and I have no doubt I can speak for the members of the committee) am entirely willing that the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas shall be adopted, and the bill laid over to any time that is agreeable to the Senate or indefinitely that it may be called up by myself or any other gentleman.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire, however, before that course is taken to say a word or two in relation to some remarks that have been made.

The law of the 10th of June, 1876, to which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] called the attention of the Senate, seems to me to provide rather for a mere physical custody of the bonds and stocks than to give to the Secretary of the Treasury or to the Treasurer of the United States any control over them except so far as is necessary to their preservation. That law speaks of the Treasurer as the custodian of the bonds; the Treasurer is to collect the interest, and he is to give a certificate of deposit to the Secretary of the Interior showing that he has the custody of the bonds, and showing also that he has collected periodically the interest upon them; and there is an express stipulation that if any change is made in the investment, any sale or purchase, that it shall be done by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the request and by the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. And there is a further stipulation that no provision of the law shall in any way interfere with the control of the Interior Department over the funds provided by treaty or law for the benefit of the Indians.

I desire further to say that the intention of the committee was as far as possible to guard the rights of the Indians. It was not their intention to give an effect such as the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] thought might arise from the bill—that of providing that where a law had prescribed that the blank in the treaty should be supplied by interest at 5 per cent. yet the fund should hereafter bear only 4. I hardly think the bill would bear that interpretation.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend will pardon me. I did not suppose that was the design; I only called the Senator's attention to the possibility of that effect.

Mr. PENDLETON. I did not misunderstand the Senator on that question; and I wanted to enter ex gratia a disclaimer of any intent of that kind on the part of the committee. Their desire was to guard as closely as they could the rights of the Indians in these funds and to provide that the funds should be kept safe against all fluctuations of bonds and stocks and that the interest provided by treaty or provided by law in the absence of treaty stipulation should faithfully hereafter be carried out.

I desire also before I take my seat, Mr. President, to have read at the Secretary's desk the representation of the Cherokee Indians praying for the passage of this bill, and stating the reasons why they desire it shall pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, 1879.

SIR: We desire to present through you to the Senate our prayer for speedy favorable action on the bill submitted to you by the honorable the Secretary of the Interior in reference to placing the funds belonging to Indians, as inscribed debt in the Treasury of the United States bearing 5 per cent. interest. As will be seen by a report from the Secretary, which accompanied draught of bill, the greater portion of the Indian funds are already invested in that way, at that rate of interest, and that has really been the policy, and the purchase of stocks of fluctuating value the exception. As Indian nations cannot profit by the rise of stocks, so should they not be subject to loss on account of their fall. Reductions of the principal of the permanent funds to pay premiums has no authority in law, and is in plain violation of treaty. So far as the rate of interest is concerned, the agreement when the investments were made was not less than 5 per cent., the act of 1834 regulating it. The treaty being made subject to the law, and was of the nature of an agreement, that rate was also recognized by many treaties, and by all the laws under which the bulk of the Indian funds are already placed in inscribed debt in the Treasury. We do not think you will be disposed by an arbitrary act to change this existing status where we have no voice in this reduction of the value of our property.

Again, while the Government sells bonds for 4 per cent. she by law exempts them from all taxation, general, State, or local. It is justly estimated that this exemption is worth at least 2 per cent., and it is a usual correct financial estimate to place the interest of this character of investments at 6 per cent. when compared with other investments. Of this exemption we have no benefits, and can have none, and this reduction is forced on us by giving us really less than to the citizens of the States. In addition we would add that as the greater portion of these funds are permanent investments for benevolent institutions or educational interests, your honorable bodies ought not thus to cripple and weaken them.

Very respectfully,

W. P. ADAIR,
DANIEL H. ROSS,
Cherokee Delegation.

Hon. RICHARD COKE,
Chairman Indian Committee, United States Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the bill goes over I wish to say a single word in regard to the law now in force, and in response to what was said by the Senator from Vermont. He seems to think that we ought to give the Secretary of the Interior the discretion to buy just such State bonds or municipal bonds as he may think will afford the best rate of interest and be the best investment. We tried that during some former administrations, and we found that investments good at the time they were made proved utterly worthless ten or fifteen years afterward, and the policy of the Government has been for many years to invest these trust funds wholly in United States bonds. The difficulty is that we have now a statute requiring the Government to invest in stocks bearing 5 per cent. interest, and those stocks cannot be purchased except at a premium, and the Indians affected by these trust funds object to the Government paying large premiums for 5 per cent. bonds. Hence these laws and treaties are in the way, and for that reason this bill is proposed by the Interior Department. I am entirely willing, of course, that it shall go over, so that every Senator may have a chance to investigate it thoroughly.

Mr. TELLER. Before the bill goes over I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that under this bill, as was suggested by the Senator from Vermont, the unpaid interest in the hands of the proper authorities will also go into this permanent fund, which ought not to be. There is now in the hands of the proper authorities a large amount of money due to Indians in Colorado if they have any right to it at all, if they have not forfeited their treaty rights—a large amount of money that ought to have been paid to them years ago. That is held now, and that would go to their credit as a permanent fund and interest be paid on it. The bill ought to be so amended that nothing but the principal shall go in. The unpaid interest that may be in the Treasury waiting to be paid out should not go in, but I think as the bill stands it would go in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, subject to the call of the Senator from Ohio.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, transmitting a draught of a bill submitted by the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia to provide for the reclamation of the marshes in the harbor of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A message was also received from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of December 3, 1879, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior showing what payments have been made to the Ute Indians in accordance with the fourth article of an agreement made with them September 3, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 8th ultimo, all correspondence concerning the location and continuance of mining camps on the Ute Indian reservation in Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 8th ultimo, copies of correspondence relative to the trespasses of white settlers on the Ute Indian reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF ANIMALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the special order, being the bill (S. No. 206) relative to the transportation of animals.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very important bill. I trust the Senator from New Jersey will not press it on the consideration of the Senate to-day. I should like to look over it myself. Perhaps it can be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have no objection to the bill lying over. I supposed every Senator was sufficiently advised as to the provisions of the bill, which has been pending for a long time. It was discussed during the extra session, and considered and amended.

Mr. ALLISON. I should not like to have the bill voted on to-day.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have already said all I propose to say on the merits of the measure. If the Senator desires to have the bill laid over until to-morrow, I have no objection to its being the special order for to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the bill will go over until to-morrow without prejudice. To this the Chair hears no objection.

JOHN GAULT, JR.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senate to take from the Calendar Senate bill No. 105.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 105) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late a major of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the payment to John Gault, jr., late a major in the Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, of the pay and allowances of a major of infantry from August 16, 1862, to April 15, 1863, deducting therefrom any moneys paid him for any other position held during that period.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. BECK. I was about to say that the bill passed the Senate unanimously at the last Congress, and was reported unanimously by the committee of the House, and is again reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs through the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY.]

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY December 9, 1879:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 105) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late major of the Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, respectfully report as follows:

The bill provides for pay and allowances to said Gault as major of infantry from August 16, 1862, to April 15, 1863, deducting therefrom any moneys paid him for any other position held during that period. Major Gault presents a commission from the Commonwealth of Kentucky as major Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, to take rank as such from November 6, 1861, yet it is quite clear that this was a floating commission, and the proceedings in respect to the commissions of Colonel Boone, Lieutenant-Colonel Johnson, and Major Gault were unusually irregular even in those days of conspicuous irregularity. (See communication of Adjutant-General Townsend, United States Army, on file in this case, dated March 23, 1872, namely:)

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"March 23, 1872.

"Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

"This case has been before the Department several times. The facts, in Gault's own words, appear to be as follows:

"'On October 6, 1861, a Colonel Boone was authorized by General Anderson to raise a regiment. On this authority Boone authorized A. Y. Johnson as lieutenant-colonel and myself as major. We proceeded at once to the duties, and on November 6, 1861, was ordered on active service by General Sherman. Remained in active service until January 7, 1862, when at New Haven, Kentucky, we held an election for field officers, which resulted in the election of Boone as colonel, Johnson as lieutenant-colonel, and myself as major; but when Boone went to Frankfort, Kentucky, they informed him that he could not draw pay as colonel, and if he was commissioned colonel, Johnson and myself would get the pay, and he would get none until the regiment was full. They then issued commissions to Boone as lieutenant-colonel, and Johnson as major, and left me to fill up the regiment.'

"The official records do not show that he was engaged in recruiting and other services until a vacancy occurred for him as major, when, on April 15, 1863, he was mustered in that grade.

"The records of this office show that no vacancy existed for Gault as major until March 14, 1863, the date of acceptance of the resignation of Major A. Y. Johnson, of that regiment; further, although Gault appears on the return of regiment for January, 1863, (the first which bears his name,) his name is not borne on any roll of field and staff prior to March and April, 1863.

"Copies of letters from this office giving adverse decisions in this case, dated December 30, 1862, and March 27, 1863, together with indorsements of August 5 and November 18, 1862, are herewith.

"The complications in the case have arisen from the contest for place, and such contests were numerous during the rebellion.

"E. D. TOWNSEND,
"Adjutant-General."

This plan of making a man colonel if that suits, and lieutenant-colonel if that don't suit, and so on, is revelation to the committee supposed to be conversant with the methods, regular and irregular, resorted to during the war.

It appears, however, that Lieutenant-Colonel Johnson was captured July 12, 1863, and Colonel Boone, August 12, 1862, and remained prisoners until exchanged in February, 1863, when, very shortly after, Johnson resigned.

It is also clear that Major Gault was put on duty as major by the general commanding United States forces in Kentucky, by an order dated August 16, 1862, and did perform those duties in command of the regiment, both field officers being prisoners as aforesaid. The order of assignment is as follows:

"Special Orders No. 30.

"HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES IN KENTUCKY,
"Louisville, August 16, 1862.

"[Extract.]

* * * * * * *

"Major John Gault, of the Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, is hereby ordered to report to Colonel J. D. Bruce at Bowling Green. He will take command of the battalion of his regiment at that post.

* * * * * * *

"By command of Brigadier-General Boyle.

"H. C. McDOWELL, A. A. G."

He continued thus to serve as a field officer till his actual muster, April 15, 1863.

The committee has examined carefully the report of the House committee, as follows:

"[House report No. 477, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

"Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 4287:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of John Gault, jr., asking pay for services as major in the volunteer service, submit the following report:

"It appears from the memorial and evidence filed in its support that the Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry was organized in defense of the Union on the 8th day of October, 1861, under the authority of General Robert Anderson, then in command of the Department of the Cumberland.

"That John Gault, jr., assisted in the raising and organizing such regiment, and was elected the major thereof; that the regiment, before it was filled up so as to entitle it to its full quota of field officers, went upon duty by command of Brigadier-General W. T. Sherman, who had assumed command of that department on the 6th day of November, 1861.

"That the claimant attended upon such regiment, assuming and performing voluntarily the duties of major of such regiment, and so continued to discharge the duties until his muster as major, which did not occur until April 15, 1863, and from which last date the claimant has received pay only.

"That the claimant, though performing the duty voluntarily, did so upon the understanding and belief that the authority had been given by the War Department to muster a full quota of field and staff officers for the volunteer regiments in Kentucky, without regard to their being below the minimum.

"The evidence in support of the claim does not show any recognition of Major Gault as an officer of the United States until August 16, 1862, when, by Special Orders No. 30, headquarters United States forces in Kentucky, by command of Brigadier-General Boyle, the claimant, John Gault, jr., as major of the Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, by name, was assigned to the command of the battalion of his regiment.

"All the prior services performed do not of themselves imply any knowledge on the part of Government officers having authority that in issuing orders to or receiving the services of the regiment they were using, directing, or receiving service from Major Gault, but were incidental to orders issued to and service done by the regimental organization, irrespective of the person holding or claiming to hold the office of major.

"On the 7th of November, 1862, by Special Orders No. 77, headquarters United States forces, Bowling Green, Kentucky, Major Gault was detailed by name for duty on board of survey; and from thence until he was in fact mustered, April 15, 1863, he continued discharging his duties, recognized by the military authorities of the United States, and in good faith believing he was entitled to and would be recompensed therefor by the Government.

"That a portion of the time in which he was so serving the Government he was in full command of his regiment, and the only field officer with it; the colonel being detached and the lieutenant-colonel being a prisoner.

"That the delay in his muster and the commencement of the allowance of pay to the claimant grew out of the fact that the regiment was below minimum strength, and when the claimant could have been mustered, the officer who nominally held the position the claimant in fact filled was in prison, and could not be mustered out so that Major Gault could be mustered in.

"Your committee are of opinion, upon these facts, that in justice and equity, as well as upon principles governing common-law liability, from the date when the Government knowingly accepted and availed itself of the services of Major Gault, he supposing in good faith that in the rendition of such service the Government was bound to and would repay him, with the pay and allowances of the grade in which his service was rendered and accepted, the claimant is entitled to receive the pay and allowances of a major of infantry; and report herewith a bill allowing John Gault, jr., the pay and allowances of a major of infantry from August 16, 1862, to April 15, 1863, and recommend that the same do pass."

Whatever irregularity there may have been in the issuance of commissions, Gault is not responsible for it. He could not claim or exercise the rank of major while the duly commissioned major was with the regiment, yet both Boone and Johnson, the proper field officers, and, as the committee think, lieutenant-colonel and major, were captured. The regiment or battalion, whichever it was, was without a field officer. The commander of the United States forces then did, August 16, 1862, recognizing the fact that Gault held a commission as major, order him to duty in that capacity, and he did perform those duties, no one questioning his right.

It seems, therefore, in justice and equity, he should be paid for his services; and the committee therefore report back said bill without amendment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill whether Major Gault was, before he was elected major, a captain, or whether he was simply a citizen in the formation of the regiment, and, therefore, held no other military office?

Mr. BECK. I am not familiar with the previous history of the case. The Senator from Texas who made the report had all the papers, and knows a great deal more about it than I do.

The Senator from Vermont will observe that Mr. Gault is not allowed anything for his service prior to the 16th of August, 1862, when in fact by order of the commanding general he was made major of that regiment. From that time on the regularity of his action is fully recognized, as I think the report clearly shows. Prior to that date, I am not able to answer any question about the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the only point about it would be this: Supposing this gentleman had been captain and captain at the top of the list, if his colonel and lieutenant-colonel, there being no major, had left the command of the regiment for any cause, he would succeed to the command as the oldest captain. Now, then, if in all other cases where similar accidents of war made it necessary for an inferior officer to perform the duties of a superior one, that inferior officer was paid the pay of the higher office the duties of which he was performing, clearly this gentleman ought to be paid also; but if other inferior officers being obliged to command in a higher grade on account of the casualties of war have not been allowed upon the general principles of law or justice the higher pay, then this gentleman ought to take the same fate as the others. If, on the other hand, he was a simple citizen who had been elected, joining this regiment, to the office of major in the first instance, and performed its duties as it is said he did, then clearly he ought to be paid. I should like to know what the practice was in reference to captains and other inferior officers who performed the duties of higher grades, as to pay.

Mr. MAXEY. The report in the case as it has come before the Senate was submitted by myself on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs. There is a large record accompanying the case. I went through it with great care. My recollection of the point made by the Senator from Vermont is this: that under the authority of the governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, which I believe has always been exercised by him, permission was given to these field officers, Boone and Johnson and the claimant Gault, to raise a regiment. They went on for the purpose of recruiting this regiment. Unless they recruited up to ten companies it was not a regiment. They failed to get as many as ten companies, but got enough to make a battalion. Boone went to get his commission and could not get it because he had not raised the full quota. The matter stood in that way until at New Haven, on the Louisville and Nashville road, John Morgan made a raid and captured both Boone and Johnson. That being done on the 16th of August, 1862, the commander of the United States forces issued an order directing John Gault, by the title of major, to take command of the regiment. He did take command of the regiment, and did continue in command of it from that time on until the 15th of April, 1863, or the date fixed in the bill when he was mustered out. It is in proof that he commanded the regiment without any complaint from anybody. Everybody recognized him. He performed the service, and he has not got the pay. That is the only point in the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then as I understand this gentleman did not hold any other military rank of any kind?

Mr. MAXEY. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then he ought to be paid.

Mr. MAXEY. He held a commission from the governor of Kentucky, and was put on duty under that commission with the consent of everybody and by the order of the commander of the forces. Therefore I think the claim is just.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is also, because the question of an inferior officer performing the duties of a higher grade does not arise in this case.

Mr. MAXEY. That does not arise in this case. He went on under his commission and was assigned to the command.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is satisfactory.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DODDRIDGE & DAVIS.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill No. 2803. The only object of the bill is to authorize the issue of a duplicate for a draft lost in transmission through the mail. The bill fully guards the Government.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2803) for the relief of Doddridge & Davis. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Doddridge & Davis, bankers, of Corpus Christi, Texas, $1,827.89 in lieu of check No. 45923 on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, dated the 15th of October, 1878, payable to Messrs. Doddridge, Davis & Caden, or order, and signed by E. B. Atwood, captain and assistant quartermaster, brevet major United States Army, which check, it is claimed, was indorsed by Doddridge, Davis & Caden to Doddridge & Davis, and by them, Doddridge & Davis, indorsed, but lost in transmission by mail to the Marine National Bank of the city of New York, was never received by the last-named bank, and was never paid. The Secretary of the Treasury is first to be satisfied that the check has not been paid; and further, that Doddridge & Davis are to execute a bond of indemnity to the United States, with sufficient sureties, against the claim of the payees in, or the indorsees of, the draft, or the claim of any person or persons in possession of or claiming the same; and also to fully indemnify the United States against all loss and damages in the premises. And the Treasury Department of the United States is prohibited from paying the lost check to any person.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. MAXEY. The report shows the facts fully, and I will state to the Senator that the evidence in my hand now fully sustains the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. MAXEY on the 16th of December, 1879:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2803) for the relief of Doddridge & Davis, respectfully submit the following report:

The relief proposed is to authorize the issuance of duplicate of draft No. 45923, drawn by E. B. Atwood, captain and assistant quartermaster, October 15, 1878, to order of Doddridge, Davis & Caden, on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, for the sum of $1,827.89, and indorsed by Doddridge, Davis & Caden to Doddridge & Davis. This draft was alleged to have been lost in transmission through the mail to the Marine National Bank of the city of New York, and was never received and never paid. The facts are sufficiently set forth in the report of the House Committee on Military Affairs, and said report is hereby adopted, as follows:

"Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred House bill No. 2277, for the relief of Doddridge & Davis, bankers, of Corpus Christi, Texas, on account of the loss of a quartermaster's check, beg leave to report:

"It appears from the certificate of Captain E. B. Atwood, assistant quartermaster United States Army, dated at San Antonio, Texas, February 10, 1879, that on the 15th of October, 1878, he, as such assistant quartermaster, issued, in favor of Messrs. Doddridge, Davis & Caden, check No. 45923, on assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, for the sum of $1,827.89, on account of Army transportation; also, from the affidavit of T. P. Rivera, cashier of the bank of claimants, Doddridge & Davis, that, on the 21st day of October, 1878, he, as such cashier, received from the firm of Doddridge, Davis & Caden said check, which was duly indorsed by said Doddridge & Davis, and mailed to the Marine National Bank of New York on the day the same was received as aforesaid; that said Marine National Bank gave advice of the non-receipt of said check, and payment of the same was stopped at the office of the assistant treasurer in New York; also, from the affidavit of John T. Murphy, bookkeeper of said firm of Doddridge, Davis & Caden, that said firm, in due course of business, on the 21st day of October, 1878, received and duly indorsed said check to said Doddridge & Davis; also, from the affidavit of John D. Fish, cashier of the Marine National Bank of the city of New York, that Doddridge & Davis, of Corpus Christi, Texas, 'keep, and have kept, an open account with and at the said Marine National Bank of the city of New York since and prior to the 15th day of October, A. D. 1878; that no such credit has been made to their account as is hereinafter described, to wit,'" (here follows a description of the check above referred to;) "and that said check he (deponent) believes to have been sent to said bank (referring to said Marine Bank) through the United States mail by said firm of Doddridge & Davis, and to have been lost in transit thereto; and from the letter of the assistant treasurer United States at New York, under date of June 17, 1879, it appears the check in question has not been paid.

"Your committee, from the evidence before it, being fully satisfied that the claim for $1,827.89 is just and unpaid, respectfully report the accompanying bill for the payment of the same, and recommend its passage."

The House bill is drawn in compliance with section 3646 of the Revised Statutes, and provides for bond of indemnity, with sufficient sureties, against claim of payees, indorsers, or any other person in possession or claiming the same, and to indemnify the United States against all loss and damage in the premises, with provision against payment of the lost check, and passed the House December 12, 1879. Wherefore, the committee reports the bill back without amendment, and recommends its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire what is the difficulty, under the section of the Revised Statutes referred to in the report, in these gentlemen or the Marine Bank, if that was the one to which the draft was indorsed, getting a duplicate?

Mr. MAXEY. Section 3646 of the Revised Statutes referred to in the report authorizes the proper officers of the United States Government on whom a draft is drawn to issue a duplicate in case of loss, provided the draft does not exceed in amount $1,000; but where it exceeds $1,000 it is not in the power of the proper department to issue a duplicate, and hence it becomes necessary to get relief by special act of Congress. In this case the papers which I hold in my hand show that the parties did make application, and that the Quartermaster-General declined to issue a duplicate because the draft being for more than $1,000 it was not in his power to issue a duplicate, and the only relief therefore must be had through an act of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is correct. Was this check indorsed by Doddridge & Davis in blank, or was it indorsed payable to the order of the Marine Bank?

Mr. MAXEY. To the order of the Marine Bank.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The report did not state whether it was a blank indorsement or not.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion for a moment. There are a number of bills reported which we can act upon. It is only two o'clock. We can have an executive session afterward.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that we have a large number of cases to consider on the executive calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the yeas and nays on the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 38, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Allison,	Coke,	Jonas,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 7, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct the Journal. On page 4 of the RECORD, I am recorded as not having voted on the resolution introduced from the Committee on Indian Affairs yesterday, to investigate the late Ute outbreak. I was present and voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers distinctly that the gentlemen was present and voted.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made accordingly.

The Journal was then approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the States and Territories be called to-day for bills and joint resolutions as of Monday.

Mr. COX. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this would be the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] that he will include in his motion resolutions for reference.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that one hour, or longer if necessary in order to include all the States and Territories, be devoted to the introduction of bills, joint resolutions, House resolutions, and resolutions of inquiry addressed to the Departments under the rules for reference only.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And resolutions of instruction to committees.

The SPEAKER. If they be House resolutions they will, of course, be referred under the rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is satisfactory.

Mr. COX. Will this interfere with the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will not; the morning hour will immediately follow.

Mr. COX. Then I have no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to know whether these resolutions are purely for reference?

The SPEAKER. For reference only. If there be no objection the resolution of the gentleman from Minnesota will be considered as adopted by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

HENRY HEAD.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House certain papers for the relief of Henry Head, House bill No. 923 of the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. CLYMER. Has there been any adverse report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine into the matter.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at thirteen minutes past twelve o'clock m., and the call will begin with the State of Maine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide upon that point. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] direct the attention of the Chair to the particular portion of the bill on which he bases his point of order?

Mr. RICE. It is the second section of the bill, which I will read:

That there shall be, and the same is hereby, appropriated annually the sum of $250,000, which shall be a separate fund in the Treasury Department, under the name of "the immigrant fund," for the purposes of discharging all liabilities that may be incurred by the United States under this act and under section 4 thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COX. I would like to make a motion now, that this bill (which is a very important one, and its passage demanded for various reasons which it is not necessary for me to state) shall be made the special order in the House, as in Committee of the Whole, for Tuesday, the 27th day of January, 1880, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. COX. That is always understood.

Mr. PAGE. If the House shall fix that day for the consideration of this bill, will the gentleman yield for amendments to be offered?

Mr. COX. With all the grace that I am possessed of.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] requires unanimous consent.

Mr. RICE. I shall make no objection to that. I desire only to call the attention of the House to the important character of the bill.

Mr. KENNA. How long does the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] expect that the House will take in considering and disposing of this bill?

Mr. COX. I have no doubt it will be passed in one day if members of the House will but read the bill and the report, which have been on their files for nearly a month. We could dispose of it in the House now in an hour if members only had the information already provided for them by printing.

Mr. KENNA. My object in asking the question is simply this: there is a special order already made for the 2d day of February. I have no objection to this bill being made a special order, but I would not like a special order made for any day which would continue and pass the day fixed for the other special order.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt that this bill can be disposed of before the 2d day of February. I have examined the Calendar and have consulted with the Clerk, and the day I have suggested is one which I think will give us full time to dispose of this bill without interfering with any other special orders which may have been made.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] alludes is made a special order from day to day until disposed of, is it not?

Mr. KENNA. It is.

The SPEAKER. Then, if it be not reached on the day fixed, it will come up in its order when this matter shall have been disposed of.

Mr. KENNA. If that be the parliametary ruling, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will restate the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] It is that unanimous consent be given that instead of this bill going to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the point of order, it be made a special order for the 27th day of January, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY. In the House, as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I have endeavored to avoid, in the selection of the day I have indicated, all other days for which special orders have been made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that under the point of order the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] now asks that in lieu of that action (in fact the effect of his proposition would be that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] shall withdraw his point of order) Tuesday, the 27th day of January, after the morning hour, be fixed for the consideration of this bill in the House, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration to be continued from day to day until the bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. If no point of order has been made——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] raised the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I think this bill had better go to the Committee of the Whole, and if the point of order is withdrawn I will renew it.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objects to the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I hope my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will not object to the arrangement I have proposed. It will give every advantage for debate and amendment.

I will say to my friend that unless something is done in regard to this matter pretty soon, all the system worth having in regard to immigration will very likely fail.

Mr. CONGER. Well, I understand the object of this bill. The gentleman well knows that for years some of its provisions have been opposed in this House. I think it had better go to the Committee of the Whole, where it can have full discussion and be open to amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that there is not much now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLYMER. Let it go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. As I have taken some pains to prepare this matter, and it is now in print, I think there might be some courtesy and fairness exhibited toward those who have labored upon this subject.

Mr. CLYMER. You can get at it in Committee of the Whole at any time.

Mr. COX. We would never reach it in Committee of the Whole in time to be of any use.

The SPEAKER. To-morrow after the morning hour it will be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. Not while the special order in regard to the revision of the rules is pending, I presume.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the gentleman from New York makes that motion the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. COX. Then I agree to that suggestion, though I do not like to interfere with the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the gentleman from New York withdraws his motion and the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. I ask that double the usual number of copies of this bill be printed, with the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. PAGE. I ask also that an amendment which I desire to offer may be printed in connection with the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York agree to that?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir; I accept that as a part of my motion.

There being no objection, the order to print was made.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR, ETC.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3257) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men, including militia and volunteers, of the military and naval services of the United States who served sixty days in the war of 1846 and 1847 with Mexico, who served thirty days in the Creek war of 1835 and 1836, or in the Florida war with the Seminoles from 1835 to 1842, or the Black Hawk war of 1832, and were honorably discharged, and to such other officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said wars, although their term of service may have been less than sixty days, and who shall subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not apply to any person who is receiving a pension at the rate of $8 or more per month, nor to any person receiving a pension for less than $8 per month, except for the difference between the pension now received and $8 per month. Pensions under this act shall be at the rate of $8 per month, except as herein provided as to persons now receiving a pension for less than $8 per month. All pensions under this act shall be paid from and after the passage of this act for and during the natural lives of the persons entitled thereto.

SEC. 3. That before the name of any person shall be placed on the pension-roll under this act proof shall be made, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, of the right of the applicant to a pension; and any person who shall falsely and corruptly take any oath required under this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stricken from the pension-roll the name of any person whenever it shall be made to appear by proof satisfactory to him that such name was put upon such roll through false and fraudulent representations, and that such person is not entitled to a pension under this act. The loss of the certificate of discharge shall not deprive any person of the benefits of this act, but other evidence of an honorable discharge may be deemed sufficient; and that when any person has been granted a land-warrant under any act of Congress for and on account of service in the said wars, such grant shall be prima facie evidence of his service and honorable discharge, but such evidence shall not be conclusive, and may be rebutted by evidence that such land-warrant was fraudulently granted or obtained.

SEC. 4. That the provisions of sections 4745, 4746, 4747, 4748, and 4766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby made a part of this act so far as the same are applicable; and no law or laws now in force which in any way conflict with the provisions of this act shall be applicable to the survivors of the wars above mentioned, or be so construed as to deprive them of the benefits of this act.

SEC. 5. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any person while under the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire that the second Tuesday of February next be fixed for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would advise the gentleman to go on with the consideration of the bill now.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman's point, although it comes rather late.

Mr. CONGER. I was waiting to hear the proposition made on the other side; I could not hear what was said.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COFFROTH?]

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole, and that the second Tuesday of February next, after the morning hour, be fixed for its consideration, and that it shall continue from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. BREWER. I object to fixing a day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill would have a better position by simply being referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COFFROTH. I call for the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made that the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, where the previous question does not prevail.

Mr. COFFROTH. Do gentlemen on the other side object to fixing a day?

The SPEAKER. There was objection. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] objected.

Mr. COFFROTH. Then let the bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to take its place upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] and the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS FOR SETTLEMENT OF PENSION APPLICATIONS, ETC.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to report from the same committee, by their unanimous direction, a bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes.

The bill, which was read a first and second time, (the first reading being in full,) is as follows:

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ eighty additional clerks from or after the 1st day of January to the 30th day of June, A. D. 1880, at a salary of $100 per month each, for service in the Pension Department; and that he be, and he is hereby, authorized to rent available room and purchase furniture for the use of said additional clerks, at a cost not exceeding $13,900.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint seventy additional clerks, forty for the office of the Surgeon-General, at a salary of $83.33⅓ per month each, and thirty clerks for the office of the Adjutant-General, at a salary of $100 per month each; and purchase furniture for the use of said clerks in the office of the Surgeon-General, at a cost not exceeding $1,000; and that said clerks shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications called for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, to wit: $61,900 for the use of the Pension Department, and $39,000 for the use of the War Department; total, $100,900.

Mr. ACKLEN. I think this bill had better take the same course as the other.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of order that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is very important we should go on with the consideration of this bill at once. Work is so far behind in the Pension Office at present that even applications cannot be recorded as they come in.

Mr. ACKLEN. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I renew the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COFFROTH. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. We are now in the morning hour.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Mines and Mining to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 765) to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

That section 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding thereto the following words: "Provided, That where the claimant for a patent is not a resident of or within the land district wherein the vein, lode, ledge, or deposit sought to be patented is located, the application for patent and the affidavits required to be made in this section by the claimant for such patent may be made by his, her, or its authorized agent, where said agent is conversant with the facts sought to be established by said affidavits: And provided, That this section shall apply to all applications now pending for patents to mineral lands."

SEC. 2. That section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding the following words: "Provided, That the period within which the work required to be done annually on all unpatented mineral claims shall commence on the 1st day of January succeeding the date of location of such claim, and this section shall apply to all claims located since the 10th day of May, A. D. 1872."

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear the sections of the Revised Statutes read as they will stand if amended as proposed by the pending bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. The object of this bill, I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota, is to provide that the parties conversant with the facts may make the required affidavits. As the statute now exists it requires affidavits to be made by the owner or claimant. This bill provides that affidavits may be made by the persons who are familiar with the facts.

Mr. WILSON. What affidavits?

Mr. STEVENSON. The affidavits in regard to the location of the claims.

Mr. BELFORD. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I will make a statement in regard to this matter.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado for that purpose.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, the mining act of 1872 provides, among other things, that where a miner obtains a patent from the Government of the United States the applicant for the patent shall "post" on the claim a notice of his intention to apply for such Government patent. It further requires that at the end of sixty days he shall file his affidavit as to the fact of "posting" this notice. The Land Office has construed that act so that the affidavit must be made by the principal and cannot be made by his agent, so that if a man resides in Pennsylvania or in New York, and has a mining claim in the State of Colorado or Nevada or California which he desires to have patented, he cannot make the affidavit because he is not cognizant personally of the posting of the notice. This bill simply provides that where he has a lawful authorized agent in any one of those States the affidavit required to be made by the statute may be made by the agent instead of by the principal. That is the whole purport and object of this bill, to allow the affidavit to be made by the agent who is conversant with all the facts.

If the present construction of the Land Office is to obtain it will be almost impossible for any gentleman who is resident of another State, and who desires to obtain a patent to a mining claim in Colorado, or Nevada, or California, or elsewhere, to procure such patent. It is to get rid of that mischief the present bill has been introduced.

I will state further, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining in the Senate, and passed that body without objection.

Mr. WILSON. How are those claims originally acquired—the gentleman speaks of valid claims?

Mr. BELFORD. They are originally acquired as follows: I go on a mountain and discover a lode—dig down ten feet deep or deeper, and obtain a well-defined mine, and I then put up at the mouth of the shaft a statement that on a certain day I discovered the lode. I acquired the right to fifteen hundred feet in length by three hundred feet in width by virtue of that discovery.

When I shall have done that, Mr. Speaker, I shall have acquired a complete, absolute, indefeasible title against everybody in the world except the Government of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. Now, one other question. Can this original location be made by the agent, or must it be made by the party himself?

Mr. BELFORD. The original location may be made—that is, the discovery may be made either by the agent—that is, by some agent I have employed to prospect for mineral land for me—or I can take the pick and discover the lode myself. The Land Office, however, construes that when I make an application for a patent for Government land, in order to get title from the Government, although my title against every other citizen of the United States is absolute and indefeasible, I, the principal, must make the affidavit.

Mr. WILSON. That point I understand. Now, one more question. If the amendment of the Revised Statutes shall be made as proposed by this bill, would it not put it in the power of a few gentlemen to form a combination and employ their agents to take up all the mineral lands in the West, or take them up to a very large extent?

Mr. BELFORD. No, sir; nothing of the kind can possibly arise under this bill. It simply goes to a state of facts which occurred long after the party had acquired absolute title to the mineral land against everybody except the United States.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Colorado one question.

Mr. BELFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask the gentleman whether, under existing law, there is any limitation as to the number of claims any one individual may make or take up?

Mr. BELFORD. There is no limitation under the act of 1872; none whatever.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to have that thing settled.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to say this is the most important bill in reference to western titles and western interests which has been before this House; for if the present construction of the Land Office shall remain, requiring claimants to make affidavits, then I say no man in this country who has a dollar's worth of mining property in Colorado or Nevada or California can acquire from this Government a title for the same, unless he shall go there from day to day and watch that the notice shall be posted and remain posted upon the claim all the while. This simply provides that the agent shall make that affidavit, and no more.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. WILSON. One word, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAGE. Let me say a word before the gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the morning hour has not expired, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I always make it a rule of conduct on this floor as far as I can to follow when I can the report of a committee, but it seems to me if this amendment of the Revised Statutes should be adopted it will put it in the power of a few capitalists to employ their agents without number to canvass that entire mineral region in our western country and acquire those valid claims just described by the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. BELFORD.] It puts it in the power of those capitalists to send out their agents to make affidavits that the notice required by the law was duly posted, and thus put it in the power of a few men to form combinations by which they may acquire a large portion of that great western mineral region. It puts it beyond the power of an ordinary man to compete with the capitalist in acquiring such property. I am opposed to all such combinations. I am opposed to this bill because I think it is in the interest of capital.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] that his fear of combinations is entirely unnecessary and groundless in this case. This bill is not for the purpose of placing it in the power of any combination to take up these lands, but is simply provided as a matter of convenience, as has been explained by the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. BELFORD.]

I now yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to say a very few words in reference to this bill. The objections that have been urged against it, in my judgment, are not good.

The law as it now stands discriminates against a non-resident of California, Nevada, or Colorado. Every person, whether he resides in those States or any other State, is compelled to comply with the local mining laws before he can make his application for a patent, and that, in my opinion, answers the objections made by the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON.]

You can no more, after this bill passes, make combinations in West Virginia or in Washington to take up these mining lands in Colorado than the people of Colorado can now, or any person going there and remaining there. Your present law would be subject to the same objection so far as this point is concerned, and this bill merely, as I understand it, gives only the same right to make application for a mining claim to citizens of other States that is now possessed by a citizen of Colorado. That is all there is of it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I should like to ask the gentleman from California a question.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. DUNNELL. What does the gentleman mean by the term "local mining laws," which he has used?

Mr. PAGE. I mean such laws as the residents of a mining locality may make for themselves. Residents of every mining region or locality get together and establish a set of mining laws which are kept in a book provided for this purpose. You will find it described in section 2324 of the Revised Statutes, and the law recognizes these local regulations as binding upon the miners in that region. They may establish under these laws a limit to the amount of mining lands to be taken up, or provide for more work to be done in one locality than another; but they have to comply with these local laws before they can obtain or make an application for a patent under the United States laws.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is just one suggestion that occurs to me. The gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. BELFORD,] as well as the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] states that it is a hardship that a gentleman from West Virginia or from Washington should not be able by his agent to acquire title to the mining lands as they are now required by the law. I will ask the gentlemen if this is any greater hardship than that which is now imposed upon them under the homestead or pre-emption laws?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNNELL. If I am a homesteader I must live on the property for five years before acquiring title.

Mr. PAGE. But you do not pay the Government anything.

Mr. DUNNELL. I know I do not pay the Government anything in this instance.

Mr. PAGE. But here you pay the Government $5 per acre for these lands under the mining law, and it is a well known fact that in Montana, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, and Nevada a large portion of the mining land or the valuable mines are held by parties east of the Mississippi River. If you wish to discriminate against yourselves; if you wish to deprive your own capitalists seeking investments in the western country in mines of the power to do so, then you will oppose the passage of this bill, and then you will compel every man to go there in person before he can acquire any title.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from California where the demand for the passage of this bill comes from—whether it is from the East or from the West?

Mr. PAGE. I would say to the gentleman that this demand has been universal, so far as I know, since the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is of recent date. Since then it has been urged by the whole people, East and West, that this bill should be passed.

Mr. STEVENSON. I demand the previous question on the bill. If any gentleman desires to discuss it after the main question is ordered, I shall have no objection to yield a portion of my hour.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered to be now put.

Mr. STEVENSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana, [Mr. MAGINNIS.]

Mr. MAGINNIS. I do not care at all to speak on this bill, but I want to meet the objection raised by my friend from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON.] The bill does not in any manner enlarge the power of anybody to take up more or less mining territory. It does not enlarge or contract anybody's power at all in that particular. As has been stated, all claims are taken up under local mining land laws which are made law by the laws of the United States, and they are made smaller or larger according as the people of the district desire. Of course those claims when so taken up under our laws can be held forever with just as good a title as the title of the United States. The law makes the title just as good.

Of course in opening up great mining enterprises and forming companies to work them people like to have a valid title. Well, up to this time this law has been executed—there never has been any question about it—and these mines have been taken up in this way. Notices have been filed and patents obtained. But in the hunting for technicalities, which seems to distinguish the clerks of some of our Departments, this new rule has been made and it is sought to pass this law simply for the purpose of bringing the practice back to where it was.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Montana a question that I may rightly understand this bill.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask him if, with this amendment, a mining company in New Orleans or in New York can send out its agent and take up as much of the mining lands as it pleases without any one but the agent of the company going into the mining region.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If the law passes, Mr. Speaker, it will not in the least affect that question one way or the other.

Mr. REAGAN. Ah! Does it not affect it in this way: that, as the law now is, the principal must make the affidavit and perform the acts necessary and to acquire the title himself, while if this passes it will be sufficient for the agent to do so?

Mr. MAGINNIS. Not at all.

Mr. REAGAN. I mean, to acquire the United States title.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Yes; but not to acquire the ownership of the property at all.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to get at this, because it seems to me the bill now under consideration opens the way to let companies and speculators absorb the mining lands, and thus place at a disadvantage those who go to buy the claims.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If that were so it would be a grave objection to the bill, and one that would weigh very much with me, because, as gentlemen who know my record are well aware, I have always been opposed to all sorts of monopolies in mines or public lands. But I would like the gentleman from Texas to explain to me how it would work in that direction.

Mr. PAGE. If the gentleman from Montana will yield to me I will say that the miners in any mining locality make their own laws, and those are the only laws recognized by the United States Government. I think that is a sufficient answer to the gentleman from Texas, because the miners will make laws for their own protection at least.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not understand how that would affect the question I am presenting: that when an agent is permitted to take up the mining lands any company may organize itself and send its agent and take up and occupy as much of the mining lands as it pleases.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It cannot take up more than it is permitted to take now. Nobody can go and take up mining lands except under the local mining land laws.

Mr. REAGAN. But then he must appear personally, and there is a great difference between appearing personally and sending an agent to represent a wealthy company and obtain occupation of these lands.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Is there anything in the law which prevents them doing that now?

Mr. REAGAN. There is in the necessity of going there and making the selection and affidavit. There is the difference between a principal going himself and an agent representing a principal without any direct control over him.

Mr. ARMFIELD. With the permission of the gentleman from Montana I will state that I have a bill which I am instructed by the Committee on Mines and Mining to report for passage and which meets the objection of the gentleman from Texas. It provides that no person shall have more than one prospecting location in the same mining district at the same time. Having located one claim he cannot locate another.

Mr. REAGAN. If the bill of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ARMFIELD,] were passed first, we would then understand this better.

Mr. CLYMER. I am very loath to oppose my judgment to what seems to be the judgment of gentlemen more directly interested in the mining interests of this country. Yet, it does seem to me that this proposed legislation would change what has been the policy of the Government on this subject. The law now in force, by requiring the person taking up a claim of three hundred feet to make affidavit to that effect, in effect offers a reward for pioneers and those who go into the wilderness to make discoveries which will add to our wealth. The requirement is that the person must be there on the ground; must be able to swear to a certain state of facts which will be conclusive evidence of title.

Now, if we pass this bill it is very clear that under it any combination of individuals, any corporation or association, may send out prospectors all over the Territories, and instead of the members of the corporation being there in person and making explorations they can send out these agents to do it for them and thereby preclude individual citizens of the country from acquiring titles to property which is of so much value. I fear that there is a general tendency all over this country, in our legislation here and in the legislation of the States, to consolidate power and property in the hands of the few to the exclusion of the many. While I do not pretend to understand the entire scope of this proposed legislation, I must regard it as a step in that direction.

I would have this measure carefully examined in order that we may see whether by it we will not be depriving the hardy pioneers of the country from going out and making fortunes for themselves; whether we are not providing that all the vast mineral wealth of this country may be put into the hands of corporations and associations. I do not say that I understand this proposed legislation; but without understanding it, and for fear that it may have that effect, I propose to vote against it.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to say——

Mr. WILSON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. This bill is now in the House, and the previous question having been ordered upon it, it is taken from the operation of the morning hour.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is debate in order, the previous question having been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It was agreed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STEVENSON] that if the previous question was ordered on the bill debate should be allowed upon it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the Chair pardon me? I did not understand the statement of the Chair distinctly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the previous question was ordered on this bill at the instance of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STEVENSON] having it in charge, with the understanding, assented to by the House, that there should be time allowed for debate after the main question was ordered; and with that understanding by the House the main question was ordered.

The debate having been entered upon, it would seem that under the equity of the rule it would run for one hour; of course it could not run longer than that. The Chair, therefore, has been recognizing gentlemen to speak upon the bill, and will continue to do so for one hour. The Chair understands that was the arrangement proposed by the gentleman himself.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is correct. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS.]

Mr. CALKINS. If the point made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] is a good one, it is a point against the law as it now stands, and not against the measure which is before the House. It is now the law that a man may enter as many mining claims as he can get men to stake off for him. The only difficulty is—but before coming to that I will say that as the law has heretofore been administered agents and attorneys of persons have been allowed to go before the Land Office and make affidavit of their locations and of their location stakes, and by that means commence the process of obtaining a patent. But by a late decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as I understand, it is held now that no one but the actual absolute owner of the claim or mine will be allowed to make that first affidavit. Am I not right in that?

Mr. MAGINNIS. That is so; but it does not require the hardy pioneer or discoverer to do so.

Mr. CALKINS. That is what I am coming to now. As was well said by the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. BELFORD,] the man making that first affidavit holds his claim against all the world except the United States. He may sell his location certificate to A, B, or C, living in Pennsylvania or New York, but he has yet no patent; he sells only his right under his location certificate.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Sells the property.

Mr. CALKINS. That carries with it the property, because he or his agent can go there and maintain possession against all the world. Now he wants a patent. His agent in Colorado or California, wherever he may be, who knows the facts about the location, the sticking of the stakes and all that, is by this late decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office prohibited from making that affidavit for the owner; and the owner, not knowing the facts personally himself, cannot obtain any patent.

Now this bill is proposed for the purpose of meeting that difficulty, and that alone. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] and the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] in their objection to this bill, misapprehend the point entirely. Their point, if it is a good point, is a point against the law as it now stands.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me a word? The gentleman states correctly, I presume, the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; but the law requires, as I understand, that the person making the claim must be there in his own proper person—must risk his own scalp out among the Utes——

Mr. CALKINS. Oh, no; under the present law that is not the case at all.

Mr. REAGAN. I will ask the gentleman, as he seems familiar with the provisions of the bill now pending, whether under its operation the power and privilege are not given to corporations remote from the mining country to take up and occupy by their agents the mining country indefinitely?

Mr. CALKINS. No, sir. This bill does not touch that question at all. The effect of the bill is this: if I go into the mountains to-day, as suggested by the gentleman from Colorado, and stake off my claim, then come here to Washington and sell it to the gentleman from Texas before the patent is issued, this bill allows the gentleman's agents in Colorado to make affidavit of the original location for the purpose of applying for a patent. This is all the bill does.

Mr. REAGAN. Does not the bill permit the perfecting of the patent without the original owner going there at all?

Mr. CALKINS. Under the bill, if the agent makes affidavit of the original location, the owner need not be present; nor is it right that he should be required to be present. As the matter now stands there is a prohibition against any miner disposing of his claim until he gets a patent. This bill is designed to enable miners and men who have taken up claims to dispose of their claims and to allow the agents of persons who purchase them to perfect the title and get the patent. That is all there is in the bill.

I think with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ARMFIELD] that probably a bill ought to be passed restricting the right of taking up claims in certain districts. For myself, when such a measure comes up, if it is framed so as to meet my views, I shall be very glad to support it. But this bill touches only the single point of allowing a man who is the agent of another and who has knowledge of the facts to make the affidavit.

Mr. REAGAN. If the friends of this bill would consent to let action upon it be postponed until the other bill is passed, I do not know that I should object.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope my friend from Texas will not insist on anything of that kind when the fact is so plain that this bill does not touch at all the point to which he alludes. The other proposition is an independent measure, which can stand upon its own footing, and will not affect this bill one way or another.

Mr. McMILLIN. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will not this bill, if passed, facilitate the entering of land and procuring title thereto by those who are not residents of the mining region?

Mr. CALKINS. Not at all; no farther than such has always been the practice. Until this recent decision the practice, as I understand, has always been—I am only speaking from common repute, for I do not personally know anything about the matter—the practice has always been in the Land Department to allow agents of the owner to file the preliminary affidavit of location upon which the patent would issue. But the decision recently made overturns the practice that has obtained in the Land Department for years back. This bill is designed simply to obviate that; to reinstate the practice which had obtained from time immemorial.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. CALKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe the time which I allowed to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] has expired; and I have agreed to yield to my colleague, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think there is misapprehension among members of the House as to the provisions of this bill. It proposes to amend section 2325 of the Revised Statutes in respect to the final application for a patent. Under this section, as construed by the Land Department, it is now required that at the expiration of the sixty days of publication the claimant shall file his affidavit showing that the plat and notice have been posted in a conspicuous place on the claim during such period of publication. This bill provides simply that the agent of the claimant may go and post the notice and make the affidavit. That is all there is in the bill. It does not authorize any new location; it does not change the law a particle with regard to locating and securing mining property.

Mr. SPARKS. Why cannot the owner make affidavit as well as the agent?

Mr. SPRINGER. He could do so if he would take the cars in New York or Illinois or wherever his home may be and go out into the mining country for the purpose of posting a notice on the property so as to be able to swear from actual observation and acts on his part that it had been done. And I conceive that to be a hardship. It is not necessary the owner should go on the ground. Cannot he send a party to post the notice that he has applied for a patent? The practice in all that region is that anybody who discovers a deposit of mineral is entitled to locate a claim on it. The law respects the first discoverer, whoever he may be. He may be a man in Massachusetts or Pennsylvania or elsewhere. The law gives every man the right to discover a mineral deposit or vein. The law recognizes the right of every man who discovers it to own it. Every man must discover it in order to own it. This does not interfere with that law at all. This law stands as before, requiring $100 or $500 of work to be done prior to the application for a patent from the General Government. This simply provides that the person who desires to avail himself of a patent to this property may make affidavit through his agent that the notice required under the statute has been posted on the ground. The rule has been from time immemorial the common-law rule which every gentleman recognizes, that what a man does by another he does by himself.

Mr. CLYMER. That is not the rule under the homestead law, but the man making the claim has to reside upon the land itself.

Mr. SPRINGER. The homestead law requires that he shall live there, but the mining law does not require the discoverer of a mine shall live on the mine. It is a different thing from a homestead. The homestead law requires the man to live there.

Mr. CLYMER. But the law of the United States requires that if he wants to obtain a patent for mineral land he must locate it himself.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, the law does not require any such thing. No law of that kind is in existence. There is not a mining claim in a dozen patented by the person who discovered it. Discovery is not affected in the least by this. It is the miner who goes into the mountains and valleys and discovers the lode, and we recognize the right of that man to sell his property, the right he has already acquired, to anybody who wishes to purchase it from him. They do sell them. There is not one case in a dozen where the original discoverer makes application for patent for the mining claim he has discovered. His affidavits are put on file. The person who applies for the patent simply goes with his affidavits and makes his claim. The last statute requires he should post a notice on the mining land that he has applied for a patent, so as to notify all the world that if there are any adverse claimants they shall come forward and make known their adverse claim to the Land Office while the patent is being applied for. This does not change that right in any way whatever.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENSON. I will yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have resided in a mining district for ten years, and I claim I am somewhat familiar with the local and national laws affecting the taking up of mining property. I should like to make to this House an explanation of the mode of acquiring such property, and just how far this act affects the acquisition of any such property. The miners assemble together, and you may call it a miners' meeting, and there they adopt certain rules and regulations declaring that a man, by sinking a shaft, shall acquire a right to so much mineral property. Our legislation has recognized those rules and regulations of the miners, so that if I sink a shaft and uncover a vein I can sell that property to anybody, as I have thereby acquired complete and perfect title against everybody but the United States. In 1872, Congress recognized the right of the miners to establish those rules and regulations, and recognized the title of the miner to the property when acquired by virtue of those rules and regulations. It was provided that, after I had acquired a valid title to a mining claim against the whole world, except the Government of the United States, I might obtain from the Government a patent therefor. I could acquire the title whether I was the original discoverer of the lode, or whether I had acquired title by virtue of purchase or devise. Yes, sir; that is the fact.

The law requires, in addition, that I shall post a notice that I will make application for a Government patent on the ground, on the claim. That notice is to be posted upon the claim; and, in addition to that, it is to be published for sixty days in the leading paper of the district.

Now, Mr. Speaker, bear in mind that my title is absolutely perfect against everybody but the Government of the United States—absolutely perfect before I obtain this patent. The only object of a patent is to secure a quitclaim of the rights of the United States to the miner, the Government recognizing all the time the miner's right under the local rules and regulations. Suppose I buy a mine from John Doe or Richard Roe; and suppose, before I purchased it, that John Doe posted the notice on the claim and went to New York or Washington and sold me his right, and I desired to obtain the patent in order to convince some one in England, or France, or New York, or Pennsylvania, that he had a complete and perfect title, not only against every other citizen, but against the Government. All the original discoverer could do was simply to swear to the fact that the notice was posted for sixty days upon the claim. That is all there is of it. It does not enable him to acquire title to any other property. It does not enlarge his right. It does not modify his right. It simply provides that the agent who knows the fact may swear the notice was posted.

The gentleman talks about homestead laws. A man is not required to reside on a mining claim. When he sinks his shafts ten feet deep, or deeper, and uncovers a vein and shows the ore, all that is required of him is to do ten dollars' worth of work each year on his claim until the patent issues therefor. Now, I say this bill has the support of every hard-working miner in the State of Colorado.

I have thousands of petitions from the various counties in that State, signed by the men who have opened up that magnificent mineral domain to the attention of the world. They ask Congress to pass this act and allow the agent to make the affidavit as to the mere fact of posting when the principal himself was not present in person when the notice was put up, and was not there all the time to see that it was continued on the board for the period of sixty days. I say to the gentleman that this is a righteous and a just act, and ought to be passed in the interest of the hard-handed and heroic miners of the West. There is no speculation in it; there is no fraud in it; it is not in the interest of corporations, but it is in the interest of the honest purchasers of these mining claims in the West. If the House votes it down it will do an act of great injustice to the people of Colorado, California, and Nevada.

Mr. STEVENSON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, chapter 6 of the Revised Statutes provides the means by which the miners, those men who have gone as pioneers into the mountains to search for mineral wealth, are enabled to get together and adopt regulations which are to be a law among themselves, and under which they may obtain titles and avoid conflicts in reference to titles. The first objection which occurs to me in connection with this bill—and I confess I have not studied it sufficiently to be well advised in regard to it—is that its effect will be to extend the operations of these local mining laws and regulations made by the miners to the country at large, and thus give corporations and men who never saw the mines, who never went into the mining region, who never incurred any of its dangers, its labors, or its perils which these men have undergone—to give those great capitalists the power to enjoy the advantages of these local regulations which it was the intention of the Government to allow the miners, those occupying the mines, to make for their own interests. If that be so, it seems to me to be enlarging the operation of those local laws too far. I can conceive when the people were going in great numbers into the mining region they needed some regulations which could not be reached by specific acts of Congress; and no doubt it was wise to allow them to adopt regulations having the force of laws among themselves with reference to the mode of acquiring titles to mineral lands.

I dislike the idea of extending the operation of these laws to corporations or monopolies so as to enable them to take up and hold and use in their corporate capacity—or individuals remote from these lands—the large body of the mineral lands of this country in opposition to the interests of that energetic and hardy class of pioneers referred to by the gentleman from Colorado whose rights it was intended should be protected.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in addition to that, there is a little misapprehension as to the extent to which the provision as to this affidavit will interfere with the existing law. We have been told by several gentlemen that the bill only means that the affidavit in relation to the sixty-day occupation should be made. But the language of this bill goes further than that. Perhaps I ought to read it. The first section provides:

That section 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding thereto the following words: "Provided, That where the claimant for a patent is not a resident of or within the land district wherein the vein, lode, ledge, or deposit sought to be patented is located, the application for patent and the affidavits required to be made in this section—

That is section 2325——

Mr. SPRINGER. The application requires to be made by the claimant.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas declines to be interrupted.

Mr. REAGAN. The section proceeds:

By the claimant for such patent may be made by his, her, or its authorized agent, where said agent is conversant with the facts sought to be established by said affidavits.

One of the provisions of this section 2325 contains this expression:

At the expiration of the sixty days of publication the claimant shall file his affidavit showing that the plat and notice have been posted in a conspicuous place on the claim during such period of publication.

But then there are other affidavits in this section and the agent may make any of them. It is the preceding section to this which authorizes the miners to make local regulations.

The miners of each mining district may make regulations not in conflict with the laws of the United States or with the laws of the State or Territory in which the district is situated governing the location, manner of recording, amount of work necessary to hold possession of a mining claim, subject to the following requirements, &c.

That is the provision to which I referred in my opening remarks; one of the provisions of the legislation intended to enable the miners themselves that go out into the mining regions where the Government have not by any fixed system of laws provided the mode of obtaining their title—to enable these miners, the men on the ground, the men who seek the minerals to make the necessary regulations for themselves.

Mr. MAGINNIS. That has come down from the old Spanish miners through Mexico and California.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not yield; my time is limited. I am aware of what the gentleman says, that customs have grown up in the mining regions which the Government has permitted to become laws.

Mr. MAGINNIS. And they are recognized as laws.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes; and recognized as laws. But that was for the benefit of the actual miners, and not for the benefit of mammoth corporations in the city of New York or anywhere else. It was not intended to enable them by their agents, without any labor or any expense or personal inconvenience, to absorb these mines, taking them away from the men who go up into those regions to develop, by their own energy and skill, the mineral wealth of this country.

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me, in the first place, one minute, that I may ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Texas this question: if it is not true that these mineral lands are developed by the capital of the country; whether more money has not been spent in that way by outside capital than by those in the mining districts themselves; and if it is not in the interest of the miners that they should have the fullest and fairest chance to sell these mining claims; and if anybody needs protection, whether it is not the capitalist himself, and not the miner?

Mr. REAGAN. There is a good deal of the gentleman's interrogatory which I could not answer in the affirmative. It is not true that outside capitalists have invested more in the mining districts than the miners themselves. But the gentleman from Illinois and myself proceed on different theories. His object seems to be to protect these companies and monopolists who seek their own interest and not the interest of the people. My object is to give the greatest encouragement to hardy miners themselves to go into those regions and develop the mining wealth of the country unfettered by the action of capitalists and monopolists.

Mr. HASKELL. The mining laws of the United States as they stand on our statute-books are simply the old mining laws established by the original miners themselves and which were afterward placed upon the statutes of the United States and made the law of the land. None of the processes by which title is to be acquired to a piece of mineral land is touched by this contemplated act; not one. Not a single iota of mining law by which title is acquired to a single claim is affected by this law.

Now, what is this bill? Simply this: that when a man has acquired title to a claim, when he has conformed to the law of the land, to the law that the miners themselves have instituted, and he desires to sell it, with this final certificate that gives him the patent of the United States Government and perfects his title he may sell a good title; that he may have that affidavit made by an agent instead of being compelled to travel across the country himself. Let me give an illustration. When I came to take my seat in Congress this session I came with three gentlemen from Colorado who owned a mine in the old county of Gilpin, where I used to live. They had worked that mine for ten years. They were the owners of that mine. They had opened it and had put up many thousands of dollars' worth of machinery.

They had had an offer to buy their mine, and they started to New York to sell it, having owned and worked it for eight or ten years. When they arrived at Saint Louis they learned for the first time, never having had their attention called before to this ruling of the Department, that their agent, who had been with them from the first and was then in Colorado, could not make this little final affidavit by which they could obtain their patent at Washington. The result was that one of those men had to retrace his steps, going all the way to Colorado, so as to be able to swear to the little affidavit which his agent was just as competent to swear to as himself.

That is all there is in this bill. It simply provides that when a man owns a mining property in Colorado, after he has complied with the law, after he has become the hardy pioneer which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] alludes to, when he wants to sell that property, when some of these bloated monopolists offer him a big price for it, he can have his agent make this little affidavit, which will give him his United States patent to the land. There is nothing wrong in the bill, and I venture to say that there is not one miner in Colorado but what, if he were here, would vote for its passage. It is the simplest, plainest, most inoffensive measure that was ever offered in Congress.

Mr. STEVENSON. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Dakota, [Mr. BENNETT.]

Mr. BENNETT. There is just one simple question involved in this whole bill, and that relates purely and simply to the rule of evidence, and nothing else. It establishes the principle that the man who is in possession of the facts may make affidavit to those facts.

As the law now stands, the man who owns a mine must be present and see that the notice required is posted and kept posted for the time required by the statute before he can make the affidavit which will entitle him to the patent of the United States. Now, all the work which is necessary to be done on the mine prior to the patenting of the land may be done by the employés of the owner himself, and he need never be upon the mine for a single day if he is purchaser of the mine from the discoverer. Now, any one of those employés or agents knows whether the necessary work has been done, and whether the notice has been kept posted, and he is the party in possession of the facts, and is capable of establishing those facts by the proper affidavit before the Land Office.

There is no analogy whatever between this case and that of the homesteader, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] intimates. In the case of a homestead the man is required to live upon the land he has homesteaded during a period of five years, and the law presumes that no man knows so well as the man himself who has lived on the homestead. Therefore the law requires his individual affidavit in preference to that of any other party.

But this is not the case in mining matters at all. What harm can there be in this bill? Can it affect the locators of these mines, the hardy pioneers who discover these mines, and who have been talked about on this floor? Not at all. The object of the mining law and of this proposed legislation is the development of the mineral resources of the country rather than the retarding of them. The great proportion of our richest mines in this country, as every gentleman knows who has been at all in the mining region, has been discovered by men who do not possess the means or the ability to develop those mines, for their development requires much capital. Not one prospector or discoverer of a mine out of ten has the means to develop these mines to that condition where he will be enabled to secure a patent from the Government of the United States.

Therefore they are legitimate property for barter and trade, and these discoverers sell their rights to these mines to men who are able to develop them. But the law now requires that those men who are able to put money into these mines and to develop these mineral resources shall stay upon the mines and complete everything necessary before they can apply for the patents from the Government. This bill simply provides that they can do this by their agents, and that when the necessary development has been accomplished the agents may make the necessary affidavits to establish the facts.

In what other matter is it required or insisted upon that facts necessary to be established may not be established by any man who is a competent witness to testify to those facts? That is all there is in this case. It simply provides that the necessary facts may be established before the land office by any competent witness, in order to enable the owner of the mine to secure the patent. There certainly should be no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WRIGHT.]

Mr. WRIGHT. I am satisfied from what I have heard in regard to this bill that it is for the benefit of the man who makes the discovery of the mining lode and who operates it. If it were for the benefit of the speculators, if it were for the purpose of letting capitalists come in and acquire these lands, then I should oppose the bill. But, as I understand the matter from the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] and of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] I think it is right and proper that the man who makes the discovery of valuable ores shall have facilities for transferring his title, his personal right, in order that he may obtain an advantage from his discovery. I do not think that the man who purchases the right from him should be compelled to travel from an eastern city to the spot where the mine is located, in order that he shall be able to himself make such proof as this bill provides for. It adds an additional burden to him. It is a privilege that ought to be secured to him by legislation. So long as the right, the equity of the case is not affected, so long as the question is one with regard merely to the transfer of title, why ought not the man who discovers the mineral have an opportunity to do by an agent what the law now requires him to do in person?

When the discussion on this bill opened and I had listened only to the remarks of my colleague [Mr. CLYMER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] I was under the impression that there might be in this bill what is called a "snake in the grass," but I am now satisfied that the bill, as it stands, is for the benefit of the man who does the work, who makes the improvement, and I will not stand in my place here to vote against giving him proper facilities for transferring his title. That is something which this House ought not to do by the rejection of this measure. At the opening of this debate I was, as I have said, opposed to the bill on principle, but having heard all that has been said, I am satisfied that the measure is in the interest of the man who discovers the minerals, and we ought to give him all proper facilities for transferring his title.

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.]

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, I feel it incumbent upon me, a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, to say that the objections raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to this bill were all considered in the committee and were unanimously overruled. The questions presented in the bill have been clearly, succinctly, and concisely set forth by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] and the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. BELFORD.] The bill involves nothing that can be objectionable to any member of the House who has a thorough understanding of the question. It proposes simply to permit the man who has discovered the mine to dispose of that property, and to enable purchasers in the East to obtain their patents without the necessity of being constantly present in order to make affidavit, as required under the decision which the Commissioner of the General Land Office has lately made.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman whether, under the present law, the miner has not the same facilities for disposing of his property that he would have under this bill?

Mr. ACKLEN. No, sir. The gentleman totally misunderstands the case. Prior to the late decision of the Commissioner of the Land Office the miner could dispose of his property and the patent would have been issued upon proper affidavit by the agent; but under the late decision of the Commissioner it is impossible for the miner to dispose of his property and for the purchaser to perfect his title and obtain the patent unless he can personally make the affidavit required under the decision of the Commissioner. That presents the entire question in a nutshell, and it is no use to go outside the record to raise technical objection. I trust members in the consideration of this measure will confine themselves solely to the point at issue.

Mr. REAGAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that under existing laws the miner could not dispose of his property?

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman must have been deficient in his usual acuteness if he so misunderstood me. I said that the miner could not dispose of his property and the purchaser could not perfect his title. The miner can dispose of the property per se without any difficulty. The laws of the United States have nothing to do with that; the local mining laws govern that matter. The difficulty is as to perfecting the title, obtaining the patent.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill proposes to give facilities to an owner who was never on the spot—to a corporation it may be in New York.

Mr. ACKLEN. In this connection I trust the gentleman from Texas will bear in mind the fact that to operate these mines of the West the capital of the East is always necessary. The miners who go out West and discover mineral wealth are generally poor. They cannot operate mines as they now have to be operated, with expensive machinery. After discovering a mine, they desire to dispose of the property; and to deny to the purchaser the right to obtain a patent except upon making affidavit upon personal knowledge of the facts, is simply a great blow at the mining interests of the West.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate on this bill has now expired. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STEVENSON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 29, not voting 83; as follows:

Mr. MONROE. Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, is paired with Mr. PIERCE, of New York.

On motion of Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the special order.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman will not press it at this time, as the two gentlemen representing the minority of the Committee on Rules are absent, and both may be present to-morrow.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am simply acting in obedience to the order of the Committee on Rules to indicate to the House it is ready to proceed to the consideration of its report. As the gentleman notes the absence of both the republican members of that committee, and as it is now past four o'clock, it is not my pleasure to press this matter on the attention of the House; and I am perfectly willing to test the sense of the House on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his motion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I withdraw my motion, then.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BACHMAN until Tuesday next, on account of the death of his mother-in-law; and to Mr. KING until the 12th instant.

HENRY HEAD.

On motion of Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Henry Head, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2803) for the relief of Doddridge & Davis.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 105) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late a major of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

And then, on motion of Mr. COFFROTH, (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 8, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 673) to regulate applications for restoration to the active list of the Navy; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2769) to amend the act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, so as to extend it to the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Galveston.

The bill (H. R. No. 1076) for the relief of Amanda M. Cook was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MILITARY RESERVATIONS IN DAKOTA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with, and the bill returned to the House of Representatives.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 19th of December, 1879, approved and signed the following joint resolutions:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 26) to transfer the arsenal property in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, to the trustees of the Holy Communion Church Institute for the use and accommodation of said school;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 50) filling existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing payment of the salaries of the employés of Congress on the 19th of December, 1879.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 24th of December, 1879, approved and signed the act (S. No. 618) for the relief of Herman Hulman and Crawford Fairbanks, of the city of Terre Haute, Indiana.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, requesting that appropriate legislation may be had to enable his Department to appropriate the proceeds of the labor of prisoners confined in the Leavenworth military prison toward the support of the prison; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of William Cassius Goodloe, William C. P. Breckenridge, John A. Prall, M. C. Johnson, and others, citizens of Lexington, Kentucky, praying for the passage of a bill appropriating the income arising from certain bounties and pensions to colored soldiers for the education of the colored race, and for aid therefrom to establish a normal colored school in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FERRY presented the memorial of John D. Graham and 8 others, soldiers of the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of H. Koning and others, citizens of Grainfield, Kansas, praying for an amendment of the homestead act of March 3, 1879, so as to entitle those settlers who have taken eighty acres after the passage of that law to eighty additional acres; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FERRY. I present the petition of Ira Reynolds and 578 others, citizens of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the issue of $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes, when their constitutionality shall have been decided, to be made redeemable in coin and to be taken for all custom duties and other dues. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of S. B. Hotchkiss and 63 others, citizens of Edinborough, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of what is known as the "equalization bounty bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HEREFORD presented the petition of Jesse F. Phares, of Randolph County, West Virginia, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John Snider, of Randolph County, West Virginia, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SLATER presented the petition of General Joseph Lane and 101 others, veterans of the Mexican war, praying Congress to grant pensions to the soldiers of that war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of John H. Fralich, of Brooklyn, New York, praying for the passage of a law granting him relief on account of a forged signature on a draft to his order upon which money was drawn by another; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of J. J. Woodman, of Michigan, and other officers of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry, assembled in annual session at Canandaigua, New York, praying the enactment of such laws as will relieve a burdened and oppressed people from the unlawful exactions of railroad companies; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLACE. I present the petition of Drexel & Co. and other leading business men of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of the joint resolution abolishing the legal-tender quality of United States notes. In presenting this petition, Mr. President, I desire to say that the gentlemen who sign it represent the leading commercial, banking, and shipping interests of the State of Pennsylvania, and that their opinion on this subject is entitled to great weight on the part of the Senate. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONAS presented the petition of Lucas E. Moore & Co. and others, ship-owners and agents of New Orleans, and the petition of E. F. Lockmeyer & Co., agents of the North German Lloyd's, and others, of New Orleans, praying for the passage of an act to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue law; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of Andrew C. Gray and 70 others, citizens of New Castle, Delaware, praying for the withdrawal of the compulsory legal-tender power of the United States Treasury notes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Fargo, Dakota Territory, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the construction of a lock and dam over the Red River of the North at Goose Rapids; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS. I present the petition of Commodore William B. Whiting, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 751) granting a pension to William B. Whiting. As that bill has been reported from the Committee on Pensions, and is upon the Calendar, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I also present the petition of Charles D. Potter and many other Union veterans who served in the war, from Ohio, Illinois, New York, and elsewhere, praying for the equalization of bounties; and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of John Wandley and others, citizens of Elk County, Kansas, and the petition of L. A. Carnes and others, soldiers of the late war, from the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Kansas, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Patrick Murphy and others, disabled soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of a law increasing from $24 to $30 per month the pension allowed to those soldiers who lost a leg above the knee or an arm above or below the elbow; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of A. Franklyn Howland and others, soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of a law increasing the pensions to those pensioners who are totally helpless; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Charles F. Walthers and others, citizens of Arago, Nebraska; the petition of F. W. Samuelson and others, citizens of Humboldt, Nebraska; the petition of George M. Squiers and others, citizens of Richardson County, Nebraska; the petition of W. J. Richardson and others, citizens of Hiawatha, Brown County, Kansas; the petition of John W. Holt and others, citizens of Falls City, Richardson County, Nebraska; the petition of M. S. Moore and others, citizens of Kansas and Nebraska; the petition of J. D. Hunter and others, citizens of Falls City, Richardson County, Nebraska; and the petition of William McWain and others, citizens of Rulo, Richardson County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the sale of the lands of the Iowas, Sacs, and Fox Indians in Kansas and Nebraska, and for the removal of the tribes now occupying them to the Indian Territory; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VEST presented the memorial of S. B. Sturtevant and others, farmers and merchants of Missouri and Illinois, remonstrating against the extension of the patent known as the Hedges patent and the Cook patent on evaporators; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Maria C. Fitzhugh and Anna C. Carroll, legal representatives of Daniel Carroll, deceased, and owners of Duddington Place, destroyed by the board of public works, praying to be indemnified therefor; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 762) for the relief of Josiah H. Pillsbury, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

HOT SPRINGS COMMISSION.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report for the consideration of the Senate a joint resolution touching the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) touching the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the committee to ask of the Senate the present consideration of the joint resolution. I desire, therefore, that it be read for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the time allowed the Secretary of the Interior to instruct the United States land officers at Little Rock, Arkansas under section 10 of the act of March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas," be extended for the period of sixty days from the passage of this resolution, and all further proceedings under said act be suspended until that time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the joint resolution explained by somebody.

Mr. PLUMB. On the 6th day of this month there was referred to the Committee on Public Lands a letter from the Secretary of the Interior embracing the report of what is known as the Hot Springs commission. By the law under which this commission was proceeding the 14th day of the present month is the last day on which the Secretary is authorized to proceed to give the necessary instructions to the land officers at Little Rock to make the entry of the lands according to the report of the commission. In the same report are embodied very serious charges against the clerk of the commission, affecting, in fact, a very considerable portion of the work of the commission. This matter having been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, the committee thought that while it was not informed at the present time sufficiently to be able to say what legislation may be necessary to meet the charges thus made, it would be eminently proper that time should be given in order that the subject thus presented to Congress in the letter of the Secretary may be investigated. They therefore ask that the time within which these instructions shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior be extended sixty days, which would give just that time from the 14th of January for Congress to take such action as may be necessary for investigating the report of the commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And in the mean time to suspend proceedings?

Mr. PLUMB. In the mean time to suspend proceedings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right; go ahead.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the effect of the joint resolution, and all of it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 969) to amend section 13 of the act of Congress approved July 12, 1876; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 970) for the relief of Thomas U. Rothrock; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 971) relative to claims of certain northern creditors; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 972) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna I. Guest; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 973) to establish the judicial district of Oklahoma; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 974) to repeal the twenty-second section of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," and to declare the rights and privileges and lands granted in said twenty-second section to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburgh Railroad Company forfeited, and that the said twenty-second section be re-enacted in favor of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 975) granting a pension to James O. McKenna; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RANDOLPH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 976) for the relief of Ezra Miller; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 977) for the relief of Benjamin F. Worrell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 978) to create an additional land district in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 979) for the relief of Captain Elias R. Ottinger; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 980) for the relief of Dr. George F. Heideman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 981) to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the application of Herman Miller for the extension of his patents; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 982) granting a pension to Spencer W. Tryon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 983) for the relief of Horace A. W. Tabor; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 984) to regulate the fees of the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States in Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 985) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Leggett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of E. Conrey and certain other northern creditors be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the following order at the request of a gentleman here in the city, one of my constituents, not knowing whether there have been reports in the cases or not:

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Joseph N. Lewis be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the papers in the case of Arent B. Sorenson, for like reference.

Also, the papers in the case of Arthur Connell, for like reference.

RECUSANT WITNESSES.

The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, RICHARD J. BRIGHT, esq., appeared at the bar of the Senate, having in his custody Len. T. Smith, Levi Wilson, and E. B. Purcell, arrested by order of the Senate for contempt of a process of the body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the 18th day of December last the Senate, at the instance of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, issued a writ of attachment against certain persons summoned as witnesses, residing in the State of Kansas, which was made returnable to-day. If it be the pleasure of the Senate, the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms of his action in the premises will now be read.

The Sergeant-at-Arms advanced to the Vice-President's desk and handed his return to the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1880.

In obedience to the within warrant I have arrested and taken into custody Leonard T. Smith, Levi Wilson, and E. B. Purcell, and now produce them at the bar of the Senate.

Respectfully,

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms, United States Senate.

Hon. WILLIAM A. WHEELER,
President of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the action of the Senate upon which the attachment was issued.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, ss:

The Senate of the United States of America to Richard J. Bright, esq., Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, greeting:

By virtue of a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 18th day of December, 1879, in the following words, to wit:

"Whereas J. V. Admire, E. B. Purcell, George T. Anthony, Len. T. Smith, and Levi Wilson, citizens and residents of the State of Kansas, were duly served with subpœnas in the months of September and October, 1879, issued by the sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, then sitting in Topeka, in said State of Kansas, commanding each of them to appear before said sub-committee and then and there testify in reference to the subject-matters then under consideration by said sub-committee, to wit, charges relating to the election of JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from said State of Kansas; and

"Whereas said Admire, Purcell, Anthony, Smith, and Wilson refused to appear and testify before said sub-committee as required by said subpœnas: Therefore,

"Resolved, That an attachment issue forthwith directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him to bring said J. V. Admire, E. B. Purcell, George T. Anthony, Len. T. Smith, and Levi Wilson forthwith to the bar of the Senate to answer for contempt of a process of this body:"

You are hereby commanded to arrest forthwith J. V. Admire, E. B. Purcell, George T. Anthony, Len. T. Smith, and Levi Wilson, wheresoever they may be found, and have their bodies at the bar of the Senate to answer for a contempt of the authority of the sub-committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, one of the standing committees of the Senate, and also for a contempt of the authority of the Senate of the United States in refusing to obey an order of the sub-committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to appear before the said sub-committee after being duly summoned thereto; and this shall be your warrant for so doing.

Hereof fail not, and make return of this warrant, with your proceedings thereon indorsed, on or before the 8th day of January, A. D. 1880.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the Senate of the United States the 19th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1879, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fourth.

[SEAL.]

W. A. WHEELER,
Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The witnesses may be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms conducted the witnesses to seats in the area on the right of the Vice-President's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Mr. Leonard T. Smith will please present himself.

Mr. Leonard T. Smith advanced to the area in front of the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What reason have you to allege why you should not be adjudged in contempt of the authority of the Senate of the United States for not obeying its process?

The WITNESS, (L. T. Smith.) When I received the telegram from Topeka I was out on the line of the road. I am building forty miles of road where there is no telegraph line. I got home on Sunday morning and received the telegram asking me to appear before the committee. On Monday morning I answered the telegram by saying that I had important business in Saint Louis on Tuesday and would have to leave Monday to get there to attend a meeting of some parties from New York; and I stated that I would report on Wednesday or Thursday; that I knew nothing about the election whatever. I was in New York at the time Senator INGALLS was elected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is that all?

The WITNESS. That is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the reason alleged by the witness sufficient for his non-attendance as a witness before the Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to say that I hold in my hand the return upon the subpœna which was served upon the witness, in the following words:

I made service of the within subpœna through my deputy, J. S. Collins, selected by James I. Christie, by reading same to the within named Len. T. Smith at his residence in Leavenworth, Kansas, at 6.05 o'c. a. m., and on Chas. H. Miller * * * on this sixth day of October, 1879.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms, Senate of the U. S.

The WITNESS. I wish to explain that. I got home on Sunday morning, and received a telegram. Monday morning I also had a subpœna. That is correct, and that is the explanation of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the further pleasure of the Senate in relation to this witness?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask if the witness is willing now to appear before the committee to testify in the case in which he is summoned.

The WITNESS. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The witness has said so.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that there is no sufficient return of a service of the subpœna made known to the Senate. An officer cannot return that he made service by his deputy. The personal knowledge of the officer making the service is necessary to hold the person subpœnaed.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will say that all that is necessary now is for the Senate to know whether the witness is willing to go before the committee and answer the questions which may be propounded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The witness says he is willing to do so.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Then I take it that ought to be satisfactory to the Senate.

The WITNESS. I should like to have my telegram read, if the Senator has it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have the telegram to which the witness refers, and his statement, I think, is correct in reference to the telegram.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LEAVENWORTH, October 6, 1879.

To Senator SAULSBURY, Chairman:

Know nothing whatever about the election of Senator INGALLS. Was in New York at time election. Have important business in Saint Louis Wednesday morning. If you still want me, I can get there Thursday.

L. T. SMITH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there any further proceedings against Mr. Smith?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I intend to offer a resolution to discharge the witness from the rule of attachment upon his appearing before the committee and testifying. I have a resolution of that kind which includes all the witnesses, which I thought I would offer, and I therefore defer the presentation of it for the present.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me the witness ought to be discharged. He certainly has not been properly summoned. We have nothing to do with the question whether he will appear or not. If the committee want him let them summon him. He should be discharged without any condition.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understand the witness to be before the Senate now upon an attachment. That implies contempt, upon the part of the witness, of the Senate of the United States. It appears here, upon revelations from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that the witness never was summoned and that the action of the Senate was ill-advised. The Senate has no right to bring a citizen of the United States before its presence for contempt, and then send him away upon any condition or without acknowledging the error.

I move that the witness be discharged on the ground that the service was not sufficient.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The witness said he was summoned. He said he was summoned Monday morning.

The WITNESS. Oh, yes; I was summoned.

Mr. HOAR. I submit respectfully to the very learned and distinguished Senator from Illinois that no court can take the confession of a witness that he was summoned as a substitute for a lawful return. There is no return before the Senate of the proper service of this subpœna. The Sergeant-at-Arms says that somebody else served it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have but one word to say upon this subject. It is a little strange to me, as the witness is here and professes a willingness to answer, that anybody should want to discharge him without condition. If the witness is absolutely discharged, he will be under no obligation to appear before the committee further.

Mr. TELLER. The committee can summon him.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Must the committee summon him again? Is that necessary? Is not the rule plain and explicit that he should be turned over to the committee, and discharged when he appears before the committee and answers? He is discharged by the Senate when he appears and answers. He is not discharged until he does appear and answer. Is it not a little singular that a question should be made as to whether the witness has been summoned, when the witness appears before the Senate and admits that he received the subpœna, and says he makes no point on it? The witness seems to be a very honorable man. He says he makes no point on that. He admits that he was subpœnaed; he admits that he was summoned. I cannot understand why there should be any hesitation in following the rule. It is not derogatory to the witness now; it is not to his detriment at all. The Senate will observe its own dignity and propriety, and simply discharge the witness upon his appearing before the committee and making answer as required; which I have no doubt the witness will do with pleasure, as he has said he is willing to do it; and if the witness is willing to do it why should the Senate hesitate?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think there is something more here than a mere matter of form. This gentleman before the Senate is an American citizen. The Senate of the United States has sent an officer to arrest him and bring him in the custody of the officer before the Senate of the United States. He appears here without counsel. He is a gentleman I have never met before, but, so far as I know anything of him, he is entitled to the rights of an American citizen. The return of the officer here does not show that there was any service of a summons upon this witness, and therefore the Senate had no right to issue an attachment. The Committee on Privileges and Elections had these facts before them when they reported to the Senate that the witness was in contempt. The error is on the part of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in leading the Senate into the mistake of issuing an attachment when there appeared to have been no service, so far as that fact is concerned, upon which an attachment could issue. For that reason I care not whether the witness says he was served or not; he is here without counsel, and it is the duty of the Senate to protect him. For an American citizen to be brought before this body under these circumstances is a matter of such importance that the Senate should correct its error and say to this gentleman that he is discharged; and if the committee wish to summon him again let them do it regularly, or, if the witness sees proper to appear voluntarily, let him do so.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I certainly have no feeling about this matter. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] wishes the strict rules of law enforced here, before you can take any action, in relation to the service of the summons. It may be that this subpœna was not in due form of law; that Mr. Christie ought to have served it; that his deputy ought to have returned that he served it; and that Christie had no authority to return what was done by his deputy; but, in point of fact, the witness got notice and he acknowledges that he got notice by sending the telegram which he did to the committee. The simple fact for the Senate to inquire into, as I understand, is whether the witness really had notice to appear. If he had not answered in any way at all, and only the return read had been made to the committee, there might be a different state of the case; but he does, by his telegram, acknowledge that he was served; and he says here to-day that he was served on Monday morning. I do not say that this service was in due form of law; it is not required that it should be. Anybody can serve a subpœna for a witness to appear before a committee, it seems to me. If in a court of justice it really appears that a man was subpœnaed by any officer, although the return may be improperly made, the court, if the man does not appear, will see that some action is taken in reference to it. I think that this is purely a technical matter. Whether the man should be discharged or not is another question. That he was really notified that he should appear before the committee is not only evident by the telegram which he sent, but by his admission to-day.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Illinois seems to me not to address himself to the question which is now before the Senate. The proposition of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is that the witness shall be discharged when he has testified in a pending cause before that committee. That is a clear implication of an order to continue his present custody until that testimony is completed. The Senate, therefore, is asked to make an order, in substance, that this man shall remain in custody until he has testified. That testimony may last a week, it may last a month, it may last the entire session; it depends solely upon the discretion of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, upon the condition of their business, and upon the length of their inquiry. Now that is a pretty serious question. What is the foundation upon which the validity of this order to keep this gentleman in custody for an indefinite period depends? It is that he has disobeyed a lawful summons of the Senate. In order that a summons should be lawful it must first have issued from lawful authority, and next have been communicated to the citizen by lawful authority; and there is but one proper evidence of that communication to the citizen by lawful authority, and that is the official return of the officer who did the act. You cannot prove the service of a subpœna from any court by the admission of the man that he has been served with a subpœna. The learned Senator says that the court will do what is proper if they learn in any way that a subpœna has been served; and undoubtedly they will; but I do not believe that that learned Senator ever in his life imprisoned a man or ordered him into custody without a proper return of the service of a subpœna.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I have myself fined witnesses who acknowledged that a subpœna had been served upon them when the subpœna was lost.

Mr. HOAR. That is a very different thing. Proof of the contents of a lost return or a lost instrument is allowed; there must have been one.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. When a man acknowledges that he was served with a subpœna as a witness, I do not believe any court in Christendom would refuse to punish him for willful disobedience.

Mr. HOAR. Would it punish him without a proper return? I take issue with the learned Senator on that proposition.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. He seems to know a great deal more about this case than I do. I have heard no statement yet as to whether there was a subpœna served or not. The resolution of the Senate ordering an attachment recites that the witness was duly served, and the Senate seems to have acted upon it, and declared that there was a service.

Mr. HOAR. That was merely with reference to putting the man upon his defense.

Mr. THURMAN. He ought not to have been arrested if there had been no service of the subpœna.

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly he ought never to have been arrested.

Mr. THURMAN. This reads this way——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will permit me to conclude the statement before he proceeds.

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. What I was about saying, Mr. President, is this: we have the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms, not that he summoned this man, but that somebody else did. We have therefore no return by the officer who actually had the legal authority to communicate the order of the Senate to this witness, and who undertook to exercise that legal authority. Now I submit that although that might be a sufficient ground in the discretion of a court for a postponement because the party was not in default, yet when you come as we now come to the question of authorizing a future and indefinite imprisonment or custody, the essential fact is wanting of a due return of an official act by the officer who is said to have summoned this witness.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. In order that the facts of this case may be understood correctly, I desire, if the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, to read the subpœna and the deposition of Mr. Collins who served it, and then the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms, because the party who made the service was regularly appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly I give way for that purpose.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us have that read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the Secretary read it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the Secretary read the subpœna, the appointment of Mr. Collins to serve that subpœna, and then the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms upon it, which will place all the facts of the case before the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Congress of the United States:

To George T. Anthony, Charles H. Miller, Levi Wilson, Len. T. Smith, greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority you are hereby commanded to appear before the sub-committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections forthwith at their committee-room at the court-room, Topeka, Kansas, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject-matters under consideration by said committee.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 4th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1879.

ELI SAULSBURY,
Chairman Committee.

To RICHARD J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States.

[Indorsement.]

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Office of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I do appoint and hereby empower J. S. Collins to serve this subpœna, and to exercise all the authority in relation thereto with which I am vested by the within order.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 6, 1879.

I made service of the within subpœna, through my deputy, J. S. Collins, by reading the same to the within-named Len. T. Smith, at his house in Leavenworth, Kansas, at 6.05 o'c. a. m., and on Charles H. Miller, at his residence in Leavenworth, Kansas, at 6.20 o'c.; on George T. Anthony, at his residence in Leavenworth, Kansas, at 7 o'c. a. m., and on Levi Wilson, at 8.20 o'c. a. m., in Leavenworth, Kansas, on this 6th day of October, 1879.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms Senate of the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Now, in order to complete the record of this case, I desire the Secretary to read the telegram of Mr. Smith in response to the service, showing that service was acknowledged by him.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS, October 6, 1879.

Senator SAULSBURY, Chairman:

Know nothing whatever about the election of Senator INGALLS. Was in New York at the time election. Have important business in Saint Louis Wednesday morning. If you still want me I can get there Thursday.

L. T. SMITH.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to state that this service has been made, as I am informed, in the way in which service is always made by the Sergeant-at-Arms. It is utterly impossible for the Sergeant-at-Arms to go in person to every part of the country and make personal service upon every witness summoned; and he has commissioned and deputized the party named in the indorsement on that subpœna to make the service, and then the Sergeant-at-Arms to whom the subpœna is directed makes return of it. That, I am told, has been the universal practice, and this return is in exact conformity with the practice which has obtained in the Senate.

This is all I desire to say about it. I have no feeling in the matter one way or the other. The witness acknowledges that he was served, and therefore there ought to be an end of the controversy.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the witness is here in arrest under a rule of the Senate to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt. The process, as it has been shown and read, is regular, and all questions raised by the Senator from Minnesota and his motion are now precluded. If he meant to rely on strict technical rules of law, he should have presented a motion to quash the writ and discharge the witness for want of authority to have issued the writ, or for any informality of any sort in the writ. But the witness is before the Senate, and the single question is, what will the Senate do with him? He has been interrogated upon this matter, and I think he has purged himself of contempt as plainly as any witness ever did in a court of justice. He has even gone beyond that and signified his willingness to go before the committee; and the question is, what will the Senate do with the witness?

I offer as an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota, that the witness, having purged himself of contempt, be discharged from the rule. There is no necessity for any condition to be imposed on him to testify before the committee, because the writ under which he appears here is still continued and holds him to go before the committee. That writ, or that process, whatever you choose to call it, is not exhausted. The one question is, what will the Senate do with him now? Either discharge him or punish him. Holding as I do that he has purged himself fully and completely, I think he should be discharged from the rule. That process still holds him to go before the committee. If he fails to go there, he is amenable to another arrest. I offer the amendment to the proposition submitted by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Arkansas state his amendment again?

Mr. GARLAND. That the witness, having purged himself of contempt, be discharged under the rule.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, the remarks made by some of the gentlemen on the other side seem to indicate that in their opinion the Committee on Privileges and Elections were in some way at fault in this matter, that they have ordered the violation of the great privileges of an American citizen without due consideration, have brought him in here when he had not been served with a subpœna, when he was not in contempt, brought him under attachment of this body. I should not care so much for that, but that the charge comes from one of the members of the committee. The Senator from Massachusetts himself is a member of that committee. He, if my recollection serves me correctly, was present when the chairman of the committee was instructed to ask for the attachment against this witness. The evidence was satisfactory to every member of that committee that the witness was in default, and the Senator from Massachusetts, as well as every other member of that committee, if I remember correctly, instructed the chairman to ask for the authority for his arrest; and now that Senator comes in to bear testimony to the Senate and the country that this committee had ordered an arrest of an American citizen who had not been served with a subpœna, and therefore could not be in contempt, and he rests this charge against the committee, including himself, upon a mere technicality, which the Senate has heard.

Now, sir, I assume that when the Committee on Privileges and Elections ordered or instructed their chairman to apply for this attachment, they did it upon satisfactory evidence that the attachment ought to issue. The evidence was satisfactory to me at the time as a member of that committee. It is satisfactory to me yet. I think the committee acted properly, wisely, and justly, both to the Senate and to the witness. I assume that the Senator from Massachusetts ought to have been satisfied and was satisfied at the time, or he would not have united in this order. We have no evidence before us now which was not before us then. If the Senator was not satisfied with the evidence then, he ought then in the committee to have objected to this order by the committee asking for an attachment. He did not object, and I must say as far as I am concerned as a member of that committee that the committee acted properly; they acted upon proper evidence; they were satisfied that the witness had been subpœnaed and that he had not appeared. They had nothing to do with the reasons of the witness for failing to appear, whether sufficient or insufficient; whether in contempt or otherwise, whether he was justified in refusing to appear or not was a question which would be presented when the witness himself came before the bar of the Senate and rendered his excuse. He has rendered his excuse honorably; he has made no point on the legality of the service or the sufficiency of the service; he makes none now. He admits that he was served, and before the Senate declares that he did not intend to be in contempt. He says he was willing to answer, but could not answer at the time.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Georgia answer why, then, keep him in custody?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will come to that. I will answer one point at a time. The witness comes here and says that he is ready to answer, that he did not intend to commit any contempt, and evidently the entire Senate is ready to accept his excuse as sufficient, and so the case is purged of any intentional contempt. Every member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is satisfied that this witness did not intend to be in willful contempt of the subpœna of the committee or the authority of the Senate. Why, then, these technicalities? Why go behind all this and behind the order for the attachment and assail the committee for having applied for an attachment either without evidence or without satisfactory evidence? and why does a member of that committee join in the charge, when he himself voted to instruct the chairman to ask for the attachment? If my recollection serves me, he was present; there was no objection in the committee; there was no point made such as is made here, but all the committee were satisfied that the evidence was ample to authorize this attachment; and whether the witness was willfully in contempt or not would be determined when the witness should appear and render his excuse. As I have said, he has appeared, he has rendered his excuse, and it is satisfactory to everybody.

Now, then, the question is, what shall be done? Practically I think there is no difference between the motion made by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Delaware, and the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas. There is a vast difference between the motion made by the Senator from Arkansas and that made by the Senator from Minnesota. The Senator from Minnesota in his motion seeks to implicate the committee as in fault and the Senate as in fault for having made this arrest; for if this gentleman has been attached contrary to law and without evidence, not only is the Committee on Privileges and Elections in fault but the Senate is in fault for having ordered the attachment. If there was any member of the Senate who had reason to doubt at the time that this witness was in default he should have risen and demanded the evidence that he was legally served before the attachment issued. Nobody did it. But the witness, I repeat, is ahead of his defenders. He makes no such point as these volunteer defenders of the privileges of an American citizen so eloquently present to the country. He admits that he did not appear; he admits that he was served; he admits that he ought to have appeared. He says he could not appear at the time, and gives his reasons. He now says "I am willing to appear." He makes no charge against the committee; he makes no charge against the Senate. He is content. Why should not others be content?

I am satisfied entirely with the position taken by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.] The witness was legally served; he was served by due authority, and he was served by due agency. Now, all we want is not to keep this witness in custody. Gentlemen make another technical point, and the Senator from Massachusetts says that to discharge the witness upon his testifying is to keep him in custody. Not so. We discharge him absolutely from the contempt, and that discharges him from the arrest. Nobody proposes to do otherwise. That is the difference between the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, which was promptly accepted by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Delaware, and the motion of the Senator from Minnesota. The motion of the Senator from Minnesota would seem to discharge the witness from the subpœna itself. That is the effect of the motion, for it says the subpœna was illegal.

Mr. McMILLAN. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes; you say the subpœna was not legally served, and you absolutely propose by your motion to discharge the witness from the subpœna itself.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to correct the statement he has made? I do not say that my motion will discharge him from the service of the subpœna, but that no return is before the Senate which shows a legal service of the subpœna, and therefore there was no right to arrest him as being in default.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I suppose the Senator has given the witness notice that he is under no legal obligation to remain and go before the committee; but he would not put on record a declaration telling the witness "You are not subpœnaed, you are not under service, you are not even under obligation to go before the committee." He would not put that on the record; but he makes an argument in the hearing of the witness which, if true, would justify the witness in marching out of this Chamber and going back to Kansas without appearing before the committee at all, and the committee would have to go through the sublime exhibition of issuing another subpœna, and having it technically correct, and having the Sergeant-at-Arms himself follow the witness to Kansas and serve it, and bring him back at the expense of the Government. That is a gallant way to defend the rights of an American citizen!

Nobody wants to keep this witness in custody, and the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts on that subject was wholly unnecessary. That Senator's experience ought to satisfy him, so far as arrest is concerned, that it is based on the charge of contempt. That is the foundation of the attachment. When this Senate unanimously adjudge, as I dare say they are ready to adjudge, that the witness is not in contempt, he is discharged from the attachment, he is discharged from the arrest, but he is not discharged from the subpœna.

Mr. TELLER. Nobody claims it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Then you claim nothing, and there is no difference between us. Nobody upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections proposes to keep the witness in custody one minute after we are satisfied he is not in contempt, for you have no right to arrest him and hold him in custody except upon the ground that he is in contempt, and nobody proposes to do that, nobody has proposed to do that. All we ask is, and we wish to give the witness notice, and let him take notice—all we ask is, that when we admit that these witnesses have purged themselves of contempt they shall proceed to give their testimony before the committee. As I said in the very last remarks I made, I thought the answer of this witness was amply sufficient and ought to be accepted. When we say he is not in contempt he is discharged from arrest; the Sergeant-at-Arms has no longer any custody over him; but the subpœna remains good, and under that subpœna he must appear before the committee and testify; not carried there by the Sergeant-at-Arms, not carried there as a prisoner.

I have deemed it necessary to make these few remarks. It seems to me this whole debate is on issues that amount to nothing. Nobody, as I say, wants to keep this witness in custody one moment after his contempt is purged. We all admit that it is purged; we all admit that his excuse is entirely acceptable. He is to be discharged from the attachment, discharged from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, remaining under obligation simply to appear before the committee under a subpœna which he admits he received, and upon the legality of the service of which he makes no point. That is all there is in it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia discusses a grave question of constitutional liberty with the argumentum ad hominem, without answering, indeed conceding the proposition which I submitted to the Senate that it was improper to order the continuance of the custody of this citizen. He thinks he has said something when he——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I do not know a man on this floor who has proposed to continue the custody of this witness after we admit that he is purged from contempt.

Mr. HOAR. The order to which the Senators on this side addressed themselves, proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was a resolution that this gentleman be discharged after his testimony before the committee should have been given. That may be this afternoon; it may be next week; it may be next month; and if it happens this afternoon in this case——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator will allow me to ask, discharged from what? The statement was distinctly made that he should not be discharged from the obligation to appear before the committee. What is the obligation to appear before the committee? It is not the attachment; it is not the contempt; it is the subpœna. We discharge him from the obligation to appear before the Senate under the attachment. He is before the Senate in contempt. We purge him of that, and simply let him go before the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the learned Senator from Georgia know that this gentleman is under arrest?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do know that he is.

Mr. HOAR. Now let me finish my question.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. You asked me a question.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator not know that he appears at the bar of the Senate under arrest, and that the resolution which the Senator from Delaware proposed is a resolution to discharge him from that arrest at a contingent time in the future? Now, if that be true——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Will you allow me to answer that? The issue between us is only one of fact. I say no, I do not know any such thing. I do know that this witness is before the Senate under arrest upon a charge of being in contempt, and he is attached and brought here for that supposed contempt. I do know that the gentlemen on this side of the House propose to discharge him from that arrest, propose to admit that he is not in contempt, and we only ask that he be not discharged from the obligation to attend before the committee on the subpœna.

Mr. HOAR. That is just what the gentlemen on that side of the House, unless it be the Senator from Arkansas whose proposition I did not hear, have not said. They have not said, "Resolved, that the witness has purged himself from the alleged contempt," or "is not in contempt, and be discharged from custody," but that he be required to appear hereafter and testify. They have said in the order proposed—and that is the one which we attacked; and the Senator from Georgia agrees with me at every step, if I understand him now, in principle——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I say to the Senator from Massachusetts, as I said before, that I see there is only an issue of fact before us, and it is because we do not look at the facts from the same direction. I say here I have not heard any resolution read at all in this case except the one; none has been offered yet. The chairman of the committee gave notice that he would offer one to cover all the witnesses when he could hear the excuses of the other two—there are three witnesses. He also gave notice that he was perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas as his resolution. Now, what is that? It is what we all say. I did say I would object to the discharge of this witness from appearing before the committee.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Georgia will allow me to correct him. There has been a resolution offered, and an amendment offered to that, and a substitute or an amendment to the original proposition, and they have all been under discussion here during this time.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. There may have been a resolution offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. McMILLAN. By the Senator from Delaware as chairman of the committee.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I beg pardon.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I beg pardon. I have offered none.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota is mistaken on that point. The Senator from Delaware gave notice of a resolution.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. And I say to the Senator from Massachusetts, we are all willing that this witness be discharged from the arrest; he is purged of the contempt. It is admitted that he is not in contempt, and he ought to be discharged; but he should appear before the Committee under his subpœna, not under the attachment for contempt, and testify.

Mr. HOAR. Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia now agrees that the resolution of which the Senator from Delaware gave notice shall be abandoned.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have never heard that resolution read, and I never have supposed that the honorable Senator from Delaware would continue the man in custody.

Mr. HOAR. Then the honorable Senator from Georgia is talking about something he has not heard, and does not know anything about; I speak with entire respect.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will say to the Senator that I have been debating his argument when he charged that the service was not good—that the witness ought not to have been arrested and brought here.

Mr. HOAR. I resume the floor, Mr. President. The witness is brought before the Senate in custody, and when the witness had completed his statement the chairman of the committee called for the reading of the return of the officer upon which the proceedings that led to the custody were based, and thereupon the Senator from Delaware gave notice that when other witnesses who were also at the bar had made their statements he would offer a resolution applicable to all the cases, and the Senate was proceeding to pass from the consideration of the case of this witness, and thereupon the Senator from Minnesota suggested that he should make a different motion, that the witness be discharged from the arrest—not from the obligation of the subpœna but from the arrest—and on that the debate proceeded.

The point I made was that the Senate could not properly continue for a moment the imprisonment or the custody or restraint of this citizen, because the only evidence proper to be considered here that he had ever been served with a subpœna was the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms that somebody else did it. That is not a technicality. It is the question of the legality of the imprisonment and custody and arrest of a citizen.

Now, the honorable Senator from Georgia says that the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections made no objection to the original order. Every Senator knows how those things go. The sub-committee who went to Kansas reported that certain witnesses had disobeyed a subpœna lawfully served. On that report nobody objected to their proceeding to make their application to the Senate. The return of the officer was not produced in the committee. It is heard for the first time here at the bar. In a very important case the supreme court of Massachusetts held that for such a purpose the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate could not make a deputy lawfully unless he was expressly authorized thereto by a vote of the Senate itself, and no such authority has appeared here or so far as I know has been given. The case of Sanborn vs. Carleton was a case growing out of the John Brown riots, where the Senate of the United States, on motion of Mr. Mason, of Virginia, undertook to order an arrest.

The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate undertook to arrest by deputy Mr. Sanborn, a distinguished scholar and man of letters in Massachusetts, for a refusal to appear and testify in regard to the John Brown investigation. A habeas corpus issued from the supreme court of Massachusetts, and the unanimous opinion of that bench was delivered by Chief Justice Shaw. I will read the marginal note of the decision:

A warrant issued by order of the Senate of the United States for the arrest of a witness for contempt in refusing to appear before a committee of the Senate, and addressed only to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate—cannot be served by deputy.

So that we have disclosed for the first time the absence of any proper and lawful service of the subpœna; and certainly no Senator will claim that for the purpose of punishment, of a continuance of the custody of the witness, the admission made unadvisedly and without knowledge of the law, that he had received notice of the subpœna, can take the place of a legal service.

Mr. President, on that point I understand the learned Senator from Georgia and I have expressed no disagreement. He deems the point a technical one. I deem it a substantial one, substantial not only with reference to the rights of American citizens, but with reference to the due and orderly proceedings of the Senate in the future.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I was engaged and did not hear the point read by the Senator from Massachusetts from the Massachusetts case. I will say to the Senator that the only point I made upon him in my argument, and upon the Senator from Minnesota, was that they denied that this witness was here properly; they denied that the return was proper; they denied that he had been legally subpœnaed, and they seemed to indicate that the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as well as the Senate, had all been in default in ordering this witness to be arrested.

Mr. HOAR. Nothing was said on that subject by any Senator. The imagination of the learned Senator from Georgia finds charges or attacks on the committee. This point is disclosed for the first time on the reading of the papers. It appears for the first time to me, it undoubtedly for the first time appears to him, and the Senator agrees——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have not given way for a speech; I have the floor now.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has not yielded the floor.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I thought the Senator had concluded and taken his seat, and that then the floor was awarded to me.

Mr. HOAR. I only yielded to the Senator for a moment, as he desired to correct me.

What I have to say is this, Mr. President: that the point is a question of the due and orderly proceeding of the Senate. The Senator agrees that the custody, which in the resolution of which the Senator from Delaware gave notice it was proposed to continue for an indefinite period, ought not to be continued at all.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Now, Mr. President, I think I have the floor, and I will say that I did not hear the decision read by the Senator from Massachusetts in the case from Massachusetts; but I will guarantee now——

Mr. HOAR. I will read it now, if the Senator wishes.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. HOAR. The marginal note is this:

A warrant issued by order of the Senate of the United States for the arrest of a witness for contempt in refusing to appear before a committee of the Senate, and addressed only to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, cannot be served by deputy.—15 Gray's Reports, 399.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That refers to a warrant, not a subpœna; and the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I will say in their defense, drew that identical distinction, and when we ordered the warrant to issue under the attachment, we ordered it to be served by the Sergeant-at-Arms himself, and gave him orders not to do it by deputy. We did not have that case before us as I remember, but we drew the very distinction that the court in Massachusetts drew. But when it comes to serving a subpœna, that is a very different thing. That is a very convenient method of giving witnesses notice to appear before a committee. It would be an absurd thing to say that a subpœna could not be served by a deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will permit me to suggest that whoever serves the subpœna must be the man to make the return. The point here is that the Sergeant-at-Arms returns that somebody else made the service.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is what I call the gentleman's technicality. The Sergeant-at-Arms here returns a fact that he has executed a subpœna by his deputy, Collins.

Mr. TELLER. How do you know that Mr. Collins made the service?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It is presumed that all official acts are regular. If the gentleman wants to make up an issue of fact here now as to whether Mr. Collins served the subpœna and whether the return is correct, let him do so, but I decline to enter into that. I thought his issue just now was on the correctness of the return, assuming it to be true. Now he wants to make an issue upon the fact of it. The witness himself makes no such issue. The witness himself admits that he got his subpœna, and he makes no point on it, but the honorable Senator over the way wants to join on the issue of fact as to whether Collins, the deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms, did serve it; and the Senator from Massachusetts wants to confound the execution of a warrant for the arrest of a person with the service of a subpœna to attend before a committee.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask the Senator if he will yield for a question?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Was there any evidence before the Senate worthy of the attention of any deliberative body that such service had been made?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Was the statement of Mr. Christie that somebody else had made service or done something else, worthy of the attention of the Senate upon a question involving the rights of a citizen?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The evidence before the committee was satisfactory to the Senate; I presume it was satisfactory to the Senator himself, or he would have made known his dissatisfaction.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that on all such questions we usually vote as the committees request, and if I voted for this order I voted for it under the assumption that the committee would not present here a case where there was not proof of service.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I was going to say that the evidence which the Senate had was the recital of facts contained in the resolution offered by the committee. Every fact recited by that committee is true, and the witness himself does not make issue upon a single one of those facts. That was the evidence the Senate had. It was the facts recited by the committee. Has the witness said that a single fact recited by the committee was not true? No. He says they are true as far as the service is concerned. Now, the Senator from Massachusetts says that I have imagined a case and answered it. I must be a visionary man indeed if the RECORD of this day's proceedings (and I insist that the Senator shall let it remain, and I dare say he will) does not bear me out. That RECORD will show that the Senator from Massachusetts in his opening speech made his whole point upon the legality of the service of the subpœna, and made an issue with the Senator from Illinois on that very question, the Senator from Illinois insisting that the subpœna was properly served. Now he wants to say that he makes no issue of the kind. Mr. President, the only reason why I take part in this debate is this——

Mr. MCMILLAN. In the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not wish to be interrupted further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator from Massachusetts knew that I had the floor, and I was not saying anything which he would regret to hear.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well, sir; I do not wish to interpose.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The interruption, then, was wholly unnecessary. I was going to add that all I have to say in this case is that I do not wish the idea to go out, authorized by anybody in this Senate, that either the Committee on Privileges and Elections or the Senate has improperly brought a prisoner to the bar of the Senate. This witness is here; he is justly here. The committee did its duty; the Senate did its duty. The witness did not appear before the committee as he ought to have done, but he has rendered to the Senate an excuse, which is satisfactory to the Senate and which the Senate accepts, and, therefore, purges him of contempt; but it does not discharge him from the obligation to appear before the committee. I say, therefore, the Senate was right in bringing this witness here; entirely right in all the steps necessary to bring him here. It has violated no privilege of an American citizen; it has violated no law. The subpœna was legally served. The service was legally returned. The witness was in contempt, for what reason the Senate did not know. The attachment was legally ordered; the arrest was legally made. The witness has been legally brought to the bar of the Senate—a manly witness he is. He makes no issue upon the legality of any of these preceding steps. He says "they are all correct, and I am ready to answer," and this whole debate is sprung upon the matter because of the overanxious zeal of gentlemen to defend the privileges of an American citizen when the citizen himself does not complain that they have been violated. And the Senator from Massachusetts likens a warrant to a subpœna and the service of a warrant to the service of a subpœna. Now, sir, we all agree that this witness shall be discharged from the contempt; he is not to be kept in custody, because we are satisfied with his excuse; but we had a right to bring him here and get that excuse; and when he is discharged from that contempt, let him appear before the committee under the force of the subpœna and testify, as he says he is willing to do. That is the whole case.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this debate has proceeded far enough. The Senate, as I should judge, intend to discharge this witness. My friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, said that when I was up I did not address myself to the question. I felt no particular interest in the question, as I saw the Senate would discharge this gentleman, except that it should be put on the right ground. Now he has purged himself of the contempt of the Senate by saying that he did not intend willfully to disobey the summons of the committee. My friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, wished to put it upon the ground that he was not properly served with the subpœna, and he has introduced a decision from the supreme court of Massachusetts that a warrant to arrest a man must be served by the Sergeant-at-Arms and not by his deputy. I said that in all courts—I spoke particularly of courts where I have been in the western country, not in the eastern country—a subpœna is not served as a warrant; it is served frequently by verbal deputation; and when a witness comes into court and says that he did receive notice to appear and give his testimony, he is held to be in contempt of the court if he does not appear to give his testimony. This gentleman was served. Admit that the return ought to have been made by the deputy, that he served it, then the Sergeant-at-Arms could have added that he had deputized that person to serve the writ; that would have been held unquestionable. Concede that what was done was wrong, that this gentleman was not bound to appear upon such a service, yet he does say that he received that summons, and he sent a telegram to the committee that important business called him to Saint Louis and that he could not possibly appear until Thursday.

It was the duty of the committee to have sent this gentleman word by telegram, or in any other proper way, that he must come at once if they could not wait until Thursday, and there is no evidence that he would not have responded to that. But his important business took him to Saint Louis. He says he was served, got the summons, sent the telegrams, had to go to Saint Louis, was willing to appear before the committee at that time, but got no reply to his telegram. Now, why should we discuss here the question whether this subpœna was properly served or not when he has purged himself of the contempt, and it is evident that the Senate accept that as a reasonable excuse and do not want to hold him in further custody?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is a great deal of anxiety to get rid of this witness upon the ground that he has purged himself from contempt. As I look upon it, the committee are very anxious to get rid of this witness; and they attribute here to two Senators on this side of the Chamber, who have expressed themselves in favor of the absolute discharge of the witness, a resort to technicalities. Now, sir, any legal right which protects the liberty of a citizen cannot be a technicality. The citizen has the right to rest upon the fact that all the forms of law must be complied with before he shall be deprived of his liberty, and in this case it appears to the Senate that those forms of law were not complied with. It does not appear in legal form that the subpœna upon which this attachment rests was served upon the witness. Upon a defective return you cannot presume the truth of any fact on which his arrest depends. The Sergeant-at-Arms, if he served the subpœna, must return it; and if another person served it, the Sergeant-at-Arms cannot certify that fact to the Senate. True, any person can serve a subpœna, as the Senator from Illinois remarked; but if an officer of the law serves a subpœna, his official return is the evidence of that fact; and if a private individual serves a subpœna, the return of the officer is not evidence of it; and if a court issues an attachment against a witness as being in contempt upon a defective return, the attachment is void, and the officer has no right to arrest the witness. The arrest itself is void, and the witness in this case, having been brought before the Senate in custody, has a right to demand that he be discharged because the forms of law have not been complied with, and the Senate has no right to say that it will discharge him because he has purged himself of contempt. He was not in contempt, because the forms of law have not been complied with, and those forms of law are for the protection of the rights of American citizens.

Mr. President, these arrests are common in these days—so much so that it seems all that is necessary to be done is to take a man in custody. True, this is a case in which the witness has made statements here which would relieve him from contempt under any circumstances; and that is the very reason why we can consider calmly the question whether or not he is legally under arrest. If the witness had not made such a showing here, if he were really in contempt of the Senate, then we perhaps might overlook some of these matters in punishing him by what would be a deserved punishment of contempt. But I insist, Mr. President, that the witness not having been arrested legally, the Senate should discharge him for that reason, and not because he has purged himself from contempt.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, and one which will undoubtedly receive the very careful and deliberate determination of the Senate. It is not a new thing to see a man brought into the Senate for contempt of the Senate. I recollect one instance in which two gentlemen had been subpœnaed before a committee and refused to answer a proper question; the Senate imprisoned them, held them "in durance vile" in the grandest room in the Capitol for some two days I think, where they received their friends, their families, and all the attention that politeness could show them; and at the end of two days the Senate was so penitent that it declined to proceed further, and without requiring an answer to the question, which was admitted on all hands to have been a proper one, and which the witnesses appearing before the committee refused to answer, the Senate discharged them. I do not remember that any resolution of thanks was passed to the witnesses, but the whole proceeding was an expression of the gratitude of the Senate at being able to get rid of the thing in so easy a way.

I understand this witness to have made an explanation which would purge him of any contempt whatever by showing that he had no intention to disobey the subpœna or do anything that would authorize his arrest on general principles. I do not know that he is connected with the press in any way. That is against him, but otherwise he is entitled to the same treatment as any other citizen of the United States. Now, as I understand the case, and as I understand the temper of the Senate, everybody is disposed to discharge this man from any further imprisonment. It would seem to be a case where the Senate should act as speedily as possible; and to enable them to do so I will not consume further time.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate should meet the question fairly whether we properly issued this attachment. That is what it seems to me the most of the Senate is not disposed to do. We can only attach a witness who is summoned before a committee of the body authorized to take testimony upon proof that he was summoned. Now, I submit to every Senator, if he will just think a moment, that there never was any proof presented to the Senate that Mr. Smith was summoned. When Mr. Christie came here with his return he said that Mr. Collins, his deputy, had served such a summons, which was no evidence at all, and the Senate proceeded prematurely, hastily, unwisely, and illegally, and the Senate might just as well admit it, and to prevent just such occurrences as it has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin did take place some time ago, the Senate ought to proceed carefully when it makes an order for arrest.

Now, it is possible that there was a due service upon this man; but suppose he came here and said he had not been served, the Senate would have been without any evidence that he had been served. That kind of evidence or that kind of a return which we have here would not do before a justice of the peace anywhere; and we should have been found here then freely admitting that we had improperly, illegally, and hastily issued a warrant. We have done that beyond a question in this case, and the fact that the witness says he was summoned does not make any difference. In this case probably it is not a very serious thing, but it is sometimes a very serious thing to arrest a man, bring him from Kansas or Texas or Colorado in the custody of an officer of the law for a supposed contempt of the Senate, and all these attachments ought to be carefully considered.

The honorable Senator from Georgia says he has no doubt I voted for the order. I presume I did. I have been in the habit of supposing that when a committee as important as the Committee on Privileges and Elections came before the Senate and said they had proof that a man was in contempt, a prima facie case, I could rely upon their judgment and their knowledge and their love of fair play that they would not do it unless they had the proof. I discover that next time when a case of this kind is presented to the Senate it will be my duty to see to the evidence and not leave it to any committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have not joined in the discussion simply because I did not desire to aid the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber in keeping this prisoner under arrest. My object has been to discharge him at the earliest possible moment, and I have a resolution now in my hand to that effect, which I shall offer if there is nothing now pending before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a pending question. The question pending before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] that the witness at the bar be discharged without conditions, to which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] proposes an amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I now offer this as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Minnesota——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the questions in their order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the proposition be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposition of the Senator from Delaware will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Leonard T. Smith, now in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms under an attachment for contempt in refusing obedience to a summons to appear before a committee of the Senate, has purged himself of contempt and expressed his willingness to appear before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and answer such proper questions as may be put to him: Therefore,

Resolved, That said Leonard T. Smith be discharged from arrest, and that he appear before said Committee on Privileges and Elections and testify under the subpœna served upon him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question. The immediate question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, that the witness at the bar, having purged himself from contempt, be discharged from the rule of the attachment. Is the Senate ready for the question?

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota as thus amended.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is not my motion in order as a substitute for that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I offer it as a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Leonard T. Smith, now in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms under an attachment for contempt in refusing obedience to a summons to appear before a committee of the Senate, has purged himself of contempt and expressed his willingness to appear before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and answer such proper questions as may be put to him: Therefore,

Resolved, That said Leonard T. Smith be discharged from arrest, and that he appear before said Committee on Privileges and Elections and testify under the subpœna served upon him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands this to be substituted for the amendment just adopted by the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senators who voted for the amendment I had the honor of offering cannot consistently vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware, for two reasons. In the first place, the proceedings are all of record, and it is not necessary to restate them at all by way of preface to the order for discharge. The action of the Senate always comes in the shape of a simple resolution as to what shall be done with the party under arrest, and it is totally unnecessary to preface it with a statement that he has done this, that, or the other. First he was examined and made a statement, which was clear and explicit, about which there is no contest. He is either entitled to his discharge under the rule, or he should be dealt with further by the Senate.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me? I do not want any unnecessary prolongation of the debate. I state to him that I am informed and believe there are precedents for the resolution as offered by the Senator from Delaware, and it is copied verbatim from the customary resolution in this body and the other House. It always has that recital giving the reason why the party is discharged.

Mr. GARLAND. The simple question comes up on the return, "What have you to say, Mr. Witness?" He has had his say. Now what will the Senate do? There are but two things for the Senate to do; either to discharge him, or to deal with him further. If you discharge him you must discharge him absolutely; you cannot impose any conditions upon him that he shall appear before the committee. That is the committee's further business; and if he fails, after they have done with him, then it is a matter to come before the Senate on a further notification from the committee; and it is perfect nonsense (I say it with all due submission) to talk about conditions. He must be discharged or dealt with in the way of punishment under this particular process; and if he has conditions imposed on him the Sergeant-at-Arms, if he holds him, is liable to an action for false imprisonment.

There is no way of avoiding it; there is no escape from the conclusion. The Senate has nothing to do with the continuation of the process. It is still operative; it continues to hold the witness. If he fails now to appear before the committee the committee can notify the Senate of it, and then it will be time enough for the Senate to act upon it when the question comes up. But we are now absolutely punishing him in advance and anticipitating a further contempt from him, which we cannot do.

The only alternative now is this: that he is either in contempt or he is not. If he is in contempt he must be punished; if he is not in contempt he must be discharged absolutely, and his further contempt hereafter will be duly taken care of when the Senate is notified of it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It seems to me that the Senate is unusually technical this morning; I have never seen it so technical. We propose to discharge the witness from arrest. He says he is willing to go before the committee. There is nothing in the resolution of the Senator from Delaware that he go before the committee. It simply recites the fact that he go before the committee as he has expressed a willingness to do, that is all; it is not taking charge of him. But the argument has been made that he is discharged not only from the arrest but from the subpœna, because it was not legally served; therefore the recitation in the resolution that he appear before the committee is not improper at all, but simply negatives the idea that he is discharged from the subpœna. As to the preface upon which the Senator from Arkansas makes such criticism, it is the preface which has been adopted in the Senate from time immemorial, word for word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. THURMAN. May I ask what is the question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. SAULSBURY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, for the information of the Senator from Ohio, as he was not in the Senate at the time, that the Senate has already adopted the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] to the effect that the witness at the bar having purged himself from contempt be discharged from the rule of attachment.

Mr. THURMAN. So I understand. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is wholly immaterial which we adopt, that of the Senator from Delaware or the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota as amended by the Senator from Arkansas. There are several precedents that I can recollect for just such a resolution as that offered by the Senator from Delaware. On the other hand I quite agree with the Senator from Arkansas that there is no necessity for all that. Here is a gentleman who has intended no contempt of the Senate. Every Senator for an hour has been satisfied that he ought to be discharged. If he is discharged, it is simply from the arrest and the charge of contempt; it leaves the service of the subpœna upon him perfectly good and he is bound to attend the committee; and therefore it seems to me it is a matter of no sort of moment whether we take the motion of the Senator from Minnesota as amended on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas or whether we take this substitute. The outcome will be precisely the same in either case. I hope we may vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, by way of substitution, of the Senator from Delaware.

The question being put, it was declared that the amendment appeared to be rejected.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not know that it is material, but we are simply following the forms of the Senate. I call for a division.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is called for on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The question being put, the ayes were 14——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I withdraw the call for a division. I fear there will be no quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is rejected. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to nem. con.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The witness at the bar is discharged from the rule of attachment.

Levi Wilson was next called, and advanced to the area in front of the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Mr. Wilson, what reason have you to allege why you should not be adjudged in contempt of the authority of the Senate of the United States?

The WITNESS. Mr. President, my excuse for refusal to appear before the committee at Topeka, in obedience to the summons that was served upon me, is that it was caused by sickness in my family at the time. I regretted it very much. It was not done through any disrespect of the Senate. I am now here and ready to answer the questions that may be required.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the answer of the witness. What is its further pleasure?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the same resolution which was adopted in the other case be applied to this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware moves that the witness at the bar be discharged from the rule of attachment.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The witness is discharged from the rule of attachment.

E. B. Purcell was next called, and advanced to the area in front of the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What reason have you, sir, to allege why you should not be adjudged in contempt of the authority of the Senate of the United States?

The WITNESS. I really do not know that I have any very good excuse. At the time my business interests were large in the State of Kansas, and I thought at that time probably they would suffer somewhat by attending the committee. I am here now, and willing to testify.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the reason alleged by the witness. What is its pleasure?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that he be discharged, as in the other cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware moves that a like order be entered as in the other cases in the case of this witness.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The witness is discharged from the rule of attachment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, two of the witnesses named in the attachment now in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms have not appeared, both of whom have telegraphed or written letters giving reasons why they could not be here to-day, and expressing their purpose to be here in a few days. One of them makes as an excuse the sickness of his father-in-law, and sends the certificate of the attending physician to the effect that his presence is required at home. I move, therefore, that the Sergeant-at-Arms have further time to make return so far as George T. Anthony and J. V. Admire are concerned.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 22, for the relief of Theophilus P. Chandler.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask if it is not time for the special order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I would ask the Senator from New Jersey to postpone the special order until to-morrow. There will be a good deal of debate on his bill, and we have had a pretty full discussion this morning, and I think the Senate is tired, and a good many members are out. I will move an executive session if there is nothing further to be done. I submit that motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe my motion is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion for an executive session is a privileged motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I shall make no objection to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from New Jersey to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 8, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL HERKIMER.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a communication in the nature of a petition from Hon. Horatio Seymour in reference to House bill No. 165, which was introduced to consummate a resolution of the Continental Congress of October 4, 1777, in reference to the erection of a monument to the memory of General Herkimer. I ask unanimous consent that the same be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The communication is as follows:

UTICA, December 10, 1879.

DEAR SIR: There is a desire on the part of the citizens of the valley of the Mohawk to erect a monument to the memory of General Herkimer.

There is one difficulty in the way. At the time of his death, Congress, struck with his heroism and the value of his services, desired to show the gratitude of the whole country and to put up a monument which would prove the feeling of all the States with regard to his bravery and patriotism. The following is a copy of the resolution passed on the 4th day of October, 1777:

"Resolved, That the governor and council of New York be desired to erect a monument, at continental expense, of the value of $500, to the memory of the late Brigadier Herkimer, who commanded the militia of Tyron County, in the State of New York, and was killed fighting gallantly in defense of the liberty of these States."

This resolution was sent by the President of Congress to the governor of New York, and others, with the following letter:

"YORK TOWN, PA., October 5, 1777.

"GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to transmit to you the inclosed resolves of Congress, from which you will perceive it is their desire that a monument should be erected to the memory of the late Brigadier-General Herkimer, and that they request you will take proper measures for carrying the resolve into execution. They have for this purpose voted $500.

"Every mark of distinction shown to the memory of such illustrious men as offer up their lives for the liberty and happiness of the country reflects real honor on those who pay the grateful tribute; and by holding up to others the prospects of fame and immortality, will animate them to tread in the same path.

"I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your most obedient and very humble servant,

"JOHN HANCOCK, President.

"His Excellency G. CLINTON, Governor, and
"The HONORABLE COUNCIL of the State of New York."

If the money to put up a monument is raised in the valley of the Mohawk without the co-operation of the General Government, after the express desire of the Continental Congress that all the States should show their gratitude, it will be felt that the memory of General Herkimer has been robbed of the honors the patriots of the Revolution wished to have conferred upon him. In this case it would only tell of the pride of this part of New York in his heroism and its gratitude for his self-sacrifice. We ask, therefore, that Congress will, by keeping the pledge of our fathers, give to the monument the dignity of representing the gratitude of the American people. We wish that all we may do by our efforts or subscriptions shall be subordinated to this aspect of the work.

As the matter now stands the action of the Continental Congress is an embarrassment. It is an injustice to the memory of a patriot, a violation of a sacred pledge, and a stain upon the honor of our country. We are sure members of Congress from all parts of our Union will be happy at this centennial period to make a suitable appropriation. While the action of our Government has been so liberal toward those who fought for the Union, it should give at least a pittance to prove that it honors those who gave life to that Union. The battle of Oriskany was of great importance in its relationship to that of Saratoga, which was a turning point in the revolutionary struggle—a battle in which there were men from most if not all of the original colonies, North and South, fighting for a common cause. There was no contest in the Revolution more fierce and bloody, with a greater ratio of loss of life, than that fought out at Oriskany.

There was one fact almost without parallel in the history of war which showed the spirit of the patriots. When they were pushed to the extremity in their desperate fight with the fierce Iriquois, their enemies were re-enforced by the tories. It would seem that this would have crushed out the last hope of the patriots, but the sight of these hated foes inflamed them with a rage and courage which made them irresistible; they beat back two forces, where before they had only a doubtful struggle to hold their ground against one.

The question comes up, Why has Congress put off to this late day the performance of its pledges? No one has ever questioned its duty; but when the subject has been before it other objects have been attached to the bill, and it has been overlaid in a way that has led to its withdrawal. We have nothing to say about the duty of our Government with regard to monuments. We should not appeal to it at this time but for the embarrassment alluded to. Whatever may be right with respect to the resolution of the Continental Congress, it should be allowed to stand by itself, and it is to be hoped that no one man will be so ungenerous as to use it for other purposes, however proper they may be in themselves. I send you a copy of the Centennial Celebration of New York. It contains a full account of the battle of Oriskany, and shows its events and importance. These have been overlooked in most histories, as it was fought in what was a wilderness at the time. It may correct many misunderstandings.

I send the book for another reason. It not only excites our pride as citizens of New York that it was the field of so many battles, but also our gratitude to the patriots from the North and South that fought on our soil to drive off invading foes and to establish the liberty of our common country.

We rejoice as citizens of this State that its history shows the courage and patriotism of the soldiers of all the colonies and of all the States.

I am, truly yours, &c.,

HORATIO SEYMOUR.

Hon. C. D. PRESCOTT,
Member of Congress.

DEALERS IN LEAF-TOBACCO.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the following resolution, with a favorable recommendation:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to this House any information in the possession of that Department showing the number of licensed dealers in leaf-tobacco and the amount of internal revenue collected from such dealers during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, under and by virtue of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, specifying separately the number of retail dealers in leaf-tobacco and the amount of revenue received from such dealers.

The resolution was adopted.

DEATH OF WILLIAM HINCKS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to lay before the House at this time, as a mark of respect to a valued and faithful officer of this body, who served for many years as one of the official reporters of debates, the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, January 6, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith preamble and resolutions adopted by the official reporters of debates on the death of their late colleague, William Hincks, of Cohasset, Massachusetts.

I am, with sincere regard, your obedient servant,

J. J. McELHONE.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 19, 1879.

At a meeting of the official reporters of the debates and proceedings of the House of Representatives, held this day, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas William Hincks, one of our associates, died in the city of Washington July 21, 1879, during the recess of Congress; and

Whereas for nearly thirty years he had served honorably and faithfully as one of the official reporters, first of the Senate and afterward of the House, bringing to the discharge of his duties, always responsible and exacting and frequently surrounded with grave difficulties, a mind disciplined by liberal education and informed by wide reading and large experience of public affairs, together with singular skill and success in the use of his special art; and

Whereas he never allowed personal, religious or political bias to influence his official action, but with unvarying fidelity maintained his character as an honest and upright man: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the decease of our late colleague has caused us unfeigned sorrow and regret, and now, in justice to his memory, we place of record our recognition of the high standing he bore in his profession and the integrity and ability which during a long career characterized his conduct.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be transmitted to the honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and furthermore that a copy, properly engrossed and signed, be sent to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that this communication be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. Will it not go into the RECORD, having been read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the reading of it takes it into the RECORD. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Michigan that he move the reference of the communication to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. I make that motion and also move that the communication be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ALEXANDER W. M'CONNELL.

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3279) to reopen the claim of Alexander W. McConnell, of Tennessee, before the commissioners of claims; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

EARL S. RATHBURN.

Mr. WAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3280) granting a pension to Earl S. Rathburn; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DE LA MATYR, for to-day;

To Mr. FORD, for to-day; and

To Mr. MURCH, for to-day and to-morrow, on account of important business.

STAR SERVICE DEFICIENCY.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and hereby is, instructed and directed to inquire into the causes and the extent of the probable deficiency of the postal star service for the fiscal years 1879 and 1880, and the facts which relate to said deficiency; and that the said committee, or any sub-committee it may appoint, shall have power to send for persons and papers, call and examine witnesses, administer oaths, sit during the sessions of the House, and generally to inquire and report thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BEALE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour now begins at nineteen minutes before one o'clock. The business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a public nature. The call rests with the Committee on Mines and Mining.

LOCATION OF MINERAL CLAIMS.

Mr. ARMFIELD, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 2418 the bill (H. R. No. 3281) concerning the location of mineral claims; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter any person desirous of prospecting and exploring the public domain of the United States lying within the limits of the State of Colorado, for the discovery of deposits of gold and silver-bearing ores, which do not outcrop or appear on the surface of the ground, may locate a mining claim fifteen hundred feet in length, and not exceeding six hundred feet in width, which location may be made by marking the boundaries of the same on the surface of the ground by at least six substantial stakes, one at each corner of the claim and one at the center of each side line. After the making of said location, the party making the same shall commence work within ten days to explore and define the mineral deposit, which may be done either by the sinking of a discovery-shaft or by an open cut, cross-cut, or tunnel; and so long as he shall prosecute his work of exploration and discovery with reasonable diligence, the said location shall be valid, but a suspension of work for the period of thirty days before perfecting his title, as hereinafter provided, shall operate as a forfeiture of his rights to said claim, and the same shall be open to relocation in the same manner as if no location of the same had ever been made. No person discovering a mineral deposit under this act shall have the right to follow it beyond the point where it is intersected by the vertical plane of the exterior lines of the claim, nor shall any person under the provisions of this act be allowed to locate a second claim in the same mining district until he has perfected his title to the first located claim by discovery of the mineral deposits therein, or unless he shall elect to abandon his said located claim. Within ten days after discovering the mineral deposit the locator shall record in the office of the county clerk and recorder a certificate of location, containing the name of the claim, the name of the locator, the date of the location, and a sufficient description to identify the claim. Persons locating claims under this act shall be required to perform the same amount of annual labor, and shall be allowed to patent their claims, as is provided in the act of May 10, 1872.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Does the bill refer to Colorado alone?

Mr. ARMFIELD. Yes, sir; it is a general bill, I believe.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Then I make a point of order on the bill.

Mr. BELFORD. It applies to Colorado alone.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If it applies exclusively to Colorado, I do not wish to make any point of order; if the bill is general in its provisions, I do.

The SPEAKER. So far as the Chair caught the reading of the bill, it is a public bill.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Then I make the point of order that it disposes of public mining lands and ought to receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ARMFIELD] contest the point of order?

Mr. ARMFIELD. I do not concede the point; the Chair will decide whether it is well taken.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the point of order is decided, I wish to call the attention of the Speaker in connection with the point to section 2320 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for the location of mining claims the same in length and in breadth as those provided for in this bill. As I understand, the bill proposes merely to change the law so that the claim shall follow exterior boundaries instead of following the vein of the mineral. As the existing law already appropriates this land, I submit to the Chair whether a modification of the law, such as the bill proposes, subjects the bill to the point of order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The change mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] constitutes the greatest departure from the policy of the United States in regard to mineral lands that has ever been proposed in this House; I refer to the proposed change in the law so that claims shall be bounded by exterior lines instead of following the vein. Now, as the bill certainly makes disposition of public lands and public property, I think the point of order is good.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to be heard on this point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman very briefly.

Mr. BELFORD. The act of 1872 provides that no prospector shall make a location on a mineral vein until he first discovers the mineral. This bill simply changes the provisions of that act so as to allow the miner to make location on the mineral land of the United States prior to the discovery of the mineral; and it provides, further, that so long as he shall work his claim with reasonable diligence he shall be protected in the exercise of that right as against anybody else. The only essential change which the bill works in the act of 1872 is to allow the miner to make a location prior to the discovery of the mineral.

Now, I desire to state to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] that in no respect does the bill affect the question of lode claims. It applies only to those mineral deposits which do not appear on the surface—that class of mineral deposits the discovery of which can only be made by sinking a shaft into the bowels of the earth to the depth of two or three hundred feet.

Mr. MAGINNIS. There are hundreds and hundreds of lode claims that do not make any appearance on the surface. The bill is not sufficiently specific.

Mr. BELFORD. The gentleman states that the bill changes the existing law in this, that under the act of 1872 you can follow the vein in its course, although it may enter the adjoining land. But in Colorado it has been held by the circuit court of the United States and the district court of the United States that this provision applies only to those well-defined lodes having hanging walls and foot walls; that it does not apply to such deposits of minerals as have been found to exist in the "Little Pittsburgh" and other mineral claims of that sort. Now, the object of the bill is to allow the miner to sink his shaft down to where the mineral deposit is found, and while he is so doing protect him in the exercise of that right. This is really the only change made in the act of 1872.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Does the gentleman state that this bill applies only to Colorado?

Mr. BELFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Then I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. BELFORD. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CALKINS. I renew the point of order. I think the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is raised and not resisted by the gentleman from North Carolina——

Mr. ARMFIELD. I do not concede the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to concede the point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to have the Chair state to the House the specific ground upon which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] makes this point of order. The bill contains no appropriation of money and by specific grant disposes of no public land.

The SPEAKER. But does it not provide a way by which the Government of the United States shall part with the title to lands in which it now has an interest?

Mr. HASKELL. It does not, only in so far as it amends existing law which provides the ways and means for this parting with title.

The SPEAKER. Does not the gentleman from Kansas suppose, for instance, the homestead act, which provided a way in which public lands should be disposed of, would be subject to the point of order?

Mr. HASKELL. Possibly it would.

The SPEAKER. What is the distinction between mineral lands and other lands of the United States?

Mr. HASKELL. My understanding of the point of order raised here in reference to the disposition of public lands is that it would lie only against those bills which themselves provide for the passing of title from the United States. This bill does not do that.

The SPEAKER. It provides a way by which the citizens of the United States can go and possess public lands of the United States having mineral deposits thereon. The Chair gives the benefit of the doubt, if there be any in this case, to the Government, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION.

Mr. GOODE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 334) to apply the proceeds of the sales of public lands to the education of the people, &c.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reported back joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes with sundry amendments.

The joint resolution provides that the supplement to the Revised Statutes embracing the statutes general and permanent in their nature passed after the Revised Statutes, with references connecting provisions on the same subject, explanatory notes, citations of judicial decisions, and a general index, prepared by William A. Richardson, be stereotyped at the Government Printing Office.

That 6,107 copies be printed, bound, and distributed as provided for the distribution of the Revised Statutes by the "Joint resolution providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States," passed May 22, 1878, and such additional copies, on the order of the Secretary of State, as may be necessary from time to time, to be kept for sale in the same manner and on like terms as the Revised Statutes are required to be kept for sale, and to supply deficiencies and offices newly created; that for preparing and editing said supplement there shall be paid to said editor such compensation, per copy, as shall be fixed by the Secretary of State, not exceeding fifty cents for each copy printed from the stereotype plates thereof, to be included in the sale-price of copies kept for sale.

And that to carry into effect the foregoing provisions sufficient money is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendments reported from the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee to which was referred Senate resolution 19, providing for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes, report the same with the following amendments:

In line 8, after the word "office," amend so as to read: "and index and plates, and all right and title therein and thereto shall be in, and shall fully belong to, the Government of the United States for its exclusive use and benefit."

In line 9 strike out "one" and insert "three," and between the words "and" and "seven" insert "fifty."

In line 14, after "seventy-eight," insert "and joint resolution passed December 21, 1878."

In line 20, after the word "supplement," insert "including indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete said work, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $3,500."

Strike out lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, as follows:

And that to carry into effect the foregoing provisions sufficient money is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I demand the previous question on the resolution and amendments.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether this should not have the sanction of the Committee on Printing?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think not, sir. It refers to the codification of the laws, and therefore, I think, comes properly from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. WHITE. Can my friend tell us exactly what will be the expense of this publication?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am not prepared to say, neither do I think any gentleman in this House can be prepared to say what will be the precise expense of printing any document or pamphlet or bill or resolution offered here in this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know this, that from 1873 to the present time there has been no codification of the original general laws of the United States. The second edition of the revision of 1878 only brought down such laws previous to 1873 as had been amended. It entirely omits all the original laws passed between 1873 and 1878.

The casual reader—almost every lawyer in the country when he gets hold of the revision called the second edition, dated in 1878—thinks he has the whole laws of the United States down to that time, when the truth is that the original and general laws passed between 1873 and 1878, are wholly omitted from that revision. It only contains the laws previous to 1873 and those which were amended between those two periods I have mentioned.

Mr. WHITE. Is it the intention, Mr. Speaker, to make this a separate volume?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. Or to publish it in connection with the Revised Statutes hereafter?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It will be a continuation. It will be a volume, of what size I am not prepared to say, but a separate volume, commencing in 1873 and coming down to and including the present session of Congress.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman from Virginia think that it is wise to pass this without reference to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do undoubtedly, or else I would not have reported it. The Senate unanimously passed the joint resolution.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question, whether there is anything in the resolution which authorizes this proposed volume to be read in the courts?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. Otherwise it may be a publication of little value to the country.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The great danger in that, Mr. Speaker, and it has arisen before, is that inaccuracies and errors may creep into the revision which no committee can have time during the session of Congress to examine or to correct. Some of our troubles under the revision of 1878 have grown out of the fact that laws which have been repealed have again crept into the statutes, and have become the subject of discussion in the courts, some holding that they had been repealed, others holding that they were still in force. Therefore we propose to avoid that simply by a codification, leaving the laws to stand as they are, with no effort on our part to modify or change them in any respect.

There is no reasonable man in the country who gets hold of the Revised Statutes or of the Statutes at Large published by authority of Congress who ever questions them unless there is ground to do so; and then the courts call for the originals as enrolled and on file in the State Department. No act of assembly published by a State has an enacting clause that it shall be the law of the land. It is so taken and so held by the courts until the contrary appears. I think the Senate acted wisely in not incorporating a clause making this the law of the land.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to him that I do not intend to require it shall be read in the courts as final and conclusive of what the law is; but there should be something that would make it prima facie evidence of what it contains; otherwise it will stand exactly on the footing of any private publication. I am opposed to voting money for a publication of what might be called a private compilation of the statutes of the United States covering the period mentioned unless we have something in this resolution which gives this publication some sort of authority to be used and read in the courts, such as has been given in relation to the Revised Statutes. In all the States there is just such authority. Most of the constitutions of the States require a publication to be made of the laws which are passed; and yet you may go to the secretary of state, who is usually the custodian of the original act, and there find out if there is a mistake in the publication and correct it. And look, too, this is a publication by the Government of the United States of a private compilation of statutes. It has not even the indorsement of the committee that it is right and correct in any form in the world; in other words, it is such a publication as may be prepared by any person in the country, distinguished or otherwise, and we are asked to give it our indorsement. If this supplement has been so correctly prepared, and if the committee is ready to say that this is correct—not absolutely correct, but accurate in its compilation, not in its revision—if they say to the House that it is accurate in this respect, then they will say it shall be published by the Government to be used by Government officers all over the country as an authority until the contrary is shown.

Now, I think it will be an exceedingly bad thing to pass this resolution without some such provision in it. I am not, Mr. Speaker, prepared to say what form of language ought to be used in making an amendment, but I will be very glad if the gentleman who reports the resolution will agree to insert some language that will give some authority to this publication, which is going to cost the Government a great deal of money.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to say one word in reply to my friend from Ohio. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws expressly provides by the amendment that this work is not to be considered a work of private enterprise. It provides that the stereotype plates shall belong to the Government, and that it shall be the work of the Government, and not of the publisher or the author of the compilation.

In regard to the other point, I will say that the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the Senate and myself held various conferences on the subject of this codification of the laws, which will form a volume of considerable size. No member of Congress can attend to his duties and compare every section and every line, word for word, with the original text of the enrolled bills; but we did so compare this compilation in the main so as to be satisfied of its entire accuracy, as well as of the notes and references to all the decisions which have been had on the subject; and I venture the prediction, sir, that no supplementary code has ever been published by act of Congress that has proved so valuable and so easy of reference as this will be to the lawyers and courts of the country. But we deliberately avoided, for the reason that there might be some inaccuracy in it, the making the code as it was the law of the land and to be received in evidence. That it will be received as prima facie evidence every lawyer knows; and my friend from Ohio sticks in the bark in making an objection which he himself would never make to a court of justice. If he believed the law was correctly incorporated he never would ask the court to call for the original enrolled act or the certificates kept by the officers of the two Houses. My friend would never do any such thing, and no lawyer of respectability would do it. The compilation therefore practically answers all the purposes for use in the courts that would be attained if it were adopted as the law of the land, and the course adopted obviates any objection on account of any inaccuracy there may be in it.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman who has charge of this resolution makes a very singular confession, or very singular confessions rather, when he says every respectable lawyer in this country would receive this supplement when published as prima facie evidence of the law of the land, and when he says here before this House that he and his committee are afraid to say that the published volume is prima facie evidence that it contains the statutes of the country. He tells us they are afraid to say that, and yet he says every lawyer and every judge in this country will be prepared to act upon this compilation in the administration of the law.

Now all I have asked and all I desire is to have a simple addition to this resolution, which will make this publication evidence in the courts to the extent of being prima facie evidence, and only that, that these statutes are a proper compilation of the laws of the United States. But the gentleman from Virginia says he will not go that far; and yet he says that the committee, as I understand him, have taken the pains to say by the resolution that this is not a mere private publication. I think my friend will hardly want to stand on that It is a private publication; it is without indorsement anywhere, save and except the indorsement of the compiler, who has made the compilation, without previous authority of the United States, as a purely private enterprise. The compiler may be entirely competent to do this work, and to do it well; but he brings it here to Congress and asks Congress to take his work and print it for him—not indorse it, but print it for him at the expense of the Government and for the use of the Government, but without saying whether it is accurate or not. I think the precedent is an exceedingly bad one. It is a purely private enterprise to which Congress is to lend itself, and for which it is to furnish the money to carry it out.

I cannot see any objection to the insertion of an amendment in proper language which will make this compilation prima facie evidence. If the gentleman will go that far I shall be very glad to vote for the resolution; but without such an amendment I think we ought not to adopt it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have no objection to accepting an amendment of that character.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the gentleman prepare the amendment in language which will be satisfactory to himself.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I suggest that the gentleman prepare it himself. I yield now to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MCMILLIN.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio that there is danger in the printing of this edition of the Revised Statutes. Still the committee reporting the measure think it proper to accept the amendment which the gentleman from Ohio proposes. The question has been asked as to the cost of this compilation, and it has been stated by the chairman of the committee that it is impossible to tell what the cost will be. We know this: that the volume will not be half so large as the volume of the Revised Statutes, which costs less than $3 a volume.

There is an important amendment proposed by the committee in this respect. The resolution as it comes from the Senate proposes to give to the compiler fifty cents royalty on each volume that is printed. In lieu of that the salary is given here of $3,500, and that will be a saving in the cost of the work of at least $10,000.

The work is very much needed, but we should not make it law without further investigation. It comes to the committee in manuscript form, and no committee with the other duties that devolve upon them can give the work the investigation necessary to their indorsing the compilation as evidence. After it is before the committee in a printed form, after it has been used and discussed in the courts and examined by members of Congress, with the work before them in a printed instead of a manuscript form, we will be able to say whether it is accurate, and next session will be better able to make any amendments that may be necessary in the way of indorsement than we now are.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. FIELD.]

Mr. FIELD. I agree perfectly with what has been said by the gentleman who has just sat down, [Mr. MCMILLIN.] I have taken some pains to examine this compilation. I believe it to be one of great value. I know it will be published by some one, and I think it ought to be published by the United States. The gentleman who has compiled it is a man of the largest experience in that matter, having for more than twenty-five years had something to do with the statutes of Massachusetts. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.] I am opposed to anything being made law that is not enacted by Congress to be law. The best evidence of the laws are the rolls in the Department of State. The acts published by the authority of Congress are legal evidence of the existence of those laws.

In the so-called revision of the United States Revised Statutes, which was made by a commissioner authorized by act of Congress, and who reported to the Secretary of State, the commissioner was authorized to incorporate verbatim certain amendments to the statutes and to refer to others. We did say that that revision should be legal but not conclusive evidence of the laws, and that in case of any discrepancy between it and the Statutes at Large the latter should prevail.

But in the case of this compilation which has been made by a very competent gentleman, which many persons have examined but which none of us have read through, which is not reported to the House in form and printed so that members may read it through, I am not in favor of making it of any legal authority whatever. When it has been printed and after it shall have been tested and examined, if gentlemen choose then to give it such authority they can do so. Until then I propose to have this compilation make its way on its own authority. I am very jealous about making anything law that we do not fully understand, or confusing in any way the text of the laws of the United States. I do not care to consider what the effect may be of making it prima facie evidence of the land or in what manner that prima facie evidence may be overcome, whether by the printed statutes or only by the rolls in the Department of State. I hope the resolution as reported by the committee will pass.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am willing to support the joint resolution with a proviso added which I deem necessary as a matter of caution, that there should be no mistake, that there shall be no misconstruction of the exact meaning and purports of the acts which we now propose to publish. I think there ought to be a proviso added to this effect: that nothing herein contained shall be construed to change or alter any existing law.

I think such a proviso is necessary from the fact that complaints were made by the judiciary and by the public. I believe that there were certain omissions or some interpolations and changes of law in the revision of the statutes which were not intended at the time of the adoption of the Revised Statutes. In order to obviate the difficulty and to put the matter beyond any dispute I ask that the amendment I have indicated may be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] cannot now come in. The amendments reported from the committee must first be voted on under the rule and then the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the gentleman having charge of the joint resolution [Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia] will accept the amendment I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The amendments reported from the committee will be first voted on, and will now be read by the Clerk.

The first amendment was to insert, after the words "Government Printing Office," the words "and the index, the plates, and all right and title therein and thereto shall be in and fully belong to the Government for its exclusive use and benefit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment was to change the number of copies to be printed from "6,107" to "6,357."

The amendment was agreed to.

The third amendment was to insert, after the words "passed May 22, 1878," the words "and joint resolution passed December 21, 1878."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, after the word "supplement," the words "including indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete said work, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $3,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The last amendment reported from the committee was to strike out the following:

And that to carry into effect the foregoing provisions sufficient money is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question will now be taken upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. KEIFER. I propose to add to the joint resolution the following:

The publication herein authorized shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories therein.

I wish to state for the information especially of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] that there can be no sort of inference that this amendment would change existing law; it could by no means change existing law. There can be no inference of that kind from it; but, upon the contrary, it is simply making this publication prima facie evidence of the laws of the country.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not understand that the amendment the gentleman has offered will affect in any way the amendment which I desire to propose.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood the gentleman to desire to have an affirmative proposition that this publication should not be taken to affect or change any existing law. The amendment I have proposed will have no such effect.

Mr. BRIGHT. The amendment I desire to offer is independent of the one which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has submitted, and looks to another point.

Mr. KEIFER. I misunderstood the proposed amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. BRIGHT. I offered mine as an independent proposition.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest to my friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to add to his amendment the words found in the Revised Statutes:

And shall not preclude reference to, nor control in case of any discrepancy the effect of, any original act as passed by Congress since the 1st day of December, 1873.

That is in the Revised Statutes, and I propose that it be added to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to the addition of that clause, though I do not think it necessary.

Mr. BRIGHT. The amendment which I have proposed will cover the point suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania move his proposition as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. KEIFER. I accept the amendment, although I do not think it necessary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio accepts the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The proposition as now modified will be read.

Insert after line 21 the following:
The publication herein authorized shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories therein; but shall not preclude reference to, nor control in case of any discrepancy the effect of, any original act as passed by Congress since the 1st day of December, 1873.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KEIFER as modified, it was agreed to—there being ayes 75, noes 28.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:
Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to change or alter any existing law.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There is no objection to that, on the part of the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT JUDGE WESTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. PHISTER. I am unanimously directed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to report back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 987) to provide for payment of certain expenses of the district judge of the western judicial district of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. This bill is reported adversely, and if there be no objection it will be laid on the table and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PHISTER. I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STONE] who introduced this bill to the fact that this is a unanimous report against the bill. Unless discussion be desired I move that the bill be laid on the table, and ask a vote on that question.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be laid on the table without being followed by the motion to reconsider and table.

The motion of Mr. PHISTER to lay the bill on the table was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the petition of John M. Glover, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department in the Forty-fifth Congress, asking execution of the order of the last House for the printing of the report of said committee with accompanying evidence, report thereon as follows:

That on the 3d day of March, 1879, the House ordered that the report made by the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and the accompanying testimony should be printed. On the same day Mr. CONGER entered a motion to reconsider, which was not disposed of, and Congress adjourned.

The Clerk of the House, feeling doubt on the subject, preferred to await such action by the present House as would relieve him of responsibility in the matter, and the order to print is still unexecuted.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the order of the House March 3, 1879, for the printing of the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department with the accompanying evidence be executed, and that said report and evidence take their place in the series of reports of committees to the House in the Forty-fifth Congress.

O. R. SINGLETON.
B. WILSON.

Mr. WILSON. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] to state how voluminous this report is.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know. The Committee on Printing, on examining the subject, ascertained that a former House, more familiar with this record than this House, ordered, upon the motion of the committee that had taken the evidence, that the report be printed. This report which the former House regarded as important enough to be printed has not been printed, the former order having failed through a mere technicality. The Committee on Printing recommend that the former action of the House be now executed.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to inquire whether the report which it is now proposed to print is precisely the report which was presented in the last Congress by the honorable gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Glover?

Mr. WILSON. In so far as we know or have reason to believe, it is.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to inquire further whether any expurgations have taken place?

Mr. WILSON. None so far as I know or have reason to believe.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated here publicly in this House that that report was not in the possession of the House or any committee; that it never had been in the possession of the House. In order that we may know what the report is before voting upon the question of printing, I demand the reading of the report which it is proposed to print. The Chair sustained a similar demand on a former occasion, as he will recollect.

Mr. WILSON. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know where the report is. It has not been before the Committee on Printing; we did not deem it important to have it there. We simply found that the order made by a former House had not been executed.

Mr. CONGER. There never was an order of a former House to print this report.

Mr. WILSON. The former House, as I understand, did make an order to print, which, by reason of some technicality—I think on account of a motion of the gentleman from Michigan to reconsider—was never executed.

Mr. CONGER. The order never became consummated by the action of the House. In view of the history of this report, and the fact that no member of the House, no committee, has been able to see the report, I and other members have the right to know what the report is. I demand the reading of the report.

Mr. WILSON. If the previous question is sustained, I am perfectly willing to give the gentleman ample opportunity.

Mr. WHITE. I raise the point that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. This report is one which occupied a good deal of attention outside of the House as well as in it. It is an examination by a committee of this House of the operation and service of the Treasury Department. It contains evidence which, if true, ought to go on the records as the report of this committee, and it ought to be printed. That ought to have been done, in my judgment, long ago. For we ought to presume, at least, that a committee of this House, charged by its authority to make investigation, had performed its duty. The presumption is in favor of its having performed its duty. That report contains information which, if true, concerns this whole country in a high degree, and ought to be printed.

Mr. WHITE. I raise the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this goes over until the next morning hour.

Mr. WILSON. It is the first thing in order to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. To-morrow is private bill day.

Mr. WILSON. Then it will be the first thing in order Saturday.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to proceed with the consideration of the report made by the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the report by paragraphs or clauses.

Mr. REAGAN. Is the reading by paragraphs to be considered conclusive of action on each paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The House has not yet made any order limiting debate, and under the rule the Clerk is obliged to proceed to read by paragraphs or clauses for consideration. There will be no limit to debate, except that no gentleman can address the committee for more than one hour.

Mr. REAGAN. At some time after there is limitation placed upon the debate I desire to be heard.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We are not going to debate it generally at all.

Mr. REAGAN. I think at the outset before limitation is put on debate I shall ask to be heard on a portion of the report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I inquire whether under the rule each paragraph as reported by the Clerk will not stand as adopted by the committee unless amendment is offerred to it?

The CHAIRMAN. It will. There will be, if any gentleman desires it, opportunity for general debate on the whole report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand there has been no limit put upon the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. None.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But that, as the Clerk proceeds to read these rules paragraph by paragraph, they will stand as agreed to, although the debate remains unlimited, unless they amend the paragraph as the Clerk goes on?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SPARKS. I understood that the report was to be read entirely through. Was not that the order of the House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; we are now proceeding to consider the rules paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The plan is to take up the report paragraph by paragraph, unless some gentleman wishes to speak at length. If some gentlemen wish to speak at length on the general character of the report, then they have now that right.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand that to be correct; but when you commence reading the report by paragraphs we are then under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. No; unless the House so orders.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I propose to occupy the time of the House for a few moments in a general discussion of one portion of this report of the Committee on Rules. Now, on page 5 of the Revised Rules, Rule XI, clause 7, provides:

7. To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce, [but they shall report the bill known as the river and harbor bill, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.]

The Committee on Rules in reporting this, on pages 9, 10, and 11 of the report, give the reasons at length which induced them to recommend this change. On page 10 of the report it is stated by the committee:

In the Fortieth Congress, as appears from the statement of Mr. DAWES, on the 8th of February, 1873, (third session, Forty-second Congress,) the Committee on Appropriations, being busily engaged with other matters, permitted the Committee on Commerce to originate and report the river and harbor appropriation bill, and, by an arrangement made in a conference between Mr. DAWES, representing the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Commerce, the latter committee was permitted to prepare and report the said bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations, which committee agreed, after consideration, to report it back to the House with such recommendations as they believed the general expenditures of the country required them to make, and that course has several times been pursued since that agreement, although it is true that during the preceding two Congresses (Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth) the Committee on Commerce has exclusively had control and charge of the river and harbor bill.

The Committee on Rules are of opinion, in consideration of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations are required under the rules "to report the general appropriation bills," (in which class the river and harbor appropriation bill should, by reason of long custom and practice, be included,) that they should have entire charge of all those bills, in order that they might the more fairly and fully control the entire question of appropriation of revenue for carrying on the several departments of the Government. It follows as a logical sequence that, if any other committee is to take charge of one of the general appropriation bills, the interests therein involved and considered will stand separate and apart from the interests involved and considered in the other bills, and as a further result any scheme of reduction of expenditures made necessary by a deficit of revenue for that fiscal year must be executed by the Committee on Appropriations without respect to the interests involved in the bill so taken from them, thereby leaving that particular interest to stand independent of and without any relation whatever to the other interests for which appropriations are annually made.

For these reasons the Committee on Rules have made the foregoing recommendations with respect to the river and harbor bill, believing that no good or valid reason exists why the Committee on Commerce should originate and have complete control of the river and harbor bill that does not apply with equal force to the theory that the Committee on Military Affairs should originate and control the Army, the Committee on Naval Affairs the naval, the Committee on Indian Affairs the Indian, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the Post-Office, the Committee on Foreign Affairs the consular and diplomatic, or the Committee on Invalid Pensions the pension appropriation bill.

After reading another paragraph or two of the report I will look to this. It is said in the paragraph preceding that—

The authority of the Committee of Ways and Means to report a general appropriation bill at any time, conferred on the 19th of March, 1860, was transferred to the Committee on Appropriations at the time the committee was created, and the latter committee was also clothed with all the powers and privileges with respect to general appropriation bills possessed by the former. Up to that time—

That is up to March, 1860—

no general river and harbor appropriation bill had ever been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, although it had reported in a sporadic way bills for the repair, preservation, completion, or construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors.

I observe, sir, the language here employed describing the character of the bills reported from the Committee of Ways and Means is the same as is always in the caption of bills of appropriations for rivers and harbors. I am persuaded that the Committee on Rules was mistaken as to a matter of fact in relation to the history of this character of bills in this respect, for I find by examination of the statutes and of the Journals of Congress through its various sessions that on the 27th of April, 1816, the Committee on Commerce reported the river and harbor bill, which became a law. In 1823, the same committee reported the river and harbor bill, which also became a law. On the 26th of May, 1824, a like bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce, which became a law. On March 2, 1827, a like bill was reported from the same committee, which also became a law.

So, then, I now come to reports made by the Committee of Ways and Means. I am speaking now of certain bills reported which became laws, leaving out of view all bills reported from either committee which never became laws. On the 19th of May, 1828, the Committee of Ways and Means reported a river and harbor bill, which became a law, and it continued through eleven successive years, down to 1838, to report like bills, which passed into laws.

Again, in 1847 it reported the river and harbor bill, and in 1853 it again reported the river and harbor bill, which became laws. It reported thirteen bills from 1828 to 1853 for the improvement of rivers and harbors which became laws, and appropriated therein $7,555,784. Now, with these facts before us, it is apparent that the Committee on Rules was mistaken in the assumption that the Committee of Ways and Means had never reported the river and harbor bill except "in a sporadic way," as they mention.

I have referred to bills passed upon reports and recommendations from the Committee on Commerce from 1816 down to 1827. Again, on the 11th of June, 1844, the Committee on Commerce reported the river and harbor bill, which became a law. In 1845 the same committee reported a like bill, which also became a law. In 1852 it reported the river and harbor bill, which became a law. In 1856 the same Committee on Commerce reported the river and harbor bill, which also became a law, and so in 1864 the same committee reported another. From June 23, 1866, down to 1879, the Committee on Commerce reported fourteen bills, perhaps fifteen, one in 1857 failing to become a law, for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

All the bills reported by the Committee on Commerce for the improvement of rivers and harbors up to and including 1876 aggregate the sum of $51,358,982. Add to this the aggregate of appropriations for 1878 and 1879, which I set down at about $8,000,000 for each year—I have not the exact figures before me—which leaves between sixty-seven and sixty-eight millions of dollars of the money appropriated for this purpose, having been appropriated on reports from the Committee on Commerce.

This would seem to establish the position that the Committee of Ways and Means for a long time—for a great part of the time during the history of the Government—did report bills of this class; and that for many years subsequent to this the reports upon which those appropriations have been made have uniformly come from the Committee on Commerce.

But it is insisted by the committee that the Committee on Appropriations should report this bill. Among the reasons given for this are the following:

The Committee on Rules are of opinion, in consideration of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations are required under the rules "to report the general appropriation bills," (in which class the river and harbor appropriation bill should, by reason of long custom and practice, be included,) that they should have entire charge of all those bills, in order that they might the more fairly and fully control the entire question of appropriation of revenue for carrying on the several departments of the Government. It follows as a logical sequence that, if any other committee is to take charge of one of the general appropriation bills, the interests therein involved and considered will stand separate and apart from the interests involved and considered in the other bills, and as a further result any scheme of reduction of expenditures made necessary by a deficit of revenue for that fiscal year must be executed by the Committee on Appropriations without respect to the interests involved in the bill so taken from them, thereby leaving that particular interest to stand independent of and without any relation whatever to the other interests for which appropriations are annually made.

For these reasons the Committee on Rules have made the foregoing recommendations with respect to the river and harbor bill, believing that no good or valid reason exists why the Committee on Commerce should originate and have complete control of the river and harbor bill that does not apply with equal force to the theory that the Committee on Military Affairs should originate and control the Army, the Committee on Naval Affairs the naval, the Committee on Indian Affairs the Indian, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the Post-Office, the Committee on Foreign Affairs the consular and diplomatic, or the Committee on Invalid Pensions the pension appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without discussing for the present the question of whether it would be advantageous to the legislation of Congress to refer the bills appropriating moneys for the different branches of the public service to the committees representing these several branches of the service, I propose to inquire whether it is true that the Committee on Commerce, acting upon the subject of a river and harbor bill, occupies upon that subject the same relation to the Committee on Appropriations that the other committees would occupy in the contingency mentioned here.

I will premise what I have to say on that subject by stating that there is no bill which comes before Congress that requires so much labor, so much time, and so much constant application on the part of the committee preparing it as the bill appropriating money for rivers and harbors. In the first place the consideration of this subject devolves upon the Committee on Commerce the necessity of the examination of two large volumes of reports of the Engineer Bureau and generally the examination of special reports which would make one or two additional volumes; and the hearing of members of the House and of the Senate, and of deputations from the various portions of the country desiring the improvement of their navigable waters; so that in order to consider this bill properly and intelligently, with justice to the commercial and shipping interests involved, and to know how to meet the necessities of this branch of the service, there is involved an incessant daily labor of three or four months. Can it be said in reference to the appropriations for any other department of the public service that this amount of labor, this amount of consideration, is required before a proper conclusion can be reached upon an appropriation bill? In reference to other departments of the service we have the estimates of the respective Departments and detailed statements of the wants of the service and of the laws under which appropriations and disbursements are to be made. But this committee is charged with the duty, not of executing existing law, as in the case of appropriations for other Departments of the Government, but of originating and asking for the passage of a law to promote the commercial interests of the country. There is that broad, clear distinction between the two lines of duty.

Now then, looking further at the question practically, at the means of considering such a bill, is it possible that the Committee on Appropriations, burdened with its extensive duties in considering the wants of the service in all the Departments of the Government, can have time to give the investigation and labor necessary to the preparation of this bill? I presume there is not one member of this House who believes it possible or practicable for the Committee on Appropriations to give that consideration to this subject which its importance and the very necessity of the case require. If it is not practicable therefore for the committee so to do, the question presented in the rules involves the consideration of the further question as to whether appropriations of this character are to be desired as beneficial to the general interests of the country.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas why it is that this bill alone of all appropriation bills is reported and passed under a suspension of the rules without an opportunity on the part of members to offer amendments or to discuss the bill? That has been the custom for years in this House, as I understand, and I desire the gentleman to explain why this appropriation bill, unlike all others, shall pass in that particular way.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, when I have finished what I have to say in the line of remark I am now endeavoring to present, I shall take pleasure in answering the question of my friend from Illinois; and if I should omit to do so I will be obliged if he will call my attention to it, for I shall be happy to give an explanation upon that point, but not in this connection.

I was endeavoring to show that it was practically impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to consider this bill, and that the recommendation of the Committee on Rules, in that view of the question, really involves the consideration of the question as to whether appropriations of this description are desirable; whether they are beneficial; whether they promote the commercial interests, and with them the agricultural and manufacturing interests of the country; whether they benefit the producers and the manufacturers of the country, and whether they benefit also the consumers of the country by cheapening transportation, by reducing the rates of insurance, and in the various ways in which these appropriations are supposed to benefit the commerce and the general welfare of the country. If it is concluded by the House that it is desirable to have such appropriations, then the question arises, How shall we have them made? Will you intrust the preparation of a bill for this purpose to a committee that you know in advance cannot give to it the labor and consideration necessary to the preparation of a measure that will satisfy the House and the country?

But I may be answered that it is proposed in the revision of the rules that the Committee on Commerce shall go through this labor, that it shall report a bill, and that that bill shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. To me, Mr. Chairman, there is something in this feature of the recommendation that is singular, to say the least of it. Is it to be assumed that any one committee of this House, and especially a committee which has charge of questions relating to the commerce of the country, the mightiest interest that affects the people of this land, is to assume the subordinate position of acting as amanuenses and clerks for another committee of this House; that it is to devote three or four months of labor, day and night, morning and evening, to the preparation of a bill to be by it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which in as many hours as we devote months to it may determine whether we have wisely, honestly, patriotically discharged our duty to the country in the framing of such a bill? Is it possible that it is contemplated that any committee of this House would assume that position? The committee which did that would be guilty of the self-confessed degradation of going through the work of reporting a bill and submitting it, not for the revision of this House, which has the rightful authority to revise all proposed legislation, but to the revision of a committee which, however able and earnest and honest it may be, cannot possibly have time to consider the subject.

These are some of the considerations which induce me to think that the recommendation of the Committee on Rules is not wise, that it is not for the best interest of the country. If a charge is to be made in this respect, if the House is not willing to confide this important measure to the Committee on Commerce, I invoke the members to take it from that committee and give it to the Committee on Appropriations, and let that committee go through the labor of preparing such a bill, if it can. I ask that the House shall adopt no such rule as would require one of the committees of this House to become the clerk of another committee of this House. I cannot speak for any one else; for myself I do not feel that I was sent here to act as clerk for any member or any committee, and if I retain my reason and my self-respect I surely shall never do so.

Are these appropriations useful to the country? We have the history of this subject from 1816 to this time. We have before us the history of appropriations amounting to seventy-odd millions of dollars, for the improvement of rivers and harbors; for the deepening of the inlets to harbors and for removing obstructions from them; for deepening the channels of rivers and removing obstructions from them; for cheapening transportation and thereby benefiting the producers and consumers of the country; for reducing the rate of insurance by removing dangers, and thereby cheapening the cost of transportation and benefiting the whole American people. That is the idea upon which we proceed in the preparation of these bills. In my opinion it is a proper subject of legislation, and a useful class of appropriations, upon the supposition, of course, always that the appropriations are wisely and justly made and properly applied and administered.

If we are not to make such appropriations, if it is unwise to have them, then the House ought to say so. But if it be wise to have them, then the House ought to adopt that course which will secure the making of these appropriations in the best possible manner. And that, I submit to the House, is the issue involved in this proposed new rule. I doubt not it will be developed that this new rule will be sustained by every member who doubts the propriety and the policy of this class of appropriations.

I was asked by my friend from Illinois [Mr. STEVENSON] why it was that these bills had been reported to the House and passed under a suspension of the rules, and without debate and consideration by the House or in Committee of the Whole. Before I answer that question I have this suggestion to make, which may be deserving of some consideration by those who have the same inquiry in mind which my friend from Illinois has made.

If the Committee on Commerce shall be required to report to the Committee on Appropriations, then the Committee on Appropriations reporting the bill to the House may secure its passage by a majority vote. Now, I would certainly oppose any scheme which would authorize a majority of the members of this House to pass such a bill under a suspension of the rules.

However, if a report from the Committee on Appropriations should not be passed under a suspension of the rules, but should be open to debate and amendment, we should then witness probably what it has been supposed all the time we would witness should such bills be open to free debate and amendment. They would soon be so loaded down with additional appropriations that no member of the House would vote for them, and in that way all such appropriations would be defeated.

Mr. STEVENSON. If that is true, is not that then a committee taking legislation out of the control of the House and trusting all such legislation as this to a committee of the House?

Mr. REAGAN. I will say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. STEVENSON] that the passing of this class of legislation under a suspension of the rules is not and has not been a favored practice with me, as I have often mentioned in this House; and I will have more to say on that subject as I go along. It is an exception to the rule of legislation; it is not the way in which I would desire to see any bill passed. It has been assumed that these appropriations are necessary, and that if these bills are brought before the House subject to debate and amendment they would be so loaded down with amendments increasing the appropriation that no member would vote for the bill, and thus all appropriations would be defeated.

I admit that this is a supposition and speculation. I have not known that it has been tested. I have been inclined to see, and I am now inclined to see, the question tested as to whether this House would so load down such a bill. I am yet inclined, as I have been in the past, to see if we report this session an appropriation bill for rivers and harbors whether that bill can go before a Committee of the Whole House and be open for free debate and amendment without being so loaded down. That is a matter yet to be demonstrated.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] whether he wishes to be understood as saying that he is afraid to trust the House with legislation of this character? If I understand his position, it is that this legislation is a matter of such sacred character that it must be left entirely in the hands of a committee; that it is unsafe to trust the House with it, for fear it will appropriate unnecessarily large amounts or defeat the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I am sorry my friend so thoroughly misunderstands my proposition. He surely could not have been listening carefully to what I have said. I was stating what had influenced the House to adopt this course, and not my opinion. I was giving my opinion as to the influences operating upon this House from year to year to induce it to adopt the course referred to in the passage of these bills.

I would leave nothing unsaid that I ought to say, and shall not do so unless it be by accident. When I have finished the point or two which I desire to present, if I have time I would be glad to answer any question that gentlemen may desire to ask; but as I am somewhat unaccustomed to public speaking I am sometimes a little disconcerted by the asking of questions while endeavoring to present my argument.

Mr. Chairman, I was saying that for myself I would desire to see a river and harbor bill put before this House for consideration in detail—first, to ascertain by practical experiment whether the supposition is correct, that that plan would defeat the passage of the bill; next, and as high as that perhaps, looking to the policy of this character of appropriations, that one such bill, at least, should come before the House and be open to free debate and amendment, because it would do much to give this House correct information as to the basis upon which such bills are framed. I understand, sir, why members dislike to vote upon a bill which they are not permitted to debate or amend. I think it is a reasonable feeling; I do not object to it; and in reporting such bills to be passed under a suspension of the rules I have been controlled by the sentiment of the House and the committee that any other course would be dangerous to the public interests by defeating such a measure.

Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that the Committee on Rules made a report on this subject during the late extra session of Congress, providing that it should require three-fourths of the members to suspend the rules and pass a river and harbor bill. That question was brought up for consideration in this very Congress; and the action of this House was so clear and emphatic that it seems to me it ought to have been regarded as an instruction to the Committee on Rules. I have not before me the report of that committee; I am informed that it was not printed; hence I cannot state precisely the recommendation of the Committee on Rules on this subject, but upon my motion the House adopted as a substitute for the rule recommended by the committee the following:

Hereafter the Committee on Commerce shall have the same privilege to report bills making appropriations for improvement of rivers and harbors that is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills.

That proposition was adopted on the 9th of April last, after a sharp and interesting debate, by a vote of 146 yeas and 97 nays, and it seems to me the action taken at that time ought to have been regarded by the Committee on Rules as the voice of this House upon that subject, for if we regard here the rule, stare decisis, it settled the question for this House by an overwhelming majority. It settled the question of jurisdiction of this subject, which had been a controverted one for forty years between the Committee of Ways and Means, the Committee on Roads and Canals, and the Committee on Commerce. Thirty years ago those three committees engaged in a most interesting discussion on this subject, each committee claiming jurisdiction of it. I believe my friend from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] was a member of the Committee on Commerce at that time. It was then determined by the House that the Committee on Commerce should have jurisdiction of the question.

At various periods there have been controversies on the reference of bills, petitions, &c., to committees. In the Forty-fourth Congress the point was made by Mr. Jones, then a Representative from Kentucky and chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals, that that committee should have jurisdiction of this subject. The question was submitted to the Speaker, Mr. Kerr holding the position at that time, and was decided by him in favor of retaining the jurisdiction in the hands of the Committee on Commerce.

Many members will recollect the earnest contest and somewhat prolonged debate in the Forty-fifth Congress in which the Committee on Roads and Canals in a formal report, sustained by able argument, claimed jurisdiction of this subject; when the House upon full debate and careful consideration awarded the jurisdiction of the matter to the Committee on Commerce.

I thus present the several adjudications or decisions made at different times up to the one made on the 9th of April last, fixing finally by a rule of the House the question of jurisdiction and conferring on the Committee on Commerce the same powers and privileges in reporting a river and harbor bill that are conferred on the Committee on Appropriations in reporting a general appropriation bill.

In view of the history of this subject it seems to me that the recent action of the House at the extra session ought to have been regarded as an instruction to the Committee on Rules which should have prevented them, so soon after a decision of the question, from asking the reversal of the rule and a change of jurisdiction, especially from asking that any committee of the House be made clerk to another committee, to go through months of work to be passed upon in as many hours by another committee, the latter determining whether the former in the exercise of their duties as members of the committee of the House had performed those duties faithfully, patriotically, and honestly.

It is only necessary to refer to the files and records of this House to understand the importance of the character of this committee on commerce. It is only necessary to review the bills acted upon and reported by it to understand that its duty is to consider questions of the highest possible interest to the whole American people.

It is to be taken for granted that the Speaker of the House in organizing a committee with such responsible and important duties will assign to the discharge of those duties gentlemen who have capacity to comprehend the great interests this committee is required to consider and patriotism enough to discharge the duty faithfully to the House and to the country. No committee of this House has more responsible duties to perform; certainly not the Committee on Appropriations, which simply takes the estimates of the Departments, adds, subtracts, and divides, sees how much it can cut down, without studying specially the great and peculiar interests of each Department—a committee without power to consider these subjects as they ought to be considered by the several committees who have charge of the different branches of the service. I accord to the members of the Appropriations Committee the merit of ability and industry, as we all do. I know the difficulty of the labors they have to perform. I approve their efforts to reduce in every reasonable and proper way the expenditures of the Government, but I do not consider it the very acme of statesmanship to reduce appropriations in all cases. Instead of looking to the greatest possible reduction of expenditures in all cases, I think it devolves upon Congress to consider the wants of the public service, the interests of the country, and to provide for those wants by appropriating the money necessary to give efficiency to the various Departments of the Government.

I have stated these several reasons, and have desired to do so before we entered upon the five-minute debate, and especially because I regarded the question presented in these amendments to the rules as one of no ordinary interest to the whole country.

There is another statement in regard to the suspension of the rules which I might have made in response to my friend from Illinois. The passage of a bill under a suspension of the rules is not the passage of a bill in violation of the rules or in disregard of the will of the House. It is the passage of a bill under the rules of the House according to the will of the House as prescribed by the rules, and is the will of the House; and if the Committee on Commerce shall be able to frame a bill which will command the support and approval of two-thirds of the members of this House, then it cannot probably be very far wrong.

Now, going back to another point, I did not say all I ought to have said when speaking of my desire to see one such bill discussed by this House. Every time the river and harbor bill has come up we have had various suggestions made here on this floor about our appropriating money to improve dry creeks and suggestions that we should macadamize them instead of providing for their navigation; that we have appropriated money for pretended creeks and rivers where there were none. And the newspapers of the country, no wiser than members of Congress, have echoed this statement all over the country. I want one bill to come before this House to put a quietus to that sort of demagogy and misrepresentation. I wish to state now, because we shall probably hear it here again and I want to state in advance of hearing it again, that since I have been on the committee, now for five years, it has never made an appropriation to improve navigable waters that were not navigated by steam-vessels before the appropriation was made. It has never made an appropriation to improve navigable waters until after a survey had been made by the Engineer Corps and the improvement of the river recommended and an estimate given of the cost of the proposed improvement. This ought to be an answer to that flippant demagogism so frequently heard through the country in the press and so often heard upon this floor.

I make this statement in the presence of the present committee and believe it is true in reference to the action of former committees. My understanding is that it has always been the rule not to make an appropriation except for navigable waters after survey made by the Engineer Corps and estimate of the cost and recommendation of the work; so that if the committee, listening to the reports of the engineers, listening to the demands of the interest of commerce, see proper to ask for an appropriation to improve the navigation for the benefit of that commerce, it is because they believe it will benefit the public interests and promote the general welfare of the country.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in my judgment the proposed change of the rule involves distinctly the question whether we shall have such appropriations made in the future. If it is the sense of this House they are not proper appropriations to be made, if it is the sense of the House the public welfare is not promoted by them, if it is the sense of the House the commerce of the country, its agriculture, its mining, its manufactures, all its interests, are not promoted by it, then let it squarely decide we shall have no such bill; or, if it thinks it should be killed by indirection, then let this committee determine to take it out of the hands of the Committee on Commerce and put it into the hands of a wet-nurse who will be certain to strangle it.

Mr. McLANE. With the permission of the gentleman from Texas, I wish to call his attention to the inquiry made by our friend from Illinois. The objection taken to the river and harbor bill in that inquiry was that it was a bill to be passed under a suspension of the rules. I would like the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to explain more fully to the committee that there is no provision in the old or newly proposed rules providing for any such passage of the river and harbor bill. The passage of a river and harbor bill under a suspension of the rules is precisely the same as the passage of the Army bill, or the Navy bill, or any other appropriation bill, under a suspension of the rules, and can be ordered at the pleasure of the House. There is nothing in the rule which gives to the Committee on Commerce the preparation of an appropriation bill for rivers and harbors any authority for the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules. Such a mode of passing the bill is subject to the order of the House when the committee reports. The inquiry, therefore, as to why a river and harbor bill should pass under a suspension of the rule is not pertinent to the question of whether the Committee on Commerce should report it or not.

The river and harbor bill is to be passed as every other bill is to be passed, either as the order of business provides or by a vote of two-thirds, which takes it out of the order of business

Mr. MILLS. Let me say to the gentleman from Maryland that the sundry civil appropriation bill was passed last year under a suspension of the rules, and on motion of the Committee on Appropriations itself.

Mr. McLANE. Certainly; and over and over again appropriation bills have been passed by suspension of the rules.

Mr. SPARKS. That is so, of course; but does the gentleman approve of it?

Mr. McLANE. I not only approve it, Mr. Chairman, but time and again, if bills were not passed under a suspension of the rules, they would not be passed at all.

Mr. SPARKS. Then the gentleman is in conflict with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, because he does not approve of it.

Mr. McLANE. No, sir; the chairman of the Committee on Commerce said to the gentleman from Illinois that he was not in favor of a general rule which would enable us to pass the river and harbor bill under a suspension, and I am not advocating any such general rule. On the contrary, I am taking the distinction that there is no such rule applying to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I beg pardon, but I understood the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to state distinctly that he was opposed to the principle.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The practice.

Mr. SPARKS. The practice and the principle of passing appropriation bills under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. McLANE. So am I, Mr. Chairman. To the inquiry as now put by the gentleman from Illinois, as to whether we should pass appropriation bills under a suspension of the rules, as a general thing every man would give a negative reply. It is only in peculiar cases to be judged of by this House, to be judged of by two-thirds of this House, when an appropriation bill should be passed under a suspension of the rules. And what I say to my friend from Illinois is that the river and harbor bill should stand precisely as every other appropriation bill stands.

Mr. SPARKS. Does not the gentleman from Maryland know that in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses no river and harbor appropriation bill was passed which was not passed under a suspension of the rules? Hence they have made it the rule, and not the exception to the rule, to pass it in that way.

Mr. McLANE. As to the last Congress and the Congress before that, it was not my good fortune to be the colleague of the gentleman from Illinois. What I say has reference to a long series of years; and though the gentleman may be able to indicate the Forty-fifth or Forty-fourth Congress, I can reply to him that if he will take the ten preceding Congresses he will find that river and harbor appropriation bills were debated as freely as any other appropriation bills. And now, with the permission of the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I should like to call the attention of my honorable friend to this fact, that appropriation bills, as the session progresses and the crisis comes, are not only obliged to be passed under a suspension of the rules, but they are obliged to be passed without being read when they come from the committees of conference.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McLANE. Let me conclude this point first, as I am interested in presenting my own views of the matter. The gentleman from Illinois takes exception to the explanation that I make. Now I think I have answered him frankly and fully. Like the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I am opposed to any general rule or to any general practice which would pass any appropriation bill under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman will allow me one moment. I think he misunderstands the position of these conference committees.

Mr. McLANE. That is another question.

Mr. SPARKS. There never has been a conference report acted upon without reading what was the action of the committee of conference. We know that in conference certain points are reconciled, but those points have always been fully explained to the House before action was taken on the report itself. In the conference committee they have the general bill and the action on that bill by both Houses.

Mr. McLANE. The reference I made to the conference committee and the conference report has nothing to do with my reply to the gentleman from Illinois on the question of suspending the rules. It was but an analogy, an illustration, and I shall not follow out that point. I merely want to make perfectly clear that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is not at all in conflict with the gentleman from Illinois; that they are both in favor of passing these bills in the usual way under the order of business prescribed by the House; and that when those bills are passed under a suspension of the rules it is for some special reason which commends that course to the discretion of the House, so that the House determines they shall be passed by a two-thirds vote, and this power the House will possess under the old rules as under the new rules proposed by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REAGAN. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SPARKS. Before the gentleman proceeds will he permit me to ask him whether he discussed the question why the river and harbor bill should be given to the Committee on Commerce, and why the Army appropriation bill, the Navy appropriation bill, and the Indian appropriation bill should not be prepared by the Committees on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, and Indian Affairs respectively?

Mr. REAGAN. I did discuss that point and drew the distinction between the river and harbor bill and those other bills on account of the kind of work and on the ground that the river and harbor bill is not merely the execution of a law, but that it originates a law.

Mr. SPARKS. And your conclusion was that the Committee on Commerce ought to have this bill, while the other committees ought not to have the bills I have named.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not pass upon that question. At the proper time I propose to offer an amendment to Rule XI, striking out the words:

But they shall report the bill known as the river and harbor bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

And I shall move further to amend by inserting after the word "commerce," in the seventh clause of the rule, the following:

And the Committee on Commerce shall have the same privilege to report all bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting the general appropriation bills.

That is simply the rule of the House as it now stands by the action of this House.

I desire to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that while I am combating the propriety of this recommendation of the Committee on Rules, I recognize the fact that they have rendered a great service to this House in their laborious effort to give us a revision of the rules which will simplify the performance of our duties and relieve us of the embarrassment we often experience under the rules as they now are. I do not wish to be understood because I question the propriety of this recommendation that I do not consider we are under a debt of gratitude to this committee for the labor they have bestowed in the preparation of the revision of the rules now submitted.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the gentleman from Texas concludes his remarks, will he permit me to ask him a question? I wish to inquire whether he is willing to vote for an amendment which will provide that the river and harbor bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole except by unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; I am not. I will not vote for that, because I do not think this is a subject which ought to be discriminated against. I think it is a meritorious matter, and I desire it shall occupy the same relation to the action of the House as other business that comes before it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman vote for a proposition requiring all bills appropriating money to be considered in Committee of the Whole except by unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. REAGAN. I would not vote to change the rule as it has existed in that respect, and as it is proposed still to exist under the report of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will have to insist on the river and harbor bill going to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARFIELD. I care a great deal more, Mr. Chairman, about this codification of the rules as a whole than I do about any particular rule in it. I would rather that any one rule here should be dropped out altogether and the rest saved than that we should go into such a controversy about any one rule as to imperil the passage of the whole.

The Committee on Rules found themselves in this situation: Here were ninety years of parliamentary usage and a number of rules added from Congress to Congress, and from session to session of the same Congress, until they made a sort of aggregation lying together without any order except such as accident might have given to it. To simplify these rules, to get all the rules pertaining to each subject together in one place, to lop off inconsistencies, to make the rules cohesive and simple, was the great object of the committee. In order to do that we agreed that no controverted thing should go in. If any member of the committee objected we followed the rules as they stood. By that means alone we were enabled to get up our report at all. But we met several unsettled questions about which the House itself has differed in its own action, and we found it necessary to report something to cover cases of that kind. This rule to which the gentleman from Texas has spoken was one of those controverted cases, and we knew it would always be controverted until by some decisive action one way or the other the House settled it; and for the sake, therefore, of bringing it to an issue we all agreed to submit this form of the rule.

Now I hope that we will not stop on the threshold and go at the rule in relation to the Committee on Commerce, but that we will consider this report by paragraphs, take up each rule as we reach it, confine ourselves to it and act upon it, and thus go on seriatim, sticking to the thing before us and settling each as we go. In that way, and in that way alone, we will get through this code. I believe we shall then have done a great service, not only to this House but to all Houses that shall come after us, if we can get this codification through in fair shape.

I will not, therefore, at this time, enter generally upon the controversy raised by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] I know he speaks with great feeling and deep interest; and I occupy a standpoint so nearly like his own on one feature of the case that I can speak in full sympathy with him. I believe in the river and harbor legislation of this country. I believe in promoting and improving the great internal water courses of the country. I am proud of the fact that at the beginning of our great civil war, when the future and the unity of this country were threatened and in doubt, we began the business of opening these great water-ways to commerce; and $125,000,000, in round numbers, (I believe I speak within bounds,) have been paid out since 1861 for the purpose of opening our vast rivers and harbors to the commerce of the United States and of the world.

That is a glory that we ought to be proud of; and to go on with that work and culminate finally in making a perfect chain of water-ways wherever our great navigable rivers are, to open up all our harbors and to light all our coasts, is a glory for the Republic to win.

Therefore I do not speak in any view of this case as hostile to the river and harbor appropriation bill; and in no sense of the case, therefore, does my opposition depend upon any disposition to restrict or defeat any appropriation for that purpose. I speak upon another and larger view than that of rivers and harbors.

There are two committees of this House that stand, if I may so speak, with their backs to each other and facing in opposite directions. One is the Committee of Ways and Means. That committee faces out upon all the business of this country from which a revenue can be had. They ask the nation this one question, Where can we get a revenue to supply the machinery of this Government, to fill the Treasury as it ought to be filled? And they apply to all of the people of this country, to all its wealth, to all its trade, to all its commerce, and ask what contributions shall be gathered and how they shall be gathered from the people.

But that committee wants one thing before they start out upon this inquiry—they want the figures, the sum total. And they turn to the other committee which stands back to back to them, the Committee on Appropriations, and inquire of that committee how much money must we give you to run this Government for the coming year? And they get the figures from the Committee on Appropriations. That committee says to them, we will require so many millions of dollars. Thereupon the Committee of Ways and Means turns to the nation and asks for a contribution. It passes a law that tells how much the burden shall be and how that burden shall be distributed.

Now, if it is important that the Committee of Ways and Means shall know that sum total before they begin to legislate, it is equally important that some one great fiscal committee of this House shall be able to give them the figures. Now, shall it be given them by one committee, or shall the Committee of Ways and Means hunt through all the committees of this House in order to find out what the figure of our taxation is to be?

In my view, the harmony and unity of the fiscal machinery of this Government requires that these two great committees shall stand back to back; the one of them facing the people and its industries, the other facing the machinery of the Government and its necessities. One shall say that to run this great machine requires so much money in the aggregate, to be distributed in the following way. The other shall say that to get that aggregate of money requires such a tax internal, and such a tax external, to be distributed in such and such manner. The unity of our fiscal affairs must not, therefore, be broken up.

I have in this statement given the reasons that induced me to agree to the report as presented in this Rule XI. The same reasoning that would turn over the river and harbor appropriation bill to the Committee on Commerce would also turn over the Army appropriation bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, the naval appropriation bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Indian appropriation bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the pension appropriation bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and so on down through the whole list.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact within the experience of every member who has been here long, that the Committee on Appropriations always finds itself confronted with a demand from each of the committees having a special subject in charge for larger appropriations than the Committee on Appropriations think should be made. There never was a time within my knowledge since I have been here when the Committee on Military Affairs did not resist the tendency of the Committee on Appropriations to cut down the appropriations for the Army. The Committee on Naval Affairs has always been found resisting the reduction of the naval appropriation bill. For this reason, I say that if each of these several committees had charge of getting up the appropriation bills on these several subjects, the amount of the bills would be very large; they would outgrow the grasp of the House, and there would be no unity in the appropriations of public money.

Let me state the practice which prevailed during the four years I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. That committee went over the field, and looking at all the estimates as they came from the Departments, making all the examinations we could make, we said: "There should be appropriated for the coming year, say, $290,000,000; we think we can cut the expenditures of the Government down to that figure; but to do this the Army must have so much, the Navy so much, and rivers and harbors so much." Thereupon the Committee on Appropriations informed the Committee on Commerce that the Government could afford to pay, say, $5,000,000 for rivers and harbors; and the Committee on Commerce, having that great and complex subject in hand, were asked to tell how the money ought to be distributed. The Committee on Commerce drafted the bill distributing the amount. That bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and if it did not exceed the total amount which the Committee on Appropriations believed could be spared, the Committee on Appropriations reported it back and requested the Committee on Commerce to take charge of it and carry it through the House. This is the way the work was done during the four years of my chairmanship of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McLANE. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. McLANE. Upon the illustration of the gentleman, referring to the Army and Navy, I wish to make a single suggestion. In view of the present rules of the House, and in view of those we are about to adopt if we approve this report, does not the gentleman from Ohio understand that if the Committee on Military Affairs reported to-day and Congress passed into law a bill increasing the Army to the extent of ten thousand men the Committee on Appropriations would be obliged to appropriate for the support of those ten thousand men?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, in obedience to law.

Mr. McLANE. Precisely, and without any discretion on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Military Affairs having reported to this House the addition of ten thousand men to the Army, the Appropriations Committee, having nothing to do with the deliberations which induced the report, would be obliged to report the necessary appropriations. Now I wish to ask the gentleman a question in this connection. Suppose the river and harbor bill being in issue, the Committee on Commerce report a provision authorizing the improvement of a harbor which has never been included in any previous law; would not the Appropriations Committee upon the same principle be bound to report an appropriation for that river and harbor improvement? The Committee on Commerce having had referred to it a memorial for the improvement of that river or harbor, and having reported a bill for the improvement, would not the Committee on Appropriations be bound by the same principle to provide the money for that improvement?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think I comprehend the question, at least in part. The gentleman will notice this distinction: the Army is established by law; but the law which creates the Army does not appropriate the money for its support. The Navy is created by law; but that law makes no appropriation. The Military Academy is established by law; pensions are fixed by law. All the eleven regular appropriation bills appropriate money in accordance with existing law, which the Appropriations Committee is bound to obey. But the river and harbor bill is the only law for the improvement of a particular harbor. For instance, there is no standing law requiring that $3,000,000 should be appropriated to deepen the channel at Hell Gate. The only law on the subject is the appropriation which we annually make. This is the reason why the river and harbor bill stands as an exception.

If we adopt this rule as it stands in the report before us, two-thirds of the House can still suspend the rules and pass the river and harbor bill just as has been done heretofore; and they doubtless will do it. But we are now making a rule for the normal orderly course of events under the rules; and if two-thirds of the House are not in favor of suspending the rules and allowing the bill to be passed upon the report of the Committee on Commerce, as has usually been done, then the bill will go as indicated in this rule.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman will pardon me; but he has not answered my question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I am very unfortunate. I will endeavor to do so, if the gentleman will indicate wherein I have failed.

Mr. McLANE. The point I suggested to the gentleman from Ohio was this: the present law for the organization of the Army provides, we will assume, for twenty-five thousand men. That is the only law which authorizes the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate for the Army. Now, suppose we pass another law providing for ten thousand additional men. By the passage of that law we impose upon the Committee on Appropriations the obligation to report the appropriation for the support of those men. Now, the analogy I submitted to the gentleman was this: the moment Congress passes a law for the improvement of a river or harbor we impose upon the Committee on Appropriations the obligation to appropriate money for that improvement. If this be true (and here is where the gentleman from Ohio did not reply to my question) then, as a matter of course, the Committee on Commerce originates a law, and having originated the law it can very well leave to the Committee on Appropriations the duty of merely appropriating the money to carry it out. If this rule had presented the case in that view I should have offered no opposition. Does the gentleman understand? If this proposed rule allowed the river and harbor bill to be perfected by the Committee on Commerce as it permits the Army organization to be perfected by the Committee on Military Affairs, I should make no objection. It is the Military Committee, not the Appropriations Committee, that decides how many soldiers we shall have. The Military Committee having decided how many soldiers we shall have, the Committee on Appropriations has nothing to do but to appropriate the money. It has no discretion whatever. It cannot reduce the pay of the soldiers as fixed by law. The law reported by the Military Committee fixes the number of soldiers; and the Committee on Appropriations appropriates the money to pay them according to the rates of pay provided by law.

No gentleman will gainsay that if this rule had provided that the money for the improvement of rivers and harbors should be appropriated in the report of the Committee on Appropriations no exception could be taken to it, provided the Committee on Commerce was left to its proper responsibility of providing what rivers and harbors should be improved. That issue has not been presented before, and in my humble judgment it is the only issue in question. And the rule recommended to our adoption makes no such provision. It strikes between these two opposite principles and it does it, as the gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, has very well said, in such a way that it degrades one committee, and not only degrades it but wastes its labor.

I shall not go further into the question, however, because I really want the gentleman from Ohio to give me a candid reply to the question I have addressed to him.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, candor is a rare quality, and we are not all equal to it, but the best I can do I will. If the Committee on Commerce proposes a general law declaring what harbors ought to be improved and what ought not to be improved, and about how much money ought to be the plan for expenditure on any given harbor, I think that would be a good thing, and that would be wholly within the purview of the Committee on Commerce. But that should be disassociated from the appropriation, because if, for instance, the Committee on Commerce should say here is a harbor that ought to be built in the course of the next ten years, costing $10,000,000, then the Committee on Appropriations should say how much would do this year toward it. That would be wise, but I would not by any means ask a rule which would cripple the Committee on Commerce in that direction. I do not think this rule does that.

I wish to remind the gentleman that there are only eleven regular annual appropriation bills recognized by the rule. The river and harbor bill is not authorized by the rules as one of the regular bills, for the very reason that it is not provided by a fixed statute law, and I believe the best settlement which could be made of this controversy would be that a general law should be passed under the auspices of the Committee on Commerce declaring what rivers and what harbors should be declared to be by law in the line of appropriation, and then let the Committee on Appropriations make such appropriation for that year and for that purpose as they could.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is not that the practice in reference to public buildings?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir. I think the rule which prevails in regard to public buildings, might wisely be adopted in regard to harbors. For instance, under the advice of our engineers laid before Congress in the estimates, the Committee on Commerce might say that at Buffalo, New York, there shall be completed as soon as, in the judgment of Congress, the money can be spared, a harbor to cost half a million of dollars.

Mr. McLANE. That is just what I ask.

Mr. GARFIELD. And fix it by law so the Committee on Appropriations can all work to that end on one plan. The rule is not inconsistent with that. If the gentleman will put that into the rule, I will be glad to sustain him. At any rate, I say in conclusion, I would rather this rule should all go out, lose it in any form, than lose the body of rules we have before us.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio why an exception is made by this report to this river and harbor bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. For the reason the whole eleven appropriation bills are now fixed by statute law; and the river and harbor bill stands outside of law and is a sort of law to itself. It was thought by the committee that as there was a struggle every winter here over it as to where it should go, and as there is no fixed rule of the House about it, it was best to make this general rule. The rule the gentleman from Texas quoted a little while ago was only the rule for that Congress. It did not become a general rule to bind this Congress.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) We have not acted in variance to that judgment at all, for we have inserted here that the Committee on Commerce shall make up that bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have here for the first time in our general rules conferred on the Committee on Commerce the power to make up this bill. They never had that power before by general rule. They have it here for the first time, and the only objection they make is that they shall be compelled to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred various propositions looking to the amendment of the rules, have been so nearly unanimous in the views they entertain as to the necessity of a change in the rules as they at present exist. Those of us who have been here for the past five or six years have observed that the rules as they are now in force seemed to be designed as impediments in the way of legislation rather than as aids to it. We all feel the necessity, therefore, that there should be a change in the rules of the House, and a radical change, in order that a set of rules may be adopted which should have for their object the furthering of the legislation of the country and not the impeding of it.

And in addition to that, Mr. Chairman, it is well known to all the old members of the House who have served here for years that the rules of this House differ so materially from the parliamentary rules which govern deliberative bodies throughout the world, including the Parliament of England and the Assembly of France, as well as the Legislatures of our own States—that they may be said to be in that regard sui generis. They are not so in any other deliberative assembly that I am aware of, other than the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and therefore the necessity has forced itself upon us to constitute a committee for the purpose of changing these rules.

They have made their report upon the subject. They have reduced the number of the rules from one hundred and odd to about forty-six in number. They are comprised upon the pages of this report of this committee, within eleven or twelve pages—the entire number of rules necessary for the government of the House—and I doubt not the report of the committee will receive the approbation of the House and be adopted by it. They have, however, Mr. Chairman, not adopted some of the suggestions that some of us had the honor of making at the extra session of Congress as well as at the beginning of this session. I had the honor myself to submit a series of resolutions, which were referred to the Committee on Rules, embracing my views of the subject and contained in this book, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask him to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOOKER. I offer as a substitute for the pending proposition what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the committee to revise and reform the rules of this House be, and they are hereby, instructed to report at an early day an amendment of the rules of the House so as to provide—

"First. That the Committee on Military Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the bills for the annual support of the Army of the United States, and receive the estimates and report the bill for the annual support of the Military Academy at West Point.

"Second. That the Committee on Naval Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation bills for the annual support of the Navy of the United States.

"Third. That the Committee on Foreign Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation bill for the maintenance and support of the diplomatic and consular system of the United States.

"Fourth. That the Committee on Indian Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation bill for carrying out the treaties and obligations of the Government of the United States with the various Indian tribes.

"Fifth. That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads shall receive the estimates and make the appropriation for support of the Post-Office Department of the Government.

"Sixth. That the Committee on Commerce shall receive the estimates of the Engineer Department and introduce the annual appropriation bill for improvement of rivers and harbors.

"Seventh. That the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall report the appropriation bill for the payment of pensions.

"Eighth. That the Committee on Appropriations shall receive the estimates and report the appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, and the sundry civil service bill and all deficiency bills.

"Ninth. That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be authorized to report all appropriation bills for such public buildings as the needs of the Government may require."

I have now caused to be read, Mr. Chairman, the resolutions which I received permission of the House to offer, and which were referred to the Committee on Rules, in order that I might thus possess the committee of the views I entertained as to the amendments which were necessary.

When I come to look at this report of the committee, and get to Rule XI, I find that so far from distributing the powers of the House to the respective committees named as above, they have on the contrary made a report the object and purpose of which seems to be to deprive the Committee on Commerce of the right to do what alone, under the rules as they now exist, they can do—report to the House itself.

And it is proposed that this committee, whose bills have usually been passed under the spur of the previous question without debate, shall report to the Committee on Appropriations, or at least whatever they do report from the Committee on Commerce shall undergo the investigation of the Committee on Appropriations before it shall receive the consideration of the House.

Now, what is the argument that is offered for giving to the Appropriations Committee the consideration of the question of what amount you shall appropriate for the Navy, or for the Military Academy, or for the Post-Office, or Indian affairs? What, I say, is the argument offered? I have heard none, sir, except the graphic figure used by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who has just addressed the committee, in which he says that the two great committees, the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations, stand, as it were, back to back, the one with its face confronting toward the people providing the means for carrying on the Government, and the other with its face confronting toward the great heads of the Departments to respond to their demands.

I say, sir, so far from these being the functions of these two great committees, I have sat in this House, not so long as the gentleman from Ohio, but I have sat here long enough to see that that great committee which ought to stand at the very head of the committees of this House with reference to the great interests of the people in determining the mode, and means, and ways in which the Government shall be supported has been dwarfed in its importance as every other committee has been dwarfed, and the House itself has simply shrunk, if I may use the expression, into a committee whose functions are to pay out the money of the people in accordance with the estimates of the heads of Departments. I say, sir, that the Committee of Ways and Means has functions second in importance to those of no other committee of this House and that it should not, in the language of the gentleman from Ohio, look merely to what the Committee on Appropriations may say, but that in its own judgment and in its own wisdom it should look to the condition of the material interests of the people of the country and the necessity of lifting from them the great burden of taxation which has paralyzed every industry and almost crushed the energies of the people. I say that committee should look to the question as to what the people can stand in the first place in the shape of taxation and what the Government in the exercise of the most rigid economy may require.

Nor does it follow that the Committee of Ways and Means should limit its consideration alone to what the Government may need now. It ought to adopt a system of taxation with reference to the income from imposts on foreign goods and with reference to the internal affairs of the country as low as can possibly be adopted consistently with keeping up the credit of the Government and carrying on its ordinary fiscal expenditures.

I do not see, therefore, that there can be any committee whose importance can be greater than that of the Committee of Ways and Means; and if the Appropriations Committee is to stand behind the Committee of Ways and Means and dictate the amount of the taxation and the manner and mode in which it shall be laid, then you may as well dispense with the Committee of Ways and Means as you have virtually dispensed with the operations and functions of many of the other committees. Those committees have separate and independent functions to perform and ought to exist independently; and the same reasons that I have urged with regard to these two committees may be applied to every committee of this House.

Why is it that the committee to which are referred the estimates for the support of the Army and of the Military Academy is not as competent to determine the amount of the appropriation to be made and recommended to the House as the Appropriations Committee? What peculiar virtue has the Appropriations Committee that it should possess itself of information upon those questions over and above the information which is possessed by the committee that should investigate every question relating to the Army, determine every soldier to be brought into the field, determine the modes of equipment, determine the points at which the Army is to be stationed and everything else in reference to its equipment and employment? Why is it that the Committee on Appropriations possesses more power than the Committee on Military Affairs to determine what ought to be appropriated for the Army? And the same reasoning may be applied to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to the Committee on Post-Offices, and to every other committee in the House.

Why is it that a particular committee styled the Appropriations Committee should know better than the Naval Committee, with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] at its head, what amount is necessary to be raised for the support of the Navy?

It is said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that if you distribute thus the powers of the Appropriations Committee, restricting that committee to the consideration of the legitimate subjects belonging to it, namely, the appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenditures of the Government, the appropriations for the civil-sundry service, and the appropriations in the deficiency bill, which are the functions that properly belong to the Appropriations Committee, and if those three committees having in charge the Army and its support, the Navy and its support, the postal service and its support, are to report the appropriation bills for those branches of the service—that if you thus divide the powers of making appropriations in the hands of the various committees you will increase the amount of the appropriations.

It may be, Mr. Chairman, that such would be the result, but it might be a wise increase of the expenditures instead of an injudicious one; for sometimes a foolish economy is more to be blamed than a lavish expenditure; and yet I am in favor of restricting the expenditures to the lowest amount possible in the interest of the people who pay the taxes. I am at the same time not in favor of crippling any department of the Government by a niggardly dispensing of the taxes which the people pay. I see no reason, therefore, why each committee in this House having charge of the consideration and study of the branch of the public service intrusted to it, together with the estimates for its support, should not make its own report to the House of the amount which is necessary for the support of the respective Departments which fall under their care, and I have heard no reason offered why they should not possess it.

I am sure there can be no wisdom in one recommendation which I find in this report of the Committee on Rules, namely, the proposition that when the Committee on Commerce makes its report that report shall go to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Commerce, Mr. Chairman, is an important committee; it has been so for a long period of time, and I am unwilling to see its powers now diminished or suspended, as it were, by referring its work to another committee. It was stated by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio that since 1862 for the improvement of the rivers and the harbors all along our Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and in the interior, $125,000,000 had been expended; and yet, sir, if I am right in my recollection of the estimates, of these $125,000,000 expended only about five or ten millions have been expended in the great valley of the Mississippi, where you have more rivers and more river frontage and more navigation than in every other portion of this land. It has gone elsewhere, and we do not now want to see the powers of the Committee on Commerce, which has this subject in charge, crippled by being placed under the necessity of reporting to any other committee.

That great valley of the Mississippi has received, comparatively speaking, little of the paternal care and regard of this Government; and yet when we look at its vast extent, embracing as it does twenty-four States and six Territories, holding within it navigable waters of fourteen thousand miles in extent and with five thousand miles of operating railway, constituting the great conduit pipe by which the great commerce of the West floats down the Father of Waters to the Gulf of Mexico, thence to be distributed to the starving millions of the Old World—when we look at these waters bearing upon their surface a greater amount of commerce than is borne anywhere else, I say that I would be unwilling to see the powers of the Committee on Commerce, which have been directed in some degree to the development of these great resources, diverted to any other committee.

I have said that that region constituted one of the vastest regions of our country. It should be remembered that it embraces seven-tenths of the population of the United States. It embraces every variety of climate, from where the first sources of the Mississippi start from the mountains to where it empties its vast waters into the Gulf of Mexico. It embraces that great agricultural region out of which you have carved Territory after Territory, and State after State, until now, in columnar grandeur, supporting the great entablature of the Union, it extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. That region constitutes the means by which you must develop the great resources of this great people, and we do not now want that this Government shall pause in its work, or that any amendment shall be made to the rules of the House which shall cripple the powers, destroy the utility, and prevent the investigation and consideration of this subject by this committee.

What sense is there in asking that the Committee on Commerce shall report to any other body than this House? That committee is created by the House for the purpose of considering and investigating this very subject. Why should it report its labors to any other committee? Why should its work undergo investigation by any other committee? Why should any other committee say what this harbor requires or what that river needs? Why should any other committee be called upon to pass upon the fact whether the Committee on Commerce has properly considered the question?

I may be permitted further to say that so far as I am individually concerned I have never particularly desired, and have rather been opposed to, the passage of bills coming from this committee under the spur of the previous question, and more particularly as that previous question has been administered under our rules as they now exist.

In almost all parliamentary bodies where the previous question prevails, in the old country and in this, the ordering of the previous question cuts off debate by every one. Here the practice prevails that discussion shall be had for a limited time after the previous question has been ordered, for an hour on the part of the person reporting the bill to open the debate and an hour to close it. I say I have been rather opposed to this, because I believe that this is a form of the assembly of the people of the United States who meet here to discuss questions of great interest to them, whether relating to river and harbor bills or to one measure or another. This is the arena of debate, of investigation, and of discussion.

I have been taught for one that the conflict of mind with mind serves rather to elicit truth, to illustrate facts, and to endear great principles to the hearts of the people. I have not been afraid of discussion, and I am not afraid of discussion when the Committee on Commerce shall report its bill. Let such bill pass upon its merits, as every other bill should pass, after full, free, and untrammeled discussion, wherever the subject involved is of sufficient magnitude to require it.

The appropriations recommended by the committee are often large, amounting to many millions of dollars. While I am in favor of retaining all the powers of that committee, of referring to them the subject of the improvement of rivers and harbors, and having their judgment upon the necessity of such improvement and the amount of appropriations required for that purpose, let that subject be discussed in the House, and let the House pass upon it. If at any time they prepare a bill making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, let that bill take its place upon the Calendar as other bills.

It may be said that sometimes the House will fail to pass such a bill. That may be so. It did fail to pass one at the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress; not, however, for the reason that it was canvassed, that it was discussed. The distinguished gentleman from New York who then represented on this floor the city of New York, Hon. Elijah Ward, whom all of us who were associated with him here remember with so much pleasure for his great ability and for the zeal and care with which he studied every question presented to him, was notified by the friends of the bill that if he did not permit discussion to be had and amendments to be offered, however reluctant they might be to oppose a measure reported by a gentleman holding so high a position before the House, they would defeat his bill. They did defeat it; and that created a necessity for the large river and harbor appropriation bill reported at the next session of Congress.

I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that in my judgment this eleventh rule ought to be so amended that the several committees of this House—the Naval Committee, the Military Committee, the Postal Committee, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and so on through the entire list—who are required in the line of their duties to investigate and study particular subjects at every meeting of the committee from the beginning of the Congress to its close, should have power to pass upon the question of appropriations for their particular Department, subject alone to the revision of that body by whose authority and under whose instructions they act. Each committee should report the amounts necessary to carry on the Department under its charge, and that report should be considered by the House without the intervention of any other committee.

I know that we are obliged to trust much to committees. We trust largely to the Committee of Elections—too much, I am afraid. We trust largely to committees on other subjects. But it is the duty of the House, the deliberative assembly of the people, to investigate and ascertain the true interests and wants of the country; and therefore this proposition that the Committee on Commerce, or any other committee, shall report to the Committee on Appropriations is an unwise departure from the true principle of legislation which ought to govern us in the adoption of rules which may exist for a hundred years.

In acting upon these rules my desire is simply to facilitate and enlighten the legislation of the House. I know of no partisan views in connection with this question. I think that this proposition to cripple the powers of a committee as to the amount which ought to be appropriated for a matter that it has passed upon should be struck out; that each of the great committees of the House should report directly to the House, giving its reasons, presenting its facts and figures, challenging the judgment of the House, inviting opposition and discussion.

I have said enough to indicate my views. When these rules shall come up for discussion seriatim, as I have suggested to my friend from Kentucky, when this particular rule shall come up separately, I shall take occasion to offer the amendment which I have indicated. Whatever other members of the House may think, I shall insist that the great committees of the House should be in the first place the investigators of the subjects confided to them; should consider how the Army is to be constituted, how the Navy is to be constituted, &c., and that then the question should be left to the decision of the House, which can make reductions if there should be proposed any appropriations in excess of those which prudence, economy, and good judgment demand.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention in the discussion of the new rules to enter further into the debate than might be necessary to explain to the House by illustration the effect which the operation of any proposed rule would have in the matter of facilitating business. But I feel it incumbent upon me here to-day, in view of what has been said, to state that there was not on the part of any member of the Committee on Rules the least intention to enlarge or abridge the powers of any committee of this House, or to suggest even by inference anything derogatory to any committee. If I had supposed that our report, even by implication, could have had any such effect, I never would have given the report my sanction.

Some gentlemen have gone so far as to say that by this report the Committee on Commerce is degraded. I deny it. On the contrary, I assert that the Committee on Rules has followed the wish of the House in giving to the Committee on Commerce the preparation of the river and harbor bill. We have simply said that in our judgment the manner of making up and considering such bills, and as to the extent usually appropriated having been the subject of public criticism, that a change in this respect was needed. We have not, even in the rules, proposed to debar the House from the right to suspend the rules and pass the river and harbor bill by the two-thirds vote heretofore allowed; we have simply confined ourselves to an admonition to the House, respectful in the highest degree, that, first, the time has come when the appropriations for rivers and harbors, which are "a law unto themselves," should have fuller consideration in the body called upon to take the responsibility of their passage; and, secondly, that the amounts appropriated heretofore have been in excess of the public requirements. In illustration of this and in answer to the proposition which is to be made later, that the preparation of the general appropriation bills should be divided among many committees, I want to show the effect during ten years of the separation of the river and harbor bill from the other bills known as general appropriation bills.

The general appropriation bills are framed in obedience to law, and no legislation changing law can be put on such a bill unless it be in the direction of economy. That is a power which, so far as my influence extends, I never wish to see destroyed or changed, for it is one tending to the protection of the people against extravagant expenditures. It involves the control of the people over the amount of money that is to be expended; and it should never be given up.

I desire the Clerk to read a statement of the appropriations made for rivers and harbors during the last ten years. By this statement it will be seen how under this mode of separate legislation these appropriations have gradually increased till they have become excessive in amount. The Committee on Rules thought it desirable to provide a remedy, so that the Committee on Appropriations should say practically how much money should be appropriated in a given year for rivers and harbors. Neither was there enmity in the Committee on Rules toward the improvement of rivers and harbors. Only these two points were considered: first, the manner in which these bills have been passed; secondly, their amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

First session, Forty-first Congress, year ending June 30, 1870	$2,000,000
Second session, Forty-first Congress, year ending June 30, 1871	3,945,000
Third session, Forty-first Congress, year ending June 30, 1872	4,407,500
Second session, Forty-second Congress, year ending June 30, 1873	5,588,000
Third session, Forty-second Congress, year ending June 30, 1874	6,102,900
First session, Forty-third Congress, year ending June 30, 1875	5,218,000
Second session, Forty-third Congress, year ending June 30, 1876	6,643,517
First session, Forty-fourth Congress, year ending June 30, 1877	5,015,000
Second session, Forty-fourth Congress, year ending June 30, 1878. No appropriation. Bill reported, (H. R. No. 4617.) Did not pass.
First session, Forty-fifth Congress. No appropriation. Extra session. No bill.
Second session, Forty-fifth Congress, year ending June 30, 1879	8,201,700
Third session, Forty-fifth Congress, year ending June 30, 1880	7,846,600
	54,968,217

Mr. REAGAN. I will ask from the gentleman from Pennsylvania permission to contrast those figures with others which I have here, and which do not at all agree with those which have been read by the Clerk, some being higher and some being lower.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The figures read by the Clerk were made by an able officer of this House, and if they are not correct I do not know where we are to get correct statements of appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. The statement which I have here is drawn up from the law itself, and, with the gentleman's permission, I wish the figures to go in along with those given by him, in order that they may be contrasted together.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not object to the gentleman making the statement he desires.

Mr. REAGAN. The appropriation of March 3, 1871, instead of two millions and odd dollars, was $4,407,500. The appropriation of June 10, 1872, instead of $3,000,000, was $5,538,000. The appropriation of March 3, 1873, instead of the amount given, was $6,102,900. The appropriation of June 23, 1874, was $5,193,000, and the appropriation of March 3, 1875, $6,643,517.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have only to say, Mr. Chairman, that the figures which I have presented I obtained from an officer of the House and I believe them to be authentic. Whether they are exactly correct or absolutely authentic or not, they show one thing, and that is the constant increase from year to year of these appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors until, from two millions in the first session of the Forty-first Congress, they have gone up (second session of the Forty-fifth Congress) to eight and a quarter millions of dollars a year. And it must be recollected that these appropriations do not include the sums of money voted for the Eads jetties, which is a separate matter.

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman is mistaken as to one appropriation bill, the one before the last, which includes a large sum for payment to Mr. Eads.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) There may be an exception of that one item.

Mr. KENNA. It is an appropriation of nearly one million of dollars, a very large sum of money.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) But how much preceding and since that has been appropriated to Mr. Eads not appropriated in the river and harbor appropriation bills?

Mr. KENNA. I believe this is the only one.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) How much is the whole appropriation to Mr. Eads?

Mr. KENNA. Several millions; but I cannot give the exact amount.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) About five millions, I believe. I do not wish to go into any general discussion of this matter, but I do wish to say to this House that the figures presented warn us against the adoption of any proposition looking to the division of the duties of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARBER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Certainly.

Mr. BARBER. Why would not the same end be accomplished if we were to require the Committee on Appropriations to ascertain and report to this House the amount available at an early day in the session for the purpose of improving the rivers and harbors; and let that go to the Committee on Commerce to inform them of the greatest amount available for the purpose?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That would be a great deal better, and then the Committee on Commerce could conform to that amount of money which was thought could be expended out of the public funds for that purpose. There is really no good reason why some such provision should not be made by amendment of the rules.

But, Mr. Chairman, what I wish to say is this, that if you undertake to divide all these appropriations and have many committees, where there ought to be but one, you will enter upon a path of extravagance you cannot foresee the length of or the depth of, until we will find the Treasury of the country bankrupt.

I should not have said so much except, perhaps, to impress upon the attention of every member of this House that the Committee on Rules, in discharge of the duties confided to them, have acted only from the most conscientious motives and from no disposition whatever to secure the enlargement of one committee to the derogation or abridgment of the powers of another. Such a thing never was spoken of or thought of in that committee, much less adopted as a rule to control its action. The whole revision of the rules was entered upon solely and simply in the discharge of a great public duty which ninety years of experience in government had proved to be absolutely essential and now required.

It will be seen in the proposed rules that we have given to unobjectionable legislation every possible facility, and, furthermore, that to all general legislation which does not provide for payment out of the Treasury of money we give an advantage which it never yet has had and cannot have under existing rules.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask the gentleman if he will allow me to make just one suggestion at this point?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. It has, no doubt, escaped the gentleman's attention that one reason existing for the increase of appropriations for rivers and harbors is this: that up to the Forty-fourth Congress substantially nothing was appropriated for waters in the Southern States. Since the Forty-fourth Congress up to now the appropriations covered the territory of the whole Union, and necessarily that has increased the amount of the appropriations. And beside that the settlement and extension of population have demanded an increase of appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That I admit is a reason for an increase of the appropriations, but still I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the amount of money expended for this purpose, without discussion or amendment, is much greater than it should be, even in the view the gentleman from Texas presents. If we limited the amount every year for the improvement of rivers and harbors so as not to be burdensome upon the people I have no doubt it would be agreed to and accepted by all sections of the country.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. Have not the appropriations for rivers and harbors generally run much below the estimates of the engineers? Have not those appropriations been much more below the estimates of the engineers than appropriations in reference to the disbursements under other Departments of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) One is regulated by law, the other not; that is, the estimates for carrying on the service of the several Departments of the Government are regulated by law, the other is not. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that if we had followed the estimates of the Engineer Corps I fear we should have had a bankrupt Treasury long ago. I suppose the gentleman from Texas can answer as well as I can the question how far in excess the estimates of the engineers have been over the amounts appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors, but I incline to believe they will be found to be enormous.

Mr. MILLS. You mean for the whole amount of work contemplated.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I mean to say that the estimates of the Engineer Corps, which I say are enormous, have been far in excess of the amount appropriated by Congress.

Mr. MILLS. That will show that the works for which appropriations were made were necessary for the development of our commerce.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Any member of Congress, I believe, can go up to the Engineer Bureau and have an estimate made for any particular work desired in his district. If he cannot get it there, all he has to do is to come down here and make his application for a survey, almost in manner as we do with post-routes, through the petition-box, for the House never refuses such an application by a member, and in that way secure a report and estimate from the Engineer Bureau.

Mr. CONGER. I think the Speaker is entirely mistaken in the statement just made. As I understand, these surveys by the board of engineers are not made unless ordered by the House.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) All a member has to do in order to get a survey and report from the board of engineers is to make application as I have suggested. I never have known in a single instance where such an application has been refused.

Mr. CONGER. They are ordered by law.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Yes, but did the gentleman ever hear of a mail-route being refused in this House, or application for survey of a proposed public improvement?

Mr. CONGER. These surveys are included in the river and harbor appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I know they are, but they are secured in the way I have mentioned.

Mr. CONGER. The engineers, in the discharge of their duty, report to this House the expense of making proposed improvements.

Mr. MILLS. They report against a great many.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) As I have stated, any member may secure a survey. I have never heard of an instance where a survey, when asked by a member to be made for an improvement in his district, was refused.

Mr. CONGER. A large number of those asked for are reported against, as our experience has shown.

Mr. O'NEILL. Let me suggest to my colleague that if he should go up to the Engineer's Department to see how much by his individual exertion he could get the Engineer Corps to recommend should be appropriated for the improvement of the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers, he would find that he would come away very much disappointed.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I never went there in behalf either of the Delaware or Schuylkill River.

Mr. O'NEILL. Nor any other.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I want to tell the gentleman that my course in this House in respect to appropriations was to strike my own home as deeply as I struck anybody else's.

Mr. O'NEILL. That is just where we object to the conduct of my colleague, the Speaker, the member from the third district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I am afraid if the House had taken the gentleman's judgment as to the expenditure of public money we should have had to make a higher tariff.

Mr. O'NEILL. I want to say that this constant democratic advocacy by the member from the third district of Pennsylvania of retrenchment has not been in accordance with the wishes of his constituents or those of the people of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Then why do I come back? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I will answer why it is the gentleman comes back. It is in consequence of his individual and personal exertions. But I want to say in reference to this very advocacy of retrenchment which my colleague says is for the people—I think that was his remark—in the progress of this country and in the great growth of its commerce it is for the people to say through the Committee on Commerce of this House, and the Committee on Commerce as much represents the people as does the Committee on Appropriations—it is for the people to say through that committee how many millions of dollars they will annually expend on the river and harbor improvements of the country.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) My friend has always been an advocate of resumption.

Mr. O'NEILL. Always.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Now, I maintain that democratic economy was the real road to and produced resumption.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, I would like to know where the Speaker has stood in reference to resumption. In New York he has been on both sides. In Pennsylvania I do not know where he has been, for during the whole of the last campaign his whole time was devoted to patching up the difficulties in New York State between Tilden and Tammany.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) And I should have been glad if I had succeeded.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have no doubt the gentleman would have been glad if he had succeeded. But he did not succeed; and I refer him to the depressed vote on account of his absence in his own district, running down from 3,000 in November, 1878, to a little over 800.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) When I run again I will try and bring it up.

Mr. O'NEILL. Perhaps not. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, just to indulge me one moment further.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. I wish to know what the divisions in New York have to do with the revision of the rules.

Mr. O'NEILL. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I have had more experience on the Committee on Commerce than any other member at present in this House. I had the honor to be on that committee in the Thirty-eighth Congress, and subsequently to the Forty-second Congress. The gentleman who presided over that committee in the earlier period of my service in this House and my membership on that committee was Hon. Elihu B. Washburne. There never was a nobler man, or one truer to the interests of the country, and in the advocacy by Mr. Washburne, as chairman of that committee, of the improvement of rivers and harbors justice was done to the country with a due regard to the condition of the Treasury.

Mr. McCOOK. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Is this intended as a Washburne boom? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to do justice to the men who stood by the improvements of the country as demanded by the people. The gentleman who succeeded Mr. Washburne as chairman of that committee was Hon. Thomas D. Eliot, of Massachusetts, also a man whose career in Congress was very distinguished. Subsequently to him another distinguished member was chairman of that committee, Hon. Nathan Dixon, of Rhode Island.

Now, sir, take the chairmanship of the committee to-day. I am sure that that committee and its chairman can be intrusted with this great work of making up the river and harbor bill. The Speaker selected the members of the committee; and taking the fifteen members of that committee—or take fourteen members of that committee, leaving myself out—I will say they will compare favorably in point of industry and patriotism and well-doing as representatives of the people who sent them here with the individual members of the Committee on Appropriations, and that they are just as fit to pass upon this bill as the latter committee.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The proposed rule so accepts.

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes; but their report is to be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. Why, sir, such men as Mr. Washburne and Mr. Eliot and Mr. Dixon, who, in succession, were chairmen of that committee, would not for a moment have tolerated in this House that their work upon a river and harbor bill should have been reviewed by a Committee on Appropriations or the Committee of Ways and Means, which had charge of appropriations in those earlier Congresses. Until the present Vice-President, Mr. WHEELER, was made chairman of the Committee on Commerce such a thing was unknown as that that committee should be compelled to consult the Committee on Appropriations as to what they had done. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations at that time, and I recollect with what amazement and surprise, to me at least, the proposition was received that the Committee on Commerce, a co-ordinate committee of this House, should have to come into the room of the Committee on Appropriations and ask them whether we should appropriate one, two, three, or four millions of dollars for the improvement of the harbors and rivers of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I resume the floor and yield to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA.]

Mr. KENNA. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] for his courtesy in yielding to me a portion of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has thirty minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. KENNA. And that is more than I shall consume. I had desired, however, to submit a few observations upon this proposed amendment as reported by the committee while the discussion is not limited, as I understand it soon will be, under the five-minute rule.

What is known as the river and harbor appropriation bill differs in some material particulars from every other appropriation bill that comes before the House. Of all the members who compose the House of Representatives there is not one who does not recognize the fact that the regular appropriation bills are essential to the maintenance of the different Departments of the Government, and of the Government itself. Every member will concede that all of those bills in some shape must and ought to be passed.

It is not so with reference to what is known as the river and harbor appropriation bill. There is a respectable minority in this House, more respectable in character than in numbers, which is opposed upon principle to the passage of any river and harbor bill, or of any bill for any sort of internal improvements whatever. Hence it is that those who favor the carrying on of the general system of improving rivers and harbors which is now in progress in this country find in this House, when they come to it with a river and harbor appropriation bill, an element of opposition which is not found in antagonism to any other appropriation bill that comes before us; hence, also, the danger indicated by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] that when a river and harbor appropriation bill comes here, should it be considered in Committee of the Whole, those representing particular sections in whose behalf amendments may be offered, combining with that element which represents no particular section desiring such improvements, for these constitutional scruples generally travel by dry land, will succeed in loading down the bill with amendments, and making the appropriation amount to such a sum that in the end if passed at all it will be an enormity, and if defeated it will be defeated as an entirety, and merit and demerit will stand and go down together.

That is the only good reason I now see, or have ever seen, in opposition to bringing this bill into Committee of the Whole for consideration. I say now to those gentlemen who have constitutional scruples against the passage of any such bill, that if they will devote themselves to the perfection of the river and harbor appropriation bill, with a view to secure as good and proper a bill as possible, instead of devoting their attention to its absolute defeat by any sort of parliamentary device that can be resorted to, they will accomplish their purpose much better and do the country more satisfactory service than they will ever do by any effort to strangle this bill through the adoption of an amendment to the rules dangerous to its safety.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] has suggested to the minority that it would be well for them to attempt to perfect the river and harbor appropriation bill. I would ask that gentleman how they are to perfect the river and harbor appropriation bill, when they are not permitted to discuss it or to offer any amendment to it?

Mr. KENNA. Without meaning to be at all unkind in my reply to the gentleman, I would suggest to him that it cannot be perfected by any combination to kill it or smother it by means of amendments to the rules. And if the gentleman will kindly give me his attention, while I recount one or two instances in which that has been attempted, he will understand better what I mean. In doing so, I desire to be distinctly understood as meaning no reflection upon any gentleman for his efforts in that direction.

Soon after I came here the first effort made to defeat the river and harbor appropriation bill was a proposition to transfer the jurisdiction of it from the Committee on Commerce to the Committee on Railways and Canals. The proposition was one dividing the jurisdiction of the subject of rivers and harbors; giving the jurisdiction of harbors to the Committee on Commerce and the jurisdiction of rivers to the Committee on Railways and Canals. That proposition was the first upon which I had the honor to address the House. It was resisted ably by the chairman of the Commerce Committee and others, and it will be remembered it was ingloriously defeated.

It was not very long after, I think perhaps the last session of the same Congress or the extra session of this Congress, that a proposition was brought here so to amend the rules as to make it require a three-fourths majority of members on this floor to pass a river and harbor bill under a suspension of the rules. That proposition met its quietus very promptly, and instead of doing harm to the prospects of the river and harbor appropriation bill it resulted in so amending the rules as to enable that bill to come in as other appropriation bills are allowed to come, commanding the floor at any time.

Whatever may have been the intention, whatever may have been the purpose, and I do not intend to reflect upon either, the effect of this proposition now before us is not so much to lead to the perfection of the river and harbor appropriation bill, and to render it more acceptable to the public sentiment of the country, as to lead to its strangulation and its death.

In this connection I would say to gentlemen that there is a power in this land and there is a power in this House that believes in this system of internal improvements, that believes in the propriety of appropriating public money raised by taxation in one way or another to the improvement of the commercial highways of the country in the advancement of the nation's prosperity, the transportation of its products, and the remunerative employment of its laborers. There is a power in this land which makes this demand, and a power in this House which will see to it that this demand shall find a favorable response. The river and harbor bill will be passed. It will be passed in the best shape possible to be given to it by hard labor and intelligent investigation. It will be prepared in a spirit of fairness and of patriotism, and I have no doubt it will be hereafter as, so far as my personal knowledge extends, it has been heretofore, a good and proper bill worthy of the support of the House and of the great object for which every dollar it embraces is intended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word or two in comment upon some remarks made by the gentleman who preceded me, [Mr. RANDALL.] It is suggested that an exception ought to be made with respect to this particular bill. All the other appropriation bills go to the Committee on Appropriations. This one, even according to this proposed amendment, must go to the Committee on Commerce in the first instance, and afterward to the Committee on Appropriations for revision. Why, sir, in the preparation of the last two river and harbor bills (and I imagine the work will be equally as great in the preparation of those to come hereafter) the Committee on Commerce had to read from seventeen hundred to two thousand printed pages of engineers' reports, besides voluminous manuscript pages, relating to these works. In the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress three solid months were devoted by that committee to the preparation of this bill. In the last Congress, through the intervention of a sub-committee and after considerable labor devoted by the full committee to a revision of its work, the bill was prepared in a somewhat shorter time.

If this bill should go to the Committee on Appropriations at all, it should go there for intelligent revision. That committee can make no intelligent revision of it in less time than it required the Committee on Commerce intelligently to prepare it. After the expenditure of two or three months in the preparation of the bill by the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Appropriations, as every member knows, cannot give to the bill the same investigation which has been required in its preparation.

Then comes the proposition that the Committee on Appropriations shall ascertain the amount that can be devoted to these purposes—shall fix a gross sum. How will this scheme operate? The Committee on Appropriations cannot fix the sum in advance, because whatever may be the condition of the public Treasury they cannot, if the theory advanced here be correct, know until the other appropriation bills are prepared what sums should properly be embraced in this bill. They cannot take the bill prepared by the Committee on Commerce and reduce it in gross or pro rata, because in doing so they would do such violence to certain works and improvements as to cause an absolute waste in expenditure and an absolute abandonment of object.

Suppose a bill were brought in appropriating eight or nine millions of dollars; suppose the Committee on Appropriations should say the amount ought to be cut down to five million and should reduce it accordingly; suppose they make the reduction pro rata, applying the ratio of reduction to each item. Now, a particular work may be just on the eve of completion, but in such a condition as to be exposed in its incomplete state to the fury of the winds and the waves which wait for no man and for no appropriation. The cutting down of the appropriation in such a case would have the effect not only of making the appropriation a waste, but would probably consign the work itself and the amount already expended on it to destruction by the fury of the elements. If reduction be made at all, it ought to be applied only to such works as are in a condition to stand the reduction. The reduction ought not to be made in gross or pro rata, but ought to be made after intelligent investigation, such as the Committee on Appropriations, whatever may be its ability, cannot, with its other duties, command the time to make.

I am opposed to this entire theory. When a committee having special charge of a subject has spent day after day and night after night, going through from seventeen hundred to two thousand pages of printed reports and innumerable manuscript bundles, in order to arrive at a definite and intelligent comprehension of its merits, why should their work be referred to another committee, (I care not what committee,) in order that such committee may arbitrarily say, "The condition of the country, or it may be the condition of some political campaign, is such that the reduction of expenditures is required," thus cutting down the appropriations without any regard to the merits of the bill in whole or in any of its parts? I am unalterably opposed to any such scheme with reference to this or any other bill that may be pending in this House.

Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested with some apparent point that since 1861 these appropriations have greatly increased. One gentleman who favors this report has told us that they have amounted in the aggregate to $125,000,000; and he congratulates the House and the country upon the fact that the Congress of the United States has appropriated this sum to purposes for which it has been so well expended and which are so intimately connected with the prosperity of the country. I am in accord with that sentiment. But as we are told that there has been a gradual increase in these appropriations from year to year, I ask what great system requiring the expenditure of money, initiated in 1861, and embracing the various items and the large interests which are involved in the undertaking to improve the rivers and harbors of this country, could have gone on through ten years without a more marked increase of expenditure in proportion to its importance than is shown by the record presented?

After an experience of more than two years devoted to the close investigation of subjects connected with the rivers and harbors of this country, I say now, with the knowledge which that investigation has afforded me of the manner in which Government money is lost by the failure to prosecute diligently these public works and their consequent destruction by storm and tide and flood, that I would conscientiously, and with a clear conviction of patriotism and of duty, vote an appropriation of $50,000,000 every year that the Treasury could stand it for the prosecution of these great works until they were completed. It would give transportation to our commodities, employment to our people, and prosperity to the country.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is not true that the amounts appropriated by this House for rivers and harbors have every year been increased in the Senate?

Mr. KENNA. I had intended to come to that. It is true that in the Senate, where this bill is considered as in Committee of the Whole section by section, it has every year in my experience been increased from one to two millions of dollars; and this shows that the methods by which the House has dealt with it have been in the line of economy.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman to permit me to correct the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] this morning, and which has been quoted by the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. KENNA. I yield for that purpose, as I always desire, if mistaken, to be set right.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Ohio stated that $125,000,000 in the aggregate had been appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors. In that statement the gentleman is not entirely accurate. There has been appropriated only between seventy-five and eighty millions for such purposes—less than eighty millions.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken the pains to ascertain definitely the exact amount appropriated, and for the purposes of this argument it makes no difference, but I have no doubt the gentleman from Texas is correct. As I have already stated, I now repeat that if the amount had been twice as much or thrice as much I should cheerfully, for one, have taken the responsibility of voting the money necessary for supporting a proper system of improvements of rivers and harbors in this country.

Why, sir, we have heard a discussion upon this floor running over months upon questions affecting this Government and its financial policy, and more than once I have heard, and with surprise, from members taking part in that discussion, a statement attributing the prompt payment by France of her immense war indemnity to Prussia solely and exclusively to the financial system of the French people. Take the engineer's map of France, Mr. Chairman, and it will show you in different colors—in green and in red and in blue and in yellow—every water course, natural and artificial, which that country can boast. There can be seen at a glance every water course whose navigation has been opened up to commerce by the expenditure of the public money. Every water route capable of improvement has received attention to such an extent as to make it navigable to the highest attainable degree. So, sir, you will find there is hardly a producer in the whole of France who cannot from his very door ship the product of his labor by convenient and cheap water transportation to any market he may desire. That is the great secret of the prosperity which reaches the door of every peasant throughout the length and breadth of that land, and which enabled those people to surprise the civilized world by the payment of millions as of a farthing.

Mr. REAGAN. France, with a territory much less than Texas, has appropriated annually about $10,000,000 for the improvement of its navigable rivers.

Mr. KENNA. I had not expected, Mr. Chairman, to occupy the time of the House so long. What I have said I have said hastily, but I stand by it. It is right. It is in the interest of the improvement of our commercial highways, and to that extent in behalf of the great commerce of this country. It is patriotic and just. In conclusion I would add that I have done more in the patriotic endeavor to build up this country by voting these appropriations in the last year or two for the improvement of its commercial highways and the advancement of its general prosperity than I accomplished in the whole time I was among the "confederate brigadiers" attempting to tear it down. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I will yield now, Mr. Chairman, five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. STEVENSON,] and then five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] and I believe I am also under obligation to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MILLS. Will not the gentleman yield to a motion to rise?

Mr. BLACKBURN. We are within ten minutes of finishing this hour, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his motion to rise.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I intend to occupy the attention of this committee simply to say in the beginning of my remarks that for one I appreciate and indorse the labors of the Committee on Rules. I have felt, as almost all the members of the House have felt who are little accustomed to legislation, the necessity for some revision of the rules of this House. I think this committee has discharged its duty faithfully. They have placed it in the power of the House at least so the majority can carry on legislation and be held responsible by the country for that legislation.

Passing from that point, believing, as I do, the report of this committee should be adopted as a whole, I believe by far the most important service the Committee on Rules has rendered to the House and the country is in reporting the rule by which appropriations for rivers and harbors shall come before the House for discussion. The gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] to whom I propounded the question, has not answered it up to this moment, and he never will answer it till he goes to his grave, why it is these appropriations for rivers and harbors should be held so sacred that seven or eight millions of dollars every year should be voted out of the Treasury of the United States for this purpose, and no member of this House, no member of it not a member of that Committee on Commerce, should be permitted to discuss that river and harbor appropriation bill or to offer an amendment to it. In the language of the gentleman from Texas upon his motion, I am compelled, year after year, to vote this appropriation of seven or eight millions of dollars without any power on the part of myself or any other member to ascertain why or wherefore or for what purpose these appropriations are inserted—to ascertain whether they are advantageous or proper, or otherwise.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have only five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. It is only for the purpose of stating that the river and harbor bills are always printed when reported to the House from the Committee on Commerce, and if one-third of the members of the House desire it the bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand that the rights of the minority are sacred, and that a minority, even one-third or less, of this House has the right to be heard on this bill. But the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I understand to say virtually that while the rights of the minority are sacred on all other questions, upon this alone they are not to be held sacred; that by a two-thirds vote their rights are to be done away with and the river and harbor bill passed without opportunity for discussion or amendment, without the power of amendment, and absolutely without the power even of having the bill read.

Without reading, without discussion, without amendment, we are required to vote on that bill as a law, or to vote against some appropriations which we think are proper to be made.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask the gentleman whether it is one of the sacred rights of the minority that one-third shall rule two-thirds?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir. We do not propose that one-third shall rule two-thirds of the House, but we do say that when you bring before the House a bill appropriating $8,000,000 out of the Treasury, we should have the right to know for what specific purpose the appropriations are to be made, and we should have the right to offer amendments and the right to discuss them.

We insist, whether we are one-third or one-twentieth of the House, that we should have the right of amendment and discussion of so important a measure, and that the number can make no sort of difference as far as the question of right is involved.

Mr. CALKINS. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding to me for five minutes. I will say, however, that I desire to speak to only one point that has been raised in this discussion, and five minutes will be entirely inadequate even to the few remarks which I desire to make. I want to speak as to the power that is placed in these committees. I am of the opinion that if the theory which it seems the Committee on Rules adopted in presenting this report to the House is correct, then all appropriation bills should go to the Committee on Appropriations; but if the theory upon which they acted is wrong, then the appropriation bills should be divided, as has been suggested, and sent to the proper committees.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio, always strong in his statements, presents the strongest view evidently which can be taken of the theory which has been adopted by this committee, that there should be two great fiscal committees, as he expressed it, with their backs to each other. He had better say under the rules as presented that they propose one great fiscal committee to obliterate all of the other committees, a committee to put all the other committees upon their backs, I think would have been a more proper designation. It is the power of the committee which I object to and the question which I desire to discuss at the proper time.

Mr. Chairman, but one word further. I will say here there is no reason that I can divine why the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs or on Commerce should take charge of all the business pertaining to their respective Departments except the one single duty of appropriating money. The Committee on Invalid Pensions know as well as the Committee on Appropriations how much money is required to run that bureau. The Committee on Military Affairs know as well as the Committee on Appropriations how much money is required to run the Army. The Committee on Naval Affairs certainly know as well as the Committee on Appropriations how much money is required to run the Navy; and why is it that all the duties pertaining to these several Departments—for these committees are clothed with the power of presenting bills to the House in connection with them—should be in the committees except the one important question of saying how much money shall be expended upon them? There is a reason for it, and the reason exists simply in this: it places under the control of a few men of this House the absolute power to say how far we shall go, and no farther. Under the rule referred to by the eminent gentleman from Pennsylvania, (and I believe he is the father of the rule,) the committee may go into the House and say we present a bill appropriating so much money, and not a single member on the floor shall have power to say that that appropriation may be increased. It may be decreasd, but not by a majority vote, but by two-thirds of the House. That is a power that I say should not dwell in any committee of this House, and the theory adopted by this Committee on Rules is all wrong. The report had better be amended so as to say that all but the fifteen members of the Committee on Appropriations may resign, and that committee shall go on and run the Government. That is precisely what it says, expressed only in terser language.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. I take the floor, and will give way for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the return, in compliance with the request of the House, of the bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and preemption entry and sale, the same as other public lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) touching the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FARR, until Saturday, the 10th of January, on account of important business; and

To Mr. TALBOTT, for to-morrow.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspection of money accounts of disbursing officers, to accompany report of the Inspector-General of the United States Army for the year 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BONDS OF DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a notice published by the trustees of certain bonds of the Dismal Swamp Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

FORT STOCKTON, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending legislation to provide for the purchase of the land occupied by Fort Stockton, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVENWORTH MILITARY PRISON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending legislation authorizing that the proceeds of the labor of prisoners confined in the Leavenworth military prison be applied toward the support of the prison; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FIRST UNITED STATES LETTERS-PATENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending the appropriation of $500 for the purchase of the first letters-patent issued by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BOUNTY, ETC., TO COLORED SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimate for expenses of collection and payment of bounty, &c., to colored soldiers, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SALE OF SUBSISTENCE SUPPLIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the sale of subsistence supplies to companies, detachments, and hospitals; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

A. P. HYATT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting request of A. P. Hyatt for permission to own and operate a ferry across the Missouri River at Fort Buford, Dakota; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CAPTAIN JOSEPH CONRAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting petition of Captain Joseph Conrad, Eleventh Infantry, for retirement as of the grade of colonel; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MRS. CATHARINE SMITH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the claim of Mrs. Catharine Smith; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting annual report of receipts and expenditures on account of water rents, Hot Springs reservation, Arkansas, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEAF-TOBACCO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives of December 18, 1879, information showing the number of licensed dealers in leaf-tobacco and the amount of internal revenue collected from such dealers during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1879; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

RICHARD SUGGS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the claim of Richard Suggs; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

ALASKA TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending the passage of an act to provide for the appointment of justices of the peace for the Territory of Alaska, and to extend the criminal laws of Oregon to said Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories.

GENERAL E. O. C. ORD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secrerary of War, transmitting report of General E. O. C. Ord, commanding military department of Texas, in answer to a resolution of House of Representatives dated June 25, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MARSHES OF THE POTOMAC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a draught of a bill summitted by the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, entitled "A bill to provide for the reclamation of the marshes in the harbors of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes," together with the accompanying letter of the president of the board requesting its transmission to Congress.

The bill embraces a plan for the reclamation of the marshes of the Potomac River and its eastern branch within the limits of the city of Washington, and is carefully framed with a view to economy in the prosecution of the work. The attention of Congress is again invited to the urgent need of legislation for this important work, which has been so long delayed.

The improvement contemplated is essential to the health of those who reside, whether permanently or temporarily, at the capital, and to the safe and convenient navigation of the waters in its vicinity by vessels employed in the service of the Government and for the purposes of commerce. It is a measure of more than local benefit. The capital of the nation should be relieved from every disadvantage which it is practicable to remove, and should possess every attraction with which it can be invested by the intelligent and fostering care of those who are intrusted with its immediate supervision. The people of the country will sustain and approve the efforts of their representatives in the discharge of this responsibility.

R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 19, 1879.

The SPEAKER. This communication, with accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONGER. I think the message, with the accompanying documents, should be printed.

Mr. WARNER. In the RECORD?

Mr. CONGER. No; but as a document for the use of the House.

The message and accompanying documents were accordingly referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARNER. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

By Mr. YOCUM: The petition of soldiers of the war of the rebellion, that their pay be made equal to that of the bondholder—to the same committee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 9, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SAILING REGULATIONS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to report to this House the rules prescribed by the Navy Department for the guidance of naval vessels at sea; whether in his opinion the same are in conflict with the existing rules for the guidance of merchant vessels; and, if so, wherein such conflict exists; and also what measures are in his opinion necessary to be taken to establish a system of international rules which shall apply to all naval and merchant vessels at sea.

R. GORTHY AND C. GREEN.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3282) for the relief of Robert Gorthy and Calvin Green; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FREEDMEN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. O'CONNOR, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial signed by more than 1,000 people of the city of New Berne, North Carolina, praying for the passage by Congress of the bill to return to the freedmen of the South their savings deposited with the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, having charge of the bill on that subject.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for consideration at this time, Senate joint resolution No. 58, touching the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. KEIFER. I must object to that.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will state to the House that by the terms of the law of March 3, 1877, the commissioners who were appointed to examine the title to the Hot Springs reservation were required to make a certain report, and within thirty days of the filing of that report the Commissioner of the General Land Office is required to submit the land for sale. Now, there are parties interested in the reservation who desire still further time for a hearing of their claims, and they ask a delay of only sixty days in subjecting these lands to final sale. That is all there is in the joint resolution. The thirty days will be out on the 11th of this month, so that if any action is to be had at all it must be had to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to the reference of the joint resolution, but I do object to its present consideration.

Mr. CONVERSE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. If this joint resolution is to be passed at all it should be passed now. It gives only a delay of sixty days in subjecting these lands to sale.

Mr. COX. Does it undertake to interfere with the present condition of things except by postponing the sale?

Mr. CONVERSE. Not at all.

Mr. COX. Then I see no objection to it.

Mr. KEIFER. I insist upon my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the joint resolution might be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with the right to report it back at any time.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask that.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to that.

The joint resolution was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands with authority to report the same back at any time.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. HAYES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3283) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN GAULT, JR.

On motion of Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 105) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late a major of the Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BEVERLY TUCKER.

Mr. LOWE, by unanimous consent, introduced (for Mr. FORSYTHE) a bill (H. R. No. 3284) for the relief of Beverly Tucker, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ESTATE OF DR. JOEL C. FRAZIER.

Mr. CARLISLE. The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 614) for the relief of the estate of Dr. Joel C. Frazier, deceased, late of Harrison County, Kentucky, have directed me to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, (which has been erroneously referred,) and that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

SCHOONER W. P. COX.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3285) changing the name of the schooner W. P. Cox to Annie V. Minor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

W. SCOTT WHITNEY.

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3286) for the relief of W. Scott Whitney for services as second lieutenant in the Second Regiment of New York Veteran Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UNSURVEYED LANDS, RANDOLPH COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3287) granting to the county of Randolph, in the State of Illinois, certain public unsurveyed lands within said county on certain conditions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF COLORED EMIGRANTS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I hope that, by unanimous consent, this bill may receive present consideration. Its object is to relieve some contributions from abroad, now in bond in New York, from import duties assessed against them by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Bills of this character usually go to the Committee of Ways and Means, but the Chair will state to the House the request of the gentleman that this bill be considered now.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. It is important that this relief be extended at once, if at all. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, the right to object being reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all clothing and other articles, being charitable contributions, or the avails of charitable contributions, imported in good faith for the relief or aid of colored persons who may have emigrated from their homes to other States, not for sale, and all such articles imported and now in bond, shall be admitted free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That such articles shall be delivered only to State or municipal corporations, or to some society or institution established for charitable purposes: And provided further, That the importers or consignees of such articles shall give such security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe for the payment of lawful duties on such articles should any of them be sold or used contrary to the provisions and intent of this act. This act shall take effect from its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think the bill should be referred. It is in line with many other bills of a similar character. The Committee of Ways and Means are now examining into this question. If this bill be found correct we will report it back early next week. I hope the gentleman will consent to let it take the course I suggest.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I must consent if there is objection; but I had hoped unanimous consent would be given that these contributions might be made available at once for these indigent people.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is no disposition on my part to oppose the object which the gentleman has in view, but only to protect the Treasury from possible wrong.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to present consideration, the bill will be referred.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I want to say——

The SPEAKER. There are so many gentlemen desiring to be recognized that the Chair cannot allow debate upon a question of this kind.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Perhaps the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection when I state that this bill was prepared at the Treasury Department by the law officer of that Department.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York as objecting. One objection is fatal to the request.

KNIGHTS OF WISE MEN.

Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3289) to incorporate the Supreme Grand Lodge Knights of Wise Men; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE QUARANTINE.

Mr. ACKLEN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be authorized to have printed the papers and documents, for the use of said committee, relating to the interstate quarantine bill now before said committee.

KIMBERLY BROTHERS.

Mr. GOODE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3290) for the relief of Kimberly Brothers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3291) for allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed and recommitted.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to report a resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which it is important for the business before that committee should be adopted at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to have printed any documents for the use of said committee which it may deem necessary in connection with subjects under consideration.

There was no objection, and the resolution was received and adopted.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. SPRINGER. These reports from committees will be in order in the morning hour, and I hope gentlemen will not anticipate. I ask now to call up Senate amendment to House joint resolution No. 148——

Mr. BRIGHT. I object, and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT,] chairman of the Committee of Claims, the morning hour now begins at twelve o'clock and thirty-one minutes, and this being Friday reports are in order from committees of business of a private nature only, the call resting with the Committee of Accounts.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 2803) for the relief of Doddridge & Davis; when the Speaker signed the same.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the following cases; and the same were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 430) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company;

A bill (H. R. No. 632) for the benefit of Alexander Drake, of Wolfe County, Kentucky;

The petition of John B. Slack, for relief; and

The petition of William Wood, for relief.

JACKSON GRUBB.

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee of Claims, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 710) to refund to Jackson Grubb internal-revenue taxes wrongfully collected; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

D. L. PAYNE.

Mr. BOWMAN, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred a resolution of the House for the payment to D. L. Payne of $400 for extra services as messenger of the House during the Forty-fifth Congress, reported the same back adversely; and it was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOWMAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BRIGHT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] who is a member of the Committee of Claims, and intrusted with reports to submit from that committee, has just stepped out; and I hope, by unanimous consent, permission will be granted to him hereafter to submit any reports he may have ready from that committee.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

TELEPHONE IN HOUSE LOBBY.

Mr. ACKLEN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the following resolution for present consideration:

Resolved, That permission is hereby given to the National Telephone Company to put a telephone in the lobby of the House of Representatives for the use of members and clerks of committees, providing the work of placing said telephone in said lobby shall entail no expense upon the House.

Mr. ACKLEN. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for me to say anything on that subject, as the resolution fully explains itself. No expense is to be entailed upon the House whatever. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. ACKLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROPAGATION OF SALT-WATER FISH.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back adversely House bills Nos. 1355 and 1858, to protect the propagation of salt-water fish; and the same were laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

W. S. MAXWELL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3064) to remove the political disabilities of W. S. Maxwell, of Tennessee.

The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that all the political disabilities imposed upon W. S. Maxwell, of the State of Tennessee, by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask for the reading of the petition accompanying this bill.

The petition was read, as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
Decaturville, Decatur County.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The humble petition of W. S. Maxwell, a citizen of the county of Decatur, State of Tennessee, would respectfully represent that he is laboring under the disabilities imposed by section 3 of article 14 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

In consideration of the premises, your petitioner would humbly pray that his said disabilities be removed, and as in duty will ever pray, &c.

W. S. MAXWELL.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

WILLIAM SHARP.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2569) to remove the political disabilities of William Sharp, of Virginia.

The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that all the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States on William Sharp, of Virginia, are hereby removed.

The petition was read, as follows:

NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, November 29, 1879.

To the Congress of the United States:

On the secession of Virginia in April, 1861, I resigned my commission as a lieutenant in the United States Navy and entered the service of the Confederate States.

I respectfully request the removal of my political disabilities.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM SHARP.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move, Mr. Speaker, to amend that bill by adding, after the name of the party, "and all other persons."

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that that motion would not be in order to-day, as this being Friday, private-bill day, the amendment would attach to a private bill that which would make it general in its character.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think we have already had about enough of this sort of farce here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he coincides with the gentleman.

Mr. WRIGHT. We ought to have a general bill covering all such cases.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is precisely of the same opinion as the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

W. H. PARKER.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2566) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Parker, of Maryland.

The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States on William H. Parker, of Maryland, are hereby removed.

The petition was read, as follows:

MARYLAND AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, COLLEGE STATION,
Prince George's County, Maryland, April 5, 1869.

To the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioner, William H. Parker, formerly an officer in the United States Navy, and recently in the service of the Confederate States, respectfully prays that by joint resolution of your honorable bodies or otherwise the political disabilities imposed on him by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution may be removed.

WILLIAM H. PARKER.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

REFUND OF TAXES.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably House bill No. 166, to provide for the refunding of certain taxes in conformity with a decision of the Supreme Court.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to refund all taxes collected upon "the capital employed by any person in the business of banking," which come within the principles of the decision by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Bailey, collector, vs. Clark and others, anything in any act to the contrary notwithstanding, provided that applications for such refund shall be made in conformity with the existing regulations of the Treasury, and shall be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within one year from the passage of this act.

Mr. LAPHAM. As this is the unanimous report from the committee, I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is that a private bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine it.

Mr. LAPHAM. The bill relates to the claims of a very few persons in a single collection district in the city of New York.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the paragraph in the Manual as to the line of distinction between public and private bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

[The line of distinction between public and private bills is so difficult to be defined in many cases that it must rest on the opinion of the Speaker and the details of the bill. It has been the practice of Parliament, and also of Congress, to consider as private such as are "for the interest of individuals, public companies or corporations, a parish, city, or county, or other locality." To be a private bill, it must not be general in its enactments, but for the particular interest or benefit of a person or persons. A pension bill for the relief of a soldier's widow is a private bill; but a bill granting pensions to such persons as a class, instead of as individuals, is a public bill. Bills for the incorporation of companies, and whose operations are confined within the District of Columbia, have been treated as private; but where such companies are authorized to have agencies and transact business outside the limits of the District, they are treated as public. Bills granting lands for railroads have always been held to be public; while a bill authorizing the extension of a railroad into the District of Columbia, or conferring certain privileges upon such an incorporation, has been held to be private.]

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask the attention of the Chair to the facts stated in the report as showing the character of this bill. As I have stated, it relates solely to the claims of a few individuals in a single collection district in the city of New York who were compelled to pay under protest revenue taxes on borrowed money which the collector of the district treated as part of the capital of bankers. The question came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was decided adversely to the action of the collector. Under an arrangement between the claimants and the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York a single suit was agreed upon. The object of this bill is to provide for the refunding of taxes in the other cases which were precisely of the same character.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from New York whether the bill does not provide generally for a refunding of taxes under the circumstances stated?

Mr. LAPHAM. Perhaps if there were any other cases of the same kind in the United States it would; but there are none. The facts show there is not another district in the State of New York where this rule of taxation was adopted.

The SPEAKER. Still the bill is in its language general.

Mr. GARFIELD. While the language of the bill is general, the question may still arise whether the subject-matter of the bill is itself general. The committee tells us the subject-matter is particular and individual. I think this might without any injustice be treated as a private bill.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is really a private bill, as the report will show if it is read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read

The report of the Committee on the Judiciary was read, as follows:

That in the years 1869 and 1870 certain taxes were imposed and collected by the collector of internal revenue in the thirty-second collection district of New York upon sums of borrowed money, claimed to be capital of certain bankers and brokers in business in said district, which taxes were claimed to be illegal at the time, and were paid under protest; that the said collection district is the only one in the United States where such rule of taxation was adopted. After the payment of such taxes under protest, as before stated, an action was commenced against the collector of the district by one of the persons making such payment. Thereupon an arrangement was made with the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York that all claims for taxes so claimed to have been illegally collected should abide the event of the case so commenced; and upon the faith of that arrangement the remaining parties omitted to commence actions. The action so commenced was finally decided in the October term of the Supreme Court of the United States in the year 1874, and was in favor of the plaintiff and against the legality of said taxes. In the mean time, and in June, 1872, Congress passed an act providing that claims for taxes to be refunded must be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within two years from the time of collection; so that before the decision of the court was made all the claims of the parties were barred by said statute.

Your committee, under the circumstances surrounding the case, and in view of the fact that these cases are exceptional and confined to a single collection district, and the claimants have been guilty of no laches in the premises, recommend the passage of the bill. A similar bill was passed by the Forty-fourth Congress and approved on the 27th February, 1877.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very much in doubt on the point, but he gives the benefit of the doubt to the reserving of this day for private bills only. The Chair thinks that the bill in its scope is a public one. Although it is only intended to reach a class of cases in a particular district, it would still apply to any other cases of the same character.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I would like to ask my colleague a question. Does he state that a mode of taxation was adopted in the thirty-second collection district of New York which was not adopted in other districts?

Mr. LAPHAM. It was adopted in no other district in the United States. I have the affidavit of the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue on that point, in which he states that this is the only instance in which this class of capital was sought to be taxed.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the scope of the bill, it is that in this particular collection district there have been large amounts of taxes paid under a cetain rule of taxation, and the bill proposes to refund these taxes to the individuals who paid them. But the terms of the bill are general, although it is stated that it will apply only to that particular district, and they are general as relating to the tax-payers of that district. The Chair is therefore inclined to believe that this does not belong to the class of bills for which Friday ought to be reserved. And, in addition, the bill is subject to the point of order, even if allowed to come in.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill be considered now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the bill is to be considered now I raise the point of order that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, because it calls for an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York desires to report the bill by consent, and then the point of order is made by the gentleman from Illinois that it must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have no objection to its going on the Calendar. Under the ruling of the Chair I understand it goes on the public calendar.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the public calendar.

There being no objection, the bill was received, and was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the following bills and petitions, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

The bill (H. R. No. 875) for the relief of John B. Slack;

The bill (H. R. No. 985) for the relief of Joseph Sawyer;

The bill (H. R. No. 1356) for the relief of J. H. Merrill;

The petition of Andrew Jones, praying for the allowance of a claim in his favor against the Government; and

The petition of Jesse Durnell, second-class pilot, United States Mississippi Squadron, for difference between second and first class pilot's pay.

JOSEPH B. CAMPBELL.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R No. 1800) for the relief of Joseph B. Campbell, captain in the Fourth Artillery, United States Army; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. RUBY.

Mr. BRAGG also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of James M. Ruby; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM GAINES.

Mr. McCOOK, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2902) to place William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list.

The bill provides that William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, shall be placed on the retired list of the Army with the full pay and allowance of an ordnance-sergeant for and during his natural life, he having served faithfully and honorably in the Army of the United States for more than fifty-one years, and having been an ordnance-sergeant for over thirty-three consecutive years of said service, and having participated in the siege of Fort Meigs, the defense of Fort Stevenson, and the battle of the Thames in the war of 1812.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCOOK. I ask that the report accompanying the bill just passed be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

Mr. McCOOK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 2902, to place William Gaines, late an ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list, submits the following report:

William Gaines was born in Frederick City, Maryland, in 1799, and when a mere boy removed to the State of Kentucky. When twelve years of age, he was present with his uncle at the battle of Tippecanoe, and in 1812, when but thirteen years of age, he enlisted as a drummer-boy in Captain Armstrong's company of the Twenty-fourth Infantry, at Knoxville, Tennessee. After serving against the Creek Indians he marched with his company through the States of Kentucky and Ohio, was engaged in the defense of Forts Meigs and Stephenson in July and August, 1813, and took part in the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813. After the declaration of peace, he was engaged on recruiting service in the city of New York, and on the 23d of November, 1816, re-enlisted in the Army. His record in the Adjutant-General's Office (attached and made a part of this report) commenced from that date, and it shows that he served continuously until his final discharge in 1866, a period of over fifty-one years. For over thirty-three years he served as an ordnance-sergeant, holding that rank at the date of his discharge. He is now an occupant of the Soldiers' Home near this city, and he is believed to be the only survivor of the gallant defenders of Fort Stephenson, under Colonel Croghan.

In March, 1879, an act was approved placing Lewis Seffman, ordnance-sergeant, on the retired list with full pay and allowances, after forty years' continuous service as such ordnance-sergeant and fifty-three years' service in the Army; and in view of this precedent, as well as the long and faithful services of Sergeant Gaines, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with favorable recommendations, the following bills; which, with the accompanying reports, were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3263) granting a pension to Margaret E. West; and
A bill (H. R. No. 271) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary B. Dallas.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3292) granting a pension to Sally M. Buchanan, widow of General Robert C. Buchanan, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, bills of the following titles; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, orderded to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2643) granting a pension to Mary Meighan, widow of Peter Meighan;
A bill (H. R. No. 2474) to increase the pension of Thomas Riley, late private Company L, Seventh United States Cavalry;
A bill (H. R. No. 863) granting a pension to George W. Woodward; and
A bill (H. R. No. 864) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances M. Wilkinson.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1650) for the relief of Edward T. Brownell, and moved that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOSTETLER, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, bills of the following titles; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 746) for the relief of Anna E. Hallowell;
A bill (H. R. No. 748) granting a pension to Rebecca S. Allen;
A bill (H. R. No. 751) granting a pension to Harvey Burk; and
A bill (H. R. No. 753) granting a pension to Thomas J. Jackson.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on behalf of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VOORHIS,] asks that Hon. Alfred Bell, of New York, an ex-member of the Legislature of that State, be admitted to the privileges of the floor during his stay in the city.

Mr. WILSON. I make the same request in regard to Hon. William N. Chancellor, of Parkersburgh, West Virginia, a member of the Legislature of that State.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection these requests will be granted.

There was no objection.

D. M. HAMLIN.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for concurrence in amendments from the Senate, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

After line 6 insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Andrew F. Slade the sum of $342.50, the same being for services as riding-page of the Senate, at the rate of $2.50 per day, from the 17th day of July to the 30th day of November, inclusive, 1879; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Amend the title so as to read:

Joint resolution for the relief of D. M. Hamlin and Andrew F. Slade.

There being no objection, the amendments were concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. WOOD. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion, there were—ayes 127, noes 38.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion of Mr. WOOD was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. This is consideration day, and not objection day.

CHARLES CLINTON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles Clinton, late assistant United States treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,850, being the amount of public money stolen from his office on the 1st day of May, 1871, and refunded by him to the Government of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, beg leave to report:

That a similar bill was unanimously reported from the committee at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, but was not reached for consideration in the House. The report then made states the facts connected with this claim so clearly and succinctly that we prefer to adopt it rather than prepare a new statement. It is as follows:

"That they have given full consideration to the bill providing for the relief of Charles Clinton, late assistant United States treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, and of all the facts connected therewith.

"It appears from the information furnished from the Treasury Department that on the morning of the 1st of May, 1871, the sum of $5,850 was stolen from the office of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans by some party unknown, and that immediately thereafter the amount was refunded by the assistant treasurer to the Government.

"It appears from the testimony submitted to the committee that a thorough examination of all the facts and into the business of the office of the assistant treasurer by the special agents of the Treasury exonerated the cashier and employés of the office in New Orleans, and the assistant treasurer himself, from all fault or blame.

"It is made to appear that, in addition to the usual duties of the assistant treasurer, he was required by the Secretary of the Treasury to take charge of all the internal-revenue stamps to be sold throughout the Southwest, and to sell the same from his office, without being allowed any increase of force, although the assistant treasurer frequently applied for authority to employ a clerk to take special charge of this business, and informed the Secretary that without an increase of the employés he could not conduct the office satisfactorily.

"The Secretary replied that no appropriation had been made for this purpose, and that therefore the request of the assistant treasurer could not be complied with.

"It appears that while the cashier was engaged for a moment in attending to the duties of his office away from the counter, on which were several packages of money lying, some thief fished up one of them by reaching over the barrier in front of the counter and immediately disappeared.

"There is no suspicion, or grounds of suspicion, against the assistant treasurer or his cashier, or the employés of the office.

"It appears that the assistant treasurer was a zealous and careful officer, and that the cashier was also diligent and faithful. Large sums of money passed through this office, and every dollar was faithfully accounted for. There was never at any time any complaint.

"It is also made to appear by the testimony before your committee that the assistant treasurer exercised due diligence and watchful care over the appointments and over the actions of his subordinates.

"The proof absolutely excludes any presumption of fraud or misconduct on the part of the assistant treasurer or his subordinates, or any privity or knowledge on the part of the assistant treasurer whatever."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the gentleman who reported this bill what sort of funds were taken in this case, money or stamps?

The CHAIRMAN. This bill was reported from the Committee of Ways and Means by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.]

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is not now in his seat; I have sent for him.

Mr. PRICE. I will state my reason for asking this question. The report discloses the fact that this property, whatever it was, was allowed to lie unguarded where any man who had not the fear of the law before his eyes could take it up and walk off with it. Yet the report goes on to say that there was great vigilance and efficiency in the administration of the office. That will do to tell somebody who has never been called upon to handle and take care of money. This money was placed where it could be reached by some outsider. When the money is gone, this officer comes here and asks to be reimbursed; and the statement is made that he has been very careful.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. PRICE. I do not know about that, for, Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to sit here and allow a bill of that sort to be laid aside with the recommendation that it do pass without knowing more about it than we do about this bill. The report to the contrary notwithstanding, there was clearly a want of care on the part of the officer having charge of these funds.

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise for the purpose of saying that this question cannot be disposed of by any single objection on the part of the gentleman from Iowa. The report of the committee is before the House for consideration, and the bill is only to be disposed of by a majority vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. This is not objection day, and this bill is to be disposed of in the ordinary way. The pending question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House on a recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. BARBER. I think, Mr. Chairman, we are entitled to know more about this case than we seem to do; and for one I should like to know whether the mode and manner in which this money disappeared as set forth in the report is a matter of fact or mere theory.

The question was submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. By the sound the motion to lay aside and report to the House does not seem to be agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. Before proceeding any further, I ask that this bill shall be passed over for the present until the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] who reported it from the Committee of Ways and Means, has had an opportunity to be present, when perhaps he will be able to give to the House such information as may, together with the report, satisfy the committee the bill ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the bill will be passed over for the present.

SAMUEL LORD, JR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was an act (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver up to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver of the president, directors, and company of the State Bank of Charleston, South Carolina, the following bonds, now in the Treasury of the United States, to wit: bonds numbered 812, 821, 836, and 837, each for the sum of $1,000, being coupon bonds issued by the State of South Carolina in aid of the Blue Ridge Railroad Company, and signed by R. F. W. Allston, governor, and T. G. Pickens, comptroller-general, under an act of the General Assembly of South Carolina, ratified on the 21st day of December, 1854, which were the property of the said president, directors, and company of the State Bank, to be administered by the said Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, as he may be directed by the proper court in South Carolina, under which he holds his appointment of receiver as aforesaid. It further authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the said receiver of said bank, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $479, collected of the coupons for interest on said bonds, and heretofore covered into the Treasury of the United States, to be administered by said receiver as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. PRICE. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying that bill.

The report was read, as follows:

That the State of South Carolina, by virtue of a law passed in 1854, issued bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 in aid of the Blue Ridge Railroad; that, upon such issue being made, the president, directors, and company of the State Bank of Charleston, South Carolina, a corporation created under the laws of that State prior to the year 1854, purchased one hundred of such bonds, each being for $1,000, and indorsed and numbered from 801 to 900, (both inclusive.) The bonds so purchased continued the property of the bank, and in the possession of its officers, from the time of their purchase until 27th of February, 1865. On the day last named the bonds, with other papers and property of the bank, were in the custody of its cashier (Benjamin M. Lee) for safe-keeping, at a country house near Lynch's Creek, Kershaw district, South Carolina, and were then taken from him by a detachment of the forces of the United States under the command of General W. T. Sherman.

In April, 1866, D. Heaton, a special agent of the Treasury Department, transmitted from New Berne, North Carolina, to the Secretary of the Treasury, four of said bonds, numbered 812, 821, 836, and 837, stating that they had been turned over to him (Heaton) as captured property by the provost marshal of New Berne, North Carolina.

The bonds are now in the Treasury Department; and the sum of $479, which has been collected of the coupons for interest on the bonds, has been covered into the Treasury of the United States.

In 1869, the said corporation being insolvent, a receiver of its property and effects was appointed, and Samuel Lord, jr., is now such receiver.

The committee is of the opinion that the receiver is entitled to such bonds, and to the amount collected for interest thereon and covered into the Treasury.

They therefore report to the Senate, with an amendment, the said bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House on a recommendation that it do pass.

CALVIN BRONSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Calvin Bronson $11,211 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The facts of the case are briefly these: By act of Congress of June 30, 1864, the tax on smoking-tobacco (the subject of this claim) was twenty-five cents per pound; by act of Congress of 3d March, 1865, the tax on same was made thirty-five cents per pound, to take effect on 1st April, 1865. The said lot of tobacco was manufactured in the month of March, 1865, returned to the assistant assessor under the terms of act of June 30, 1864, and the assessment was then made of twenty-five cents per pound, which assessment was handed to Collector Raymond, of the Toledo district, and by him collected.

After the act of 3d March, 1865, went into effect an additional assessment was made of ten cents per pound more, amounting to $11,211, which the claimant vigorously resisted until forced to pay the same.

In June, 1865, the revenue officials (in that revenue district) seized a large amount of tobacco belonging to the said Calvin Bronson, on the ground that he had in May, 1864, made a pretended sale to his brother, David Bronson, to avoid a higher rate of taxation which had been imposed by the first act of 30th June, 1864.

Mr. Bronson, the claimant, immediately came to Washington and requested the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to send a special agent to Toledo to examine and report on the grounds of this seizure. Messrs. Payne and Hawley, special agents, were appointed for that purpose and sent to Ohio, who, after thorough examination, reported, among other things, "that there was no fraud whatever in Mr. Bronson, and the seizure of his factory and tobacco was entirely unnecessary."

The claimant therefore insisted that this tax of ten cents additional on his smoking-tobacco was utterly illegal, but paid the same to get his factory and tobacco restored to him, and then appealed to the Internal Revenue Commissioner at Washington, which appeal has been pending until recently.

Under this appeal the said claim of Bronson was allowed by both the Commissioner and Solicitor of the Internal Revenue Department, and sent to the Secretary of the Treasury for approval, when the same was returned by a Mr. Gaines, a subordinate of the Treasury Department, upon the ground "that while the same was illegally collected, it was covered by an adjustment in the nature of a compromise, which, while it was not strictly a compromise under the law, in consequence of not having the Secretary of the Treasury's approval, it would yet be inequitable for the claimant thus to claim it."

Mr. HURD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] who reported this bill being absent, I will endeavor to make a statement to the House in reference to this case, being familiar with the facts and knowing the gentleman for whose relief the bill has been proposed. In March, 1865, Calvin Bronson, the claimant, was the owner of a large quantity of smoking-tobacco which had been manufactured in that month and was liable to taxation under the law passed in June, 1864. The tax was twenty-five cents per pound. After the tax had been paid a law was passed, which took effect in March, 1865, increasing the tax on smoking-tobacco to thirty-five cents per pound. The officers of the internal revenue insisted that Mr. Bronson was liable to the additional tax of ten cents. He resisted the payment of the tax upon two grounds: first, that the law in force at the time the tobacco was manufactured fixed it at twenty-five cents only; and, secondly, that the matter had altogether been closed. But, notwithstanding his resistance, the taxation was insisted upon, and it was paid by him under protest.

Afterward, the property of Mr. Bronson was seized upon the allegation that, in 1865, he had made a fraudulent conveyance of it to his brother, for the purpose of evading the law which had raised the tax. This seizure was altogether independent of the transaction referred to in this bill. The matter was referred to the Treasury Department, and, after a careful examination by agents appointed for that purpose, it was decided the seizure was unlawful, and the property was restored to Mr. Bronson. But the revenue officials at the time of the settlement still required that he should pay this additional ten cents on the tobacco.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HURD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAPP. Is this to reimburse the party for illegal taxes or as damages by virtue of the seizure of his property?

Mr. HURD. It is to return to him the tax which has been illegally collected from him.

Mr. BAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

Mr. HURD. I have only been stating the case. If the gentleman will wait until I finish it, I will yield to him.

Mr. BAKER. I desire simply to say to the gentleman from Ohio that there is only one question raised by the report which has been read upon which I have any difficulty, and that is the point which relates to the compromise alleged to have been made. The committee state only that the compromise which was made by this claimant with the Government and by virtue of which, as I understand, his property was released from seizure was in consideration in some way, as I take it, of this agreement, not to press this claim on his part against the Government. But they state only there was such a compromise; and yet for some reason which is unexplained by them they do not consider the compromise thus made by the Government with the claimant is now binding on the claimant. I would like to know on what ground it is insisted here that the compromise thus alleged by this report to have been made with the claimant fourteen years ago should at this time on any equitable consideration be set aside.

Mr. HURD. It was on this point I was about directing the attention of the House, when the gentleman from Indiana interrupted me. As the report of the committee and my statement has demonstrated, the tax which this claimant was obliged to pay was an illegal one, and the seizure of his property in no wise connected with the payment of this particular tax was an illegal one. The officers of the Government so reported and the Treasurer of the United States so found. But at the time this declaration was made this claim that this money should be returned to him was still refused; the Government, recognizing the fact that the property had been illegally seized, still held that having possession of the money it would retain it.

Now, whatever may have been the compromise between Mr. Bronson and the Government, it certainly results in this situation, that the Government had taken advantage of an unlawful act—of an illegal seizure of the property of the claimant—to compel him to consent to pay the money, or rather to withhold a claim for money which was in the Treasury of the United States. And by well-established principles of law which govern the contracts and relations of private individuals, it seems to me that the Government cannot insist on its right to hold this money at all. If it were the case of an individual asking for relief from an individual under similar circumstances, not only would the party be compelled to refund the money which had thus been extorted, but the individual who had been guilty of the extortion would be liable to indictment at common law. And I cannot believe the Government of the United States will make itself a party to a crime by taking money in this unlawful way from a private citizen.

The gentleman says or intimates it is rather late in the day this claim should be presented to the House. Mr. Bronson has been asking for relief at the hands of the House of Representatives and of Congress ever since this money was extorted from him. In the last Congress the Committee of Ways and Means unanimously reported in favor of the return of the money to him. The Committee of Ways and Means in this House at an early day made a similar report, and I insist under these circumstances the party thus unlawfully deprived of his money ought to receive it back.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, whenever any citizen of this country has his property wrongfully seized by the Government there is open to him, as there is to any other individual in any private business relation, two methods of adjusting the difficulty in which he finds himself. One of them is by appealing to the courts, and the other by effecting an amicable settlement of the matter. It seems in this case, when Mr. Bronson's property had been illegally seized, in order to get the restoration of that property without the necessity of invoking the aid of the court, he saw fit to make some adjustment with the Government as a condition of that release which looked to the relinquishment of the claim which he had for $11,000, and which he was seeking to recover.

The report of the Committee of Ways and Means, which I hold in my hand, shows that the claimant effected such a compromise as that, and he received the benefit of that compromise by the surrender of his legal right. It is, I submit again, as the gentleman from Ohio said or intimated, a little late in the day, after fourteen years have passed from the time this compromise was effected, for Mr. Bronson to come here asking Congress to relieve him from the compromise that he voluntarily made.

Mr. Chairman, in the private relations of life, where a party invokes the clemency of his adversary and enters into a compromise of a litigated matter, it is rather late in the day for him, fourteen years after the compromise has been concluded, to appeal to the tribunals of his country for the purpose of obtaining relief from a compromise that he went into with his eyes open when he had it in his power to refuse the compromise, and, by appealing to the courts that were always open, reclaim from the possession of the officers of the Government, on the ground that they had wrongfully seized his property, the possession of it back to himself. I submit that it will hardly do to take the money out of the Treasury at this late day on the bare suggestion that is made by the committee that the compromise was an unfortunate one on the part of Mr. Bronson, because the Government had possession of his property wrongfully.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SAPP. Is there any doubt that this tax was illegal? And if it was illegal ought not the man to have his money back again?

Mr. BAKER. Whether the tax was illegal or not is a matter about which I am not certainly advised, and about which I do not propose to enter into any discussion. I assume, Mr. Chairman, that, whether the tax was illegal or not, when Mr. Bronson set himself up as a judge in his own case at the time the question was sought to be compromised by him with the Government he knew as much about it as anybody else, and knew whether or not he was surrendering on a sufficient consideration legal rights that he then possessed. That is the ordinary case of any suitor or of any man who claims he has been injured and who has it in his hands, sitting as a judge in his own case, to determine whether under all the circumstances it is wise and expedient for him to effect a compromise; and if he does do it, I submit that there is no principle of law, and no principle of justice either, that is more familiar or more wisely exerted than that a party thus compromising shall not be heard to allege that he might have recovered more if he had gone into the courts by standing on his naked legal rights.

I submit that we ought always to scrutinize with the utmost nicety these aged claims, these claims that have grown hoary with age, and more especially so when the showing that is made by the man himself who comes asking relief is that, on sufficient ground which satisfied his own judgment, he, being judge of his own case, determined it against himself. Under such circumstances I submit he ought not to be heard at this late day to say he made an unwise decision.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman yield to me for another question?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAPP. Does the gentleman insist, if the Government has this man's money wrongfully, that it is right for the Government to hold on to it?

Mr. BAKER. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that in the administration of the money of the people this House is not to be governed by any ideas of equity that are to be found in the uncertain and conflicting notions which gentlemen may have as to what equity is. We are to be governed here, I submit, wherever we can find any fixed and certain legal rules for the government of our own conduct, by the administration of wise and settled rules. And whatever may be my notion about it, whether I believe that the tax was wrongfully levied in the first instance or not, whether I believe that the seizure of the next year was wrongful or not, that is a matter of no moment in my judgment. We are not here to give away the people's money, or to vote it away on any idle speculations as to what might have been equitable or inequitable at the time this transaction was closed. In point of fact and in point of law this man had the remedy in his own hands, and, having the remedy, he elected to make a settlement with the Government, and it is too late for him to-day to say, "It is true I adjusted this matter with the Government; it is true I got possession of my property by virtue of that settlement; and yet, having obtained the benefit of the compromise on my part, I insist that the Government shall recognize my repudiation of the other part of the contract that was entered into."

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there is any difficulty in getting to a correct conclusion in relation to this matter. I think the facts as well as the justice of the matter and the law of the case are too plain for debate. We find that under the act of April 30, 1864, there was an assessment of this tobacco. There was a subsequent law, taking effect April 1, 1865, which increased the assessment upon tobacco. The first assessment surely was according to law. The tax was paid and the obligation of the individual was discharged from the operation of the law. The subsequent law could not react upon the tax that existed before that; and the subsequent assessment being retroactive and illegal was not entitled to take the property or require the payment of an additional tax. Therefore the conclusion is irresistible that the tax was illegal.

Then the second proposition presents itself: shall the Government hold on to the illegal gain of which it has possessed itself through the illegal act of one of its officials? So far as the presentation of the question is concerned, every one would be bound to say that the Government would have no right to hold on to it unless it did so by some principle of law or by some concession of the individual himself. And in order to protect the Government it is insisted that the individual entered into a compromise with the Government by which he relinquished his right to a restitution of this tax.

Now, what are the facts in relation to that matter? In the first place, the tax was paid under protest. In the second place, the Government had made seizure of his property, and he was called upon to act under those circumstances. Now, is that a fair compromise in law? I maintain that there is not a court in the country that would sustain it as a compromise in fact, because that involves the ingredient of a free, voluntary, and uncoerced consent to the same thing by both contracting parties.

Mr. SAMFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. SAMFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this arrangement was coerced out of Mr. Bronson, in order that his property should be released by the Government?

Mr. BRIGHT. I will explain.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then another question in that same connection. How was Mr. Calvin Bronson induced to surrender his claim against the Government, in order to get the Government to release the property of his brother, David Bronson, to whom he had sold this tobacco?

Mr. BRIGHT. I will answer the gentleman (to break the thread of my argument) that there was an investigation of the facts in relation to the question of fraud and the charge that was made against this individual, and the matter was determined in favor of the claimant, who now comes before Congress asking for relief.

Mr. SAMFORD. No, sir; the decision was in favor of his brother.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not understand the report of the committee in that way. I do not understand in that way the report of the commission which was appointed by the Government to ascertain the facts. But I will proceed with the argument that I was making in relation to the facts of the compromise. I maintain that there was no valid compromise made between the Government and this individual.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. SAPP. Is it not true that this tax was paid under protest by the parties at the time?

Mr. BRIGHT. That is what I have stated, that it was paid under protest, and that fact enters as one of the ingredients of the compromise. The party understood that it was an illegal payment that he had made. The Government had seized upon his property.

Now, if I can have the attention of the committee for a few moments, without being further interrupted, I think I can demonstrate upon well-established principles of law that this claimant is entitled to relief. I maintain that there was no compromise cutting him off from presenting his claim to the Congress of the United States. Why so? Simply because according to all the principles of law it was a coerced and involuntary promise, if you see proper to call it by that name. Here was the power and the principle of the vis major, of a superior force, which brought the individual to the feet of power. And in order that he might secure the greater right he surrendered for the time being the right that he might present in another form and under different circumstances.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. How happens it that this man Calvin Bronson was brought under what you are pleased to call the vis major, when we consider the fact——

Mr. BRIGHT. Ask your question and I will try to answer it, but do not make an argument.

Mr. BAKER. By virtue of the fact that the next year Calvin Bronson sold his property, and thereupon the Government seized it as being transferred under a fraudulent sale. Now, how happens it that Bronson, having sold his property to his brother, was brought under the vis major, as you term it?

Mr. BRIGHT. In answer to that question, if everything assumed by the Representative from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] be true——

Mr. BAKER. The report says so.

Mr. BRIGHT. If it be true, as assumed by the gentleman or as shown by the report, and the tax was not collected under a law which authorized the collection of a tax, then it would have been illegal upon the part of the Government under any circumstances of the case. The Government is not to be permitted to shelter itself in a wrong. Whether the property belonged to the one or belonged to the other, it would be a false issue upon the part of the Government and a begging of the question, in order to shelter itself against the consequences of an illegal act. There is nothing that can purge this Government of the illegal act, as must be admitted, unless there is something voluntary upon the part of the party claiming to be wronged which releases the Government.

I find nothing of that sort in this case. I find that the Government has in its Treasury money which does not belong to it; I find the Government here convicted of extortion practiced upon one of its citizens; and I maintain that the Government has no right to protect itself from reimbursement under a legal technicality and quibble. Upon any ground, it is wrong—wrong in morals, wrong in law, and wrong as a precedent. The superior power ought not to avail itself of its mere power in order to oppress and rob one of its citizens. Surely it has power enough to collect its revenues, to levy its tributes, without overleaping the law which authorizes the collection of such revenues. I maintain that the Government is bound to make restitution in this case—whether to one or the other of these individuals, let Congress determine, if there is any election to be made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask the attention of the committee to one feature of this case. I perfectly agree with my friend from Indiana that where a compromise recognized under the law has been made in accordance with the law a party to that compromise has no redress, and probably no right to redress. But the compromise clause of the internal-revenue laws refers to cases where there has been a violation of the law, and where the Department under its power of compromise agrees to take less than the whole amount of the penalty. When such a compromise has been made and a portion of the money paid, which the Government consents to be satisfied with, although it could have enforced the payment of more, that compromise is of course binding; and it would be an act of exceedingly bad faith for a party under such circumstances to come here and say, "I ought not to have had anything put upon me in the way of penalty, and I want you to pay it all back," although perhaps there might even be a case where we ought to make repayment if our officers had made a mistake and done wrong.

But the spirit of the compromise provision of the internal-revenue laws is such as I have described. This is not a case coming under that provision at all. Here the law imposed an increased internal-revenue tax of ten cents a pound on tobacco, to take effect on the 1st day of April, 1865. This party, being a manufacturer at Toledo, Ohio, manufactured during the month of March a large amount of tobacco, and paid upon it a tax of twenty-five cents a pound, as required by law. Some weeks after that payment the question arose in the minds of officers of the Government whether that tobacco was not manufactured later than the date alleged, and whether the manufacturer ought not to have paid the additional ten cents a pound. Resolving all doubts in favor of the Treasury, they assessed upon him the additional tax of ten cents per pound, amounting in the aggregate to $11,211. He protested that he had paid the tax fully and properly; that the tobacco was manufactured before the law went into effect; that he had paid the full amount of the tax as required by law. But the officers of the Government, having the power in their hands, in order to force matters, seized a large quantity of his manufactured tobacco, made at a later date, on the claim that he had sold it to his brother in a pretended sale for the purpose of getting his property in such a position that the Government could not have recourse to it for the collection of the tax.

Now the man was in this situation: the Government had illegally commanded him to pay $11,211, and had seized a large amount of his property, which it held. It is true you may call it his brother's property, but if the claim of the Government was just, of course his brother can come back on him and make him pay all that the brother would lose by the assessment of this additional tax. So that in reality, so far as this question is concerned, this was his own property. This man was in such a situation that he must be deprived of the use of his property to a very large amount, or, to have it released, must pay this tax under protest. He says: "I will pay this unjust and illegal assessment, will pay it under protest, if you will give me back this other property." Paying the money under protest, he reserved his right to appeal. He did appeal, and after a full investigation the Internal Revenue Department decided that there was no fraud on his part, that the property ought not to have been seized, and that the additional assessment of ten cents per pound, making $11,000, was itself improper and illegal.

When that report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, who ordinarily would simply have issued his warrant to pay back the $11,000, the Secretary was confronted with the papers which were drawn in the former compromise. The law very properly forbids the Treasury Department to pay back any money in a case where a compromise has been made. The Secretary of the Treasury says, "I am not technically justified in drawing my warrant for the payment of this man, although I agree with the Internal Revenue Department that the seizure and the additional assessment were improper; but technically I cannot cure the injustice."

Under these circumstances nothing remained to this citizen but to come here for relief. In all cases of this kind we are a court of equity. Every pension bill coming before us is a bill in equity; for if the law technically gave the soldier a pension he could go to the office of the Commissioner and get his money without asking us to pass a special act. He comes here to get equity, because the letter of the law does not give him what his real rights demand. In the same way this claimant comes here saying that the Government improperly seized this property, which we admit; he says, and we admit, that the Government improperly levied and collected from him $11,211, which we hold in the Treasury. It is his money; it never was ours; the law never gave it to us; but an overzealous though perhaps a very industrious and proper officer, thinking that he would resolve all doubts in favor of the Treasury, collected the money and put it into the Treasury.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it would be wise for the House to pass a bill setting aside a compromise where the committee reporting the bill do not state the nature of the compromise or the grounds upon which it was inequitable?

Mr. GARFIELD. Very likely there ought to have been a fuller statement; and it might not be wise to make payment if we did not happen to know that this case was before the Committee of Ways and Means in the last Congress, and a bill was then unanimously reported in favor of this claimant. It was again before the committee at the last session of this Congress, and a second unanimous report was made in favor of the claimant.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to put a question to the gentleman from Ohio, in order that I may get exactly at the facts in this case. Now, is it the fact that the factory and tobacco were seized and held because this party declined to pay the extra ten cents?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON. Or because of some other offense he had committed the year before.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to know because I think the report is singularly unfortunate in its statement in this regard.

Mr. GARFIELD. The two were not necessarily connected, except that the seizure was of property belonging to the same person. He had those two irons in the fire, as it were, at once. One claim was to get back an improper assessment of money which he had been called upon to pay, and the other was to get back his property which had been improperly seized. These officers said to him, "We have got you again." He replied, "I will pay this unjust tax under protest if you will give me back my property." They gave him back his property under this protest on his part. But investigations by the proper officers of the internal revenue show, first, that the seizure of his property was improper in the one case, and, secondly, that the additional assessment of tax was improper and illegal in the other. We are here now to right the remaining wrong, and we should do it.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, as I reported this bill in the last Congress, and as it has been reported at this Congress by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] who is now absent, I think it well I should make a remark or two in relation to it. As has been well said by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] the report from the Committee of Ways and Means in both instances was unanimous. But leaving that out of view, sir, the case stands thus: It is admitted now by the Treasury Department that under the law the ministerial officers of the Government had no right to collect this $11,000 from this man. It is his property that the Government has no right to. It was wrong to take it from him. That is admitted.

Pending the claim for the $11,000, they seized his property upon an allegation that he had fraudulently sold it to another party in order to avoid the payment of the increased tax. That was another claim entirely; but this very vigorous and conscientious officer of the Internal Revenue Department wanted to run the two claims against him together in order to be certain of getting one of them. He said: "We will hold your property now for fraudulent conveyance to avoid the payment of the increased tax, and we will hold you for $11,000 of tax on the other tobacco." He paid the $11,000 of tax on the tobacco, upon the condition they should let him have his tobacco factory back again, together with the other tobacco, as he said they were breaking up his business by holding on to his property. The Government officers took the $11,000 and let him have his property back in order that he might go on with his business.

He then asked that a commission should be sent from the Treasury Department to inquire into the alleged fraudulent sale of his property. The report of that commission is quoted in the report of the Committee of Ways and Means which has just been read. The officers of the Treasury on that commission state there was no ground for the seizure of the property, because there had been no fraudulent sale. Then examination was made as to whether the additional tax of ten cents was due, and they likewise reported that no such tax was due. So, sir, on both of these claims by reason of which the Government had seized this property, they reported, in the first place, that the seizure on the ground of a fraudulent sale of the property was unjust, and they also reported that the claim made by the Government for an additional tax was likewise unlawful and unjust. But the man, in order to get his property back, had paid the amount of the unjust claim into the Treasury. Now, in God's name, are we going to hold property we have obtained by duress of the citizen, which property does not belong to us? That is the question.

I have no particular interest in this matter. It comes from the State of Ohio, and we all know that Ohio gets generally what it wants. [Laughter.] Why, sir, my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has recently secured not so much what he wished for himself as what he richly merited from his party. [Applause.]

All I mean to say now is that here is an humble citizen of Ohio who comes to this great Government and says: "You have got $11,000 of my money which you are not entitled to and which you admit does not belong to you, and, for God's sake, I ask you to give it back to me." Why should we higgle as to whether we shall give it back or not? I hope there will be no such question before this committee.

I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EXPERT SERVICES, METRIC SYSTEM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered the Forty-fifth Congress.

The bill, which was read, provides that the sum of $350 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the bills of June 18 and June 28, 1878, for expert services rendered by William Wheeler Hubbell to the Forty-fifth Congress, respecting the application of the system of metric weights and measures.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PAY OF EX-EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, and George T. Rogers.

The bill, which was read, provides that the sum of $2,852.43 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States to pay the claims hereinafter named:

To John N. Reed, $1,215.77.
To A. D. Anderson, $534.
To John A. Dugan, $756.
To E. T. Keightley, $166.66
To George T. Rogers, $180.

All of the said claims being for services rendered by the claimants to the House of Representatives during the Forty-fifth Congress. And that, whenever the said amount is available, the Clerk of the House of Representatives pay out the said amounts to said claimants respectively.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman who reports this bill to state how it happens that these sums of money are due to these parties and remain unpaid; whether they performed the services stated as the result of an appointment, or performed them without appointment? I would like to know how this claim comes before the House.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, briefly stated, the circumstances out of which these claims grow are as follows: all of these claimants, I believe, or perhaps with one exception, had been appointed to positions by the late Doorkeeper of the House, and had acted in the capacity of messengers for committees.

It is in the recollection of perhaps almost every member of this body, all who were members of the Forty-fifth Congress, that trouble arose in reference to excessive appointments made by the Doorkeeper, and a number of removals followed as a result of the discovery that more appointments had been made to positions than the law warranted. It was under these circumstances that the men enumerated in this bill were appointed by the chairmen of the various committees mentioned in the report which accompanies the bill, and performed services for these different committees.

I am very frank in making the statement, sir, that the Committee of Claims have not been able to find in their examinations of the facts bearing on this case any direct authority on the part of this House to the chairmen of the various committees to make the appointments in question. And the committee, in presenting the report accompanying this bill, have been very careful not to state that a valid legal claim exists on the part of these claimants for the amount they ask in consideration of the services rendered. But the committee do say that they believe, from all the facts and the testimony before them, that the services were actually rendered in good faith by the claimants by the express request of the chairmen of the several committees, and, as I have said, that the services were valuable, and that the committees, and therefore the House itself, received the full benefit of these services. Hence the committee are of the opinion, and so report to the House, that a just and equitable claim exists on the part of all these claimants for the amount specified in the bill.

This in brief covers the facts of the case.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that the report be read.

The report is as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the petition of certain employés of the House of Representatives (including John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, and George T. Rogers) for compensation for services alleged to have been rendered, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

1. CLAIM OF JOHN N. REED.

The claimant was, on November 1, 1877, appointed as a messenger to the House of Representatives by the then Doorkeeper, was sworn as such messenger, and assigned to duty. In December following he was assigned as messenger and laborer to the room of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. On or about January 16, 1878, the claimant was dropped from the rolls of the Doorkeeper by reason of the existence of more names on the roll of that officer than was allowed by rule. The claimant, at the time of so being dropped from the roll, was informed that the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad wished him to continue as messenger and laborer to that committee. The committee told the claimant to continue his services until some one was appointed by the Doorkeeper to take his place.

From that time claimant acted as the sole messenger and attendant upon said committee down to March 4, 1879. In this connection your committee desire to append the following, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad for the Forty-fifth Congress:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
"Washington, D. C., February 20, 1879.

"DEAR SIR: John N. Reed was appointed a messenger by Mr. Polk, November 1, 1877. He was assigned to the room of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad December 1, 1877. No other messenger, laborer, or page has waited upon that committee since. Mr. Reed has discharged every duty. Mr. Reed was assured that his name would be placed upon the regular roll, but was dropped January 15, 1878. The Committee on the Pacific Railroad were very constantly in session during the last session. Many questions of great importance were discussed, large crowds of people, and many attorneys, attending its sessions throughout the session of Congress. Some one had to attend the committee, not only for the purpose of making and keeping up fires, cleaning the room, attending to the lights, &c., but in carrying messages. Mr. Reed was constant in his attendance and discharge of all these duties, and no one could have been more diligent in the discharge of every service pertaining to his duty. Mr. Reed has also discharged, at the present session, the duties of the same position to Mr. Hewitt's committee, "on the cause of depression in labor," which held its meetings in the room of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

"The undersigned members of the committee feel that Mr. Reed should be paid, more especially as the Committee of Accounts have examined into the question and recommend the same.

"Respectfully submitted.

"J. B. ELAM.
"NATHAN COLE.
"W. W. RICE.
"J. W. THROCKMORTON.
"L. B. CASWELL.
"JNO. F. HOUSE.
"J. K. LUTTRELL.
"H. W. BLAIR.
"JAS. R. CHALMERS.
"G. M. LANDERS.

"Messrs. MORRISON and O'NEILL are not present; I believe they would join in the recommendation.

"J. W. THROCKMORTON.

"Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
"Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

"My position as clerk of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad places me in possession of all facts connected with the services rendered by John N. Reed to said committee during the Forty-fifth Congress, and I certify that he punctually discharged all the duties of messenger, laborer, and page from December 1, 1877, to March 4, 1879; that such services were absolutely indispensable, and that no other person to my knowledge was ever assigned to the performance of them, and that said Reed continued his attendance on the committee with the tacit approbation of its members and a general assurance that he should be paid customary wages.

"THOMAS S. BELL,
"Clerk Committee on the Pacific Railroad."

The claimant asks the payment of $1,275.56 for his services so rendered. The Committee of Accounts of the Forty-fifth Congress examined the claim and reported it with a favorable recommendation to the Committee on Appropriations, there being no fund at the disposal of the former committee from which the amount could be paid. The Forty-fifth Congress adjourned before final action could be had upon the matter. Your committee think the claim of Mr. Reed a just and equitable one, and therefore report it back with favorable recommendation.

2. CLAIM OF A. D. ANDERSON.

The services of this claimant, as clerk, were engaged by the House Committee on Mississippi Levees, of the Forty-fifth Congress, to assist them in getting together statistics for and in the preparation of a valuable and elaborate report in connection with the navigation, tonnage, and capacities of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, which was thereafter submitted to the House. These services extended over a period of three months, namely, February, March, and April, 1878, the committee having no other clerk to aid them in their labors. The services are reported by the chairman of that committee to have been rendered, and to have been reasonably worth the sum of $6 per day. In this connection, your committee desire to reproduce the report and statement of the clerk of the Committee of Accounts:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
"Washington, D. C., June 5, 1879.

"To whom it may concern:

"On the journal of the Committee of Accounts of the Forty-fifth Congress, of Wednesday, June 12, 1878, there is the following record:

"After a statement by Mr. YOUNG and Mr. ROBERTSON, of the Committee on Mississippi Levees, concerning the valuable clerical services which that committee had received from Mr. A. D. Anderson, it was agreed that Mr. Robertson should offer an amendment to the sundry civil bill providing for the payment of Mr. Anderson as clerk to the committee for February, March, and April, 1878, and that this committee (of Accounts) would recommend its adoption.

"The amount allowed was $534; 89 days, at $6.

"The Committee of Accounts for the Forty-sixth Congress, to whom this claim was referred on the 18th of April ultimo, considering that they had no jurisdiction thereof, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

"Very respectfully,

"JAMES A. DIFFENBAUGH,
"Clerk to Committee of Accounts, House of Representatives,
"Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses."

Your committee regard the claim, amounting to $534, as being just and equitable, and therefore report it back with favorable recommendation.

3. CLAIM OF E. T. KEIGHTLEY.

This claim is for services rendered by the claimant to the Committee of Accounts of the Forty-fifth Congress. Mr. Keightley had, before the rendition of the services in question, acted as an assistant doorkeeper, at a salary of $2,000 per year. After the termination of his services in this connection, he was employed by the Committee of Accounts of the Forty-fifth Congress. The chairman of that committee certifies: "In view of the fact that Mr. Keightley was in almost constant attendance on the committee, furnishing evidence and giving assistance in connection with the negotiation and adjustment of various accounts of the late Doorkeeper, the Committee of Accounts refer the resolution" (providing for this payment of the claim for one month's services, at the rate of $2,000 per year) "to the Committee on Appropriations, with a favorable recommendation."

The claim amounts to $166.66. Your committee refer back the claim with favorable recommendation.

4. CLAIM OF JOHN A. DUGAN.

The claimant acted as the sole and only clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department of the Forty-fifth Congress for a period extending from November 1, 1877, to March 6, 1878, one hundred and twenty-six days. The claim in its entirety is for $756, and is reported as being correct by the chairman of the committee. The claim was examined by the Committee of Accounts of the Forty-fifth Congress, and the following certificate given:

"This claim is undoubtedly correct, and should be paid. There is not any fund from which it can be paid by the Committee of Accounts.

"CHAS. B. ROBERTS,
"Chairman Committee of Accounts."

It was afterward brought before the Committee on Appropriations, but was mislaid in some manner while before that committee, and was never acted upon. Your committee report back the claim with a favorable recommendation.

5. CLAIM OF GEORGE T. ROGERS.

The claim of this claimant is based upon the following facts:

During the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department were engaged in an investigation of charges against George F. Seward. The work of the committee in connection with these charges was not concluded on the adjournment of that Congress, and leave was granted for the committee to sit during recess.

The committee employed the services of the claimant to aid them in this work during recess, and the services extended over the month of November, 1878.

The committee report the services to have been necessary and of the value of the amount charged, $180. The claim was examined by the House Committee of Accounts of the Forty-fifth Congress, and favorably reported. That Congress, however, adjourned before definite action could be had upon the matter.

Your committee think the claim an equitable one, and, therefore, report it back with favorable recommendation.

In conclusion, your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, making provision for the payment of the foregoing claims.

Mr. BRIGHT (pending the reading of the above report) said: Mr. Chairman, I think this case or claim of John N. Reed which has been read is perhaps a fair sample of the others. The same principle is involved, I conceive, in all of the others, in which case it is scarcely necessary that the remainder of the report should be read. I therefore move to dispense with the further reading of the report.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move, at the end of line 15, to insert the following words: "to Benjamin P. Gaines, the sum of $90."

I will state, Mr. Chairman, that this places the two clerks of the committee referred to upon exactly the same footing, and is in accordance with the recommendation of the committee. But the committee could not pay, owing to the fact that the House was not in session at the time, except for one-half of the month, and this allows Mr. Gaines for the other half, and places him on the same footing with Mr. Rogers.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FORT. I desire also to offer an amendment to the bill. It is to pay Mr. Charles Ford the sum of $87 for services performed as an attendant at the door during the administration of the former Doorkeeper, Mr. Polk. The bill is now before the Committee of Claims, but may not be reached for months, and perhaps not this session, so I desire to incorporate the claim in this bill. There is no question about the services of this young man, which he performed in the galleries of the Hall, and for which he was not paid, for the reason that his name was left off the roll at the time the former Doorkeeper had some trouble with his accounts, and before our present Doorkeeper took charge of the roll. He did his work faithfully and well and ought to be paid. There is no question at all about his having performed the service and earned the money, but he never received the money and it should be paid. He is a poor boy, not now here, is going to school, and needs his money. I may say that I have no special interest in the matter, of course, except to see justice done a worthy employé of this House. The appointment of this young man was made by the former Doorkeeper—not of this side of the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. By what authority was he employed?

Mr. FORT. He was on the regular roll by appointment of the former Doorkeeper, Mr. Polk.

Mr. BRIGHT. What evidence is there as to the length of his service and the value of it?

Mr. FORT. I have no evidence here to present except that of every member who served in the last Congress. Every member's wife who entered the gallery knows that he was there performing the service and performed it well.

Mr. BRIGHT. How do you arrive at the amount proposed?

Mr. FORT. The sum of $87 is the balance he would be entitled to for services, and is for time for which he received no compensation. If one of the reading clerks of this House [Mr. Pettit] was permitted to make a statement he could inform the House very clearly that this doorkeeper was entitled to his money. If Mr. BLACKBURN or Mr. MCKENZIE, of Kentucky, were present they could state that this young man was employed and had not been paid; but I regret that they are both absent from the Hall at this time.

The amendment of Mr. FORT was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that the title be amended so as to include the additional names.

The title was amended; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

G. V. HEBB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 97) to pay G. V. Hebb $55, reported by Mr. SAMFORD from the Committee of Claims.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, instructed to pay George V. Hebb the sum of $55, balance due him as an employé of the House during the Forty-fifth Congress.

For the payment of said claim the sum of $55 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George V. Hebb for compensation for services rendered as doorkeeper during the Forty-fifth Congress, respectfully report:

That said committee have had the same under consideration, and find that the petitioner served for the time he states as an employé of the House, and is entitled to the sum of $55 in full payment of balance due him.

Wherefore your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying resolution.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will state that the claim of Mr. Hebb goes on all fours with the claims of the gentlemen embraced in the bill last considered.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ROBERT ERWIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 385) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin," reported by Mr. LAPHAM from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Court of Claims is hereby empowered and directed to hear and determine the claims of Robert Erwin, for property taken from him by the military authorities of the United States, mentioned in the act of which this is amendatory, notwithstanding any former adjudication of said court; and if said court shall find from the evidence that the said Erwin was the owner of the said property, or any part thereof, by him claimed, at the time the same was seized as aforesaid, then said court shall ascertain and determine the amount of the proceeds of such property remaining in the Treasury of the United States, and subject to its judgment, under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property," &c. After the amount of such proceeds shall have been so ascertained by the court in either case, said court shall proceed to distribute the amount between the said Erwin and such of his creditors in bankruptcy as shall come in, and after such reasonable notice of the pendency of this suit to the creditors of said Erwin and of said Erwin & Hardee, who proved their claims in said bankruptcy proceedings, as the court shall order, to be personally served upon them, and as said court may decide are equitably and justly entitled to participate; and in making such distribution, the said court shall proceed as a court of equity, and shall be governed, both as to the law and evidence, by the rules and laws governing proceedings in equity in the circuit courts of the United States, and shall render judgment in favor of said Erwin, and of such of his creditors in bankruptcy, for such sum as they may be entitled to receive respectively according to law and equity, and to the provisions of this act and of the act of which this is amendatory: Provided, That the parties shall have the same right to appeal as in other cases in said Court of Claims; but the proceedings on appeal shall be conducted as in appeals in equity causes from the circuit courts of the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 385) for the relief of Robert Erwin, respectfully submit the following report:

The evidence submitted to your committee in relation to the claims of Robert Erwin shows the following facts:

On the 5th day of February, 1877, an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin" became a law. That act authorized the Court of Claims to take jurisdiction, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, commonly called the "captured and abandoned property act," of the claims of Robert Erwin for property alleged to have been taken from him. The act of February 5, 1877, was passed after an examination of all the facts and circumstances relating to the claims, and a report of the same from this committee. This committee were unanimously of the opinion that the claimant was entitled to the relief prayed for, and that the bill ought to pass, on the ground of accident and mistake of his agent or attorney in not presenting his petition to the Court of Claims within the time limited by law; the failure to present his petition being without fault or neglect on the part of the claimant. In pursuance of the authority of that statute, the claimant presented his claim to the Court of Claims, and testimony was taken, and one of the causes (there being two of them) was heard. But in consequence of complications in the case arising from the fact that the firm of Erwin & Hardee, of which the claimant was a member, were adjudicated bankrupts by the United States district court for the southern district of the State of Georgia, the Court of Claims dismissed the petition of the claimant.

On the 31st day of December, 1868, the said firm of Erwin & Hardee filed their petition in bankruptcy in that court, and were, on the 15th day of January, 1869, adjudicated bankrupts. Robert Erwin was discharged as a bankrupt on the 12th day of January, 1870. In the schedules of property filed with their petition, the individual claims of Robert Erwin, arising from the seizure and sale of the property mentioned in the proceedings in this case, were included. An assignee was regularly appointed in the case on the 5th day of February, 1869, and he proceeded to wind up the affairs of the estate. Afterward, and in May, 1872, a special application was made to the court by the said assignee for permission to sell some uncollectible assets remaining on hand. Among those assets so held were the claims against the United States, which are the subject-matter of this petition.

At that date, and at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy, these claims were barred by limitations prescribed by law. Leave was granted by the court to make the sale, but the assignee in making the sale did not proceed according to the manner prescribed by the order of the court, and from this fact the difficulties arose in the Court of Claims.

The sale by the order of the court was required to be made at public auction, but the sale was made by the assignee, after consultation with and upon the advice of the creditors, at private sale to Erwin, the claimant. On the 22d day of November, 1872, the petitioner made an offer, in writing, to the assignee for the assets so remaining unsold, which was submitted to all the creditors except one, and upon their advice and consent the proposition of the petitioner was accepted on the 7th day of December, 1872, and the money—$3,100—was by him paid over to the assignee.

At the time of the sale to Erwin the assignee delivered to him the books of account, papers, &c., relating to the matters and things sold.

The money paid by the petitioner for these assets was subsequently divided by the assignee and the register in bankruptcy among the creditors, and each one of them received his pro rata share thereof.

All of the creditors except perhaps two or three knew that the claims for the property in question were included, and were intended to be included, in this sale to Erwin, and received the money with that knowledge.

The Court of Claims, after the case had been argued, decided that Erwin, in consequence of the bankruptcy proceedings, was not entitled to recover the proceeds of the property remaining in the Treasury, and further held that he did not become reinvested with his title to the proceeds of the property in the Treasury by virtue of the sale made to him by the assignee in bankruptcy.

Pending the proceedings in that court, the original assignee, who made the sale and transfer to Erwin, resigned his office, and another assignee was appointed in his stead. This new assignee appeared in the Court of Claims and made claim to the proceeds of the property by virtue of his office as assignee in bankruptcy of Erwin & Hardee. In this action he appears to have been supported, and is still supported, by at least one, if not more, of the creditors of the estate, notwithstanding the sale to Erwin. The Court of Claims refused to entertain his petition, and thus the case stands so far as the Court of Claims is concerned.

The petitioner, soon after the decision of the court, presented his petition to this House, praying an amendment to the original act passed for his relief.

Your committee are of the opinion that whatever sums of money may be in the Treasury arising from the sale of the property of Robert Erwin should not be paid to the assignee in bankruptcy, because to pay these claims to him and permit the bankruptcy court to distribute the fund according to the equities existing between Erwin and his creditors would involve an expense in fees and commissions of several thousand dollars. This expenditure, in the opinion of your committee, is unnecessary. The Court of Claims has now before it nearly all of the testimony in the cases, and it will involve no material increase in the expense to authorize and direct that court to distribute the fund which may be ascertained to be in the Treasury, and the Court of Claims is just as competent to make such distribution, according to equity and justice in view of all the circumstances and acts of the parties in the case, as any other court; and, therefore, for the purpose of preserving the fund intact and reducing the expenses and saving the extraordinary costs of a bankruptcy proceeding, your committee recommend the accompanying bill, and that the same do pass.

Mr. MCMAHON. Before this bill passes I desire to call the attention of the House to the litigation that took place in regard to this claim, and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon it, which is found in 97 U. S. Reports S. C., p. 392. I read the following from the decision of the Supreme Court:

Upon the second point, that the claim in controversy was purchased by the appellant at the private sale of the assignee, we think the evidence insufficient. It appears from the copy of the schedules of the bankrupts' property, prepared by the register for the use of the assignee, that the sheet showing the claim against the United States for three hundred and eighty-two bales of cotton had, in some unexplained way, been removed, so that he had no knowledge of the existence of the claim when he sold the remaining assets to the appellant. The receipt given by him shows that he considered that he was selling the assets of the firm only, and not of either of the separate partners. We are clear that it was not his intention to sell the claim against the Government. There was a want of concurrence of minds to any such transaction, which was essential to give it validity.

I would ask the gentleman from New York whether after this party had prosecuted his claim against the United States Government in the court of last resort, and had there had his claim denied because of some doubtful transaction in the case, we ought now to give him a second chance.

Mr. LAPHAM. I will answer the gentleman from Ohio by saying it appears clearly in this case that all the creditors of this firm except one, with full knowledge that this claim was embraced in the sale to the claimant, accepted their division of the amount paid by him, and gave their discharges in full. The bill, as it originally came to the committee, was amended by the committee for the express purpose of providing for the only creditor who did not thus assent and receive his share of the money, a Mr. McBurney, who appeared in person before the committee. As thus amended, the bill protects every man who has any right to question the right of the claimant to this fund. The Court of Claims was authorized by the act to which this is supplementary, notwithstanding the decision to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] refers, to adjudicate upon this claim, and would have awarded to the claimant the amount of the money which is conceded to be in the Treasury, belonging to some one, but for the fact of the proceedings in bankruptcy and the difficulty arising out of the rights of the assignee in bankruptcy to this fund. And the object of this amendment simply is to enable the Court of Claims, which is now possessed of all the facts in this case, to complete the investigation and do complete justice between the creditors of this firm.

Now, if the gentleman from Ohio is disposed to antagonize this bill upon the facts here disclosed, I have only to make this suggestion: This is a bill in which Hon. Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, is very deeply interested. He has sent me a postal card stating that he is unable by reason of indisposition to be here to-day, and that if there is any antagonism to this bill he prefers to have it stand over without prejudice until he can have an opportunity to be heard; but I trust there will be no opposition to the bill. It was the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-fifth Congress, it is the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee now, and as such it seems to me that it should incur no opposition whatever.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

C. R. FAULKNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to pay C. R. Faulkner $32.50, in full for services as messenger in the Forty-fifth Congress, reported from the Committee of Claims by Mr. BARBER.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, instructed to pay C. R. Faulkner the sum of $32.50, balance due him as an employé of the House during the Forty-fifth Congress. For the payment of said claim the sum of $32.50 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the claim of C. R. Faulkner for services as a messenger of the House of Representatives during the Forty-fifth Congress, respectfully report:

That said committee have had the same under consideration, and find that the petitioner served from February 1 to February 13, 1878, as an employé of the House, and is entitled to the sum of $32.50 therefor in full payment of the balance due him.

Wherefore your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying resolution.

Mr. BARBER. I move that this joint resolution be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CATHARINE I. GILLIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2377) for the relief of Catharine I. Gillis; reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by Mr. KNOTT.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the captured and abandoned property fund, the sum of $14,582.04 to Catharine I. Gillis, of New York, in full satisfaction of the claim of the estate of Thomas H. Gillis, deceased, (of which she is administratrix,) for the proceeds of the sale of one hundred and three bales of upland cotton and five bales of sea-island cotton, seized and sold by the authorities of the United States, and the net proceeds thereof covered into the Treasury of the United States; which said claim was sold and assigned to said Thomas H. Gillis in his life-time by John H. Ryan, the owner thereof.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Catharine I. Gillis, of New York, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

A statement of the facts of the case will be conveniently presented in the language of the Court of Claims:

"FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

"This case having been heard before the Court of Claims, the court, upon the evidence, finds the facts to be as follows:

"1. In March, A. D. 1865, one John H. Ryan, of Charleston, South Carolina, was the owner of one hundred and three bales of upland cotton and five bales of sea-island cotton, which were during that month seized at said Charleston by military officers of the United States, turned over to the agents of the Treasury Department, transported to New York, and there sold, and the net proceeds thereof covered into the United States Treasury, amounting to the sum of $130.33 per bale for the upland cotton and $231.61 per bale for the sea-island cotton.

"2. Some time in October or November, A. D. 1866, said Ryan transferred the legal title to his claim against the United States for the proceeds of said cotton so covered into the Treasury to Thomas H. Gillis, of New York, and assented to the bringing of this action thereon in the name of said Gillis.

"3. After the institution of this action, said Thomas H. died, and Catharine I. Gillis was duly appointed administratrix on his estate by the surrogate court of the county and State of New York, on the 16th day of July, A. D. 1868, and has since been admitted by the court to prosecute this suit as such administratrix.

"4. The transfer of the claim, as set forth in the second finding, was made through one Van Ness, at New York, under a power of attorney from said Ryan, and contract, the full terms of which have not been proved. But it appears that said Ryan (since deceased) assented to and affirmed said transfer. Subsequently, a controversy arose between the present claimant and the administrator of said Ryan as to an equitable interest, set up by said administrator, in some portion of the money which might be recovered. Since this action was instituted a compromise has been made between said claimant and said Ryan's administrator, by which it is agreed that a certain part (but how much it does not appear) of the amount recovered shall be paid over to said administrator by the claimant's attorney of record.

"Conclusion of law.—The claimant is entitled to recover $13,423.99 as the proceeds of one hundred and three bales of upland cotton, and $1,158.05 as the proceeds of five bales of sea-island cotton; in all, the sum of $14,582.04."

On the 26th of March, A. D. 1877, the Court of Claims rendered judgment for the claimant, as follows:

"The court, upon due consideration of the premises, find in favor of the claimant, and do order, adjudge, and decree that the said Catharine I. Gillis, administratrix of Thomas H. Gillis, deceased, do have and recover of and from the United States the net proceeds of one hundred and three bales of upland cotton, amounting to $13,423.99, and the net proceeds of five bales of sea-island cotton, amounting to $1,158.05, making in the aggregate the sum of $14,582.04.

"By the court."

Upon appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the Court of Claims upon the following grounds, which are stated in the words of the court:

"If we are right in the opinion we have expressed, that claims against the United States cannot be assigned so as to enable the assignee to bring suit in his own name in the Court of Claims, it is enough for the present case. But there is another reason why claims for the proceeds of captured and abandoned property cannot be assigned so as to give the assignee a standing in that court. It is found in the act giving the court jurisdiction of such claims. Not every person is permitted to sue for such proceeds. The act declares that "any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims, and on proof to the satisfaction of the court of his ownership of said property, &c., receive the residue of such proceeds." It is thus plain that only he who can claim as an owner of the property captured or abandoned, and who can prove such ownership, is permitted to sue and recover. The assignee of a claim for the proceeds is not such an owner of the property captured. That the ownership claimed and required to be proved is that which existed at the time of the capture is quite plain. (Carroll v. United States, 13 Wall., 153.) The owner of that into which the property has been converted is not necessarily the one who was the owner of the property itself. It is thus evident that Congress did not intend to give any assignee of the proceeds a right to sue for them. And there were very substantial reasons for withholding such a privilege.

"The judgment of the Court of Claims is reversed, and the record is remitted, with instructions to dismiss the claimant's petition."

Inasmuch as the finding of facts shows that a valid and undisputed claim exists, and that the representatives of the deceased assignor and assignee are agreed as to the distribution of the proceeds of this cotton, the committee are of the opinion that the prosecution of the action in the name of the assignee, instead of the assignor—which the Supreme Court, reversing numerous decisions of the Court of Claims, have held to be a mistake—ought not to deprive the parties in interest of their property; and they respectfully recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HURD. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. KNOTT,] I have been requested by him to make a statement of the facts in this case to the House. The original owner of the captured property involved in this case was one John H. Ryan, of Charleston, South Carolina. He assigned his claim to Thomas H. Gillis, of New York, who brought action before the Court of Claims within the time fixed by law. During the pendency of the action the plaintiff died, and the action was revived by making Catharine I. Gillis, his administratrix, the party in his stead.

The case was heard and adjudicated by the Court of Claims, the amount found due the plaintiff being fixed at the sum of $14,582.04. The cause was carried by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, which court reversed the judgment of the Court of Claims upon the ground that under the statute it was not competent for an assignee of a claim for captured property to maintain an action. That decision reversed a large number of decisions which before that time had been rendered in the Court of Claims, although it did not affect them, as the amounts of money found due under those decisions had been paid to the various claimants.

There is no dispute between the representatives of the assignor and the representatives of the assignee as to the distribution of this claim. And the Committee on the Judiciary was unanimous in the opinion that it was unjust to compel the assignee to retire from the court, and to compel the assignor to maintain an action for the recovery of a claim which had already been adjudicated upon by the court. The recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary in the bill now submitted to the House is that the amount of money thus ascertained to be due be paid directly to the administratrix of the assignee, Mrs. Gillis. It seems to me there can be no objection to this course, and I therefore move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. HURD; and upon a division there were ayes 90, noes not counted.

So it was ordered that the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

THOMAS LANGTON.

The next bill upon the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by Mr. KNOTT.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That fifty-two acres of the southeast fractional quarter of the northeast fractional quarter of section 23, in township 6 south, of range 6 east, in the county of Monroe, State of Michigan, belonging to Thomas Langton, be discharged of and from all lien, claim, or title on the part of the United States thereon and thereto, under and by virtue of the levy of a succession tax upon the estate of Alfred Potter, deceased, and the sale of the above-described land to the United States for said tax: Provided, That one-fourth of the amount of the tax assessed against said land upon the non-payment of which said land was sold, and interest thereon of 6 per cent. per annum from the day of the sale, be paid into the Treasury of the United States within ninety days from the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now move that the committee rise and report to the House.

The motion was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 62, noes 27.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the business on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House with various recommendations.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask consent to have a clerical error corrected in the amendment adopted by the House yesterday to the joint resolution of the Senate, No. 19, to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes. The error was made by referring to the line of the printed bill instead of the line of the manuscript bill. I ask consent that the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk be adopted in lieu of the amendment which was adopted by the House on yesterday.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 18 of Senate joint resolution No. 19, to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes, after the word "supplement," insert the words "including indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete said work, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $3,500;" and strike out all after the word "supplement," in line 18 of the bill, down to and including line 21.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

CALVIN BRONSON.

The first bill reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METRIC SYSTEM.

The next bill reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered the Forty-fifth Congress; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT ERWIN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 385) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin."

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MCMAHON. I desire to ask the gentleman from the Committee on the Judiciary who reported this bill [Mr. LAPHAM] whether before that committee made their report it had before it and considered the decision of the Supreme Court to which I referred when this bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not think that the attention of the Judiciary Committee was ever called to the adjudication of the Supreme Court to which the gentleman has referred. But at any rate this bill is so drawn as to permit every creditor of the firm to appear in the Court of Claims and participate according to his equitable rights in the fund. There is no possibility of danger to the rights of creditors; and none others than the creditors have any interest in the question. The bill in my opinion is so framed as to protect entirely the rights of every creditor. As I have before stated, it appears from the testimony taken by the Judiciary Committee that all the creditors except one participated in the distribution of the fund created by the purchase made by this claimant, who paid $3,100 for this claim. They received their dividends out of the proceeds thus arising.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman is mistaken about their having received a dividend out of the proceeds of the sale of this claim. It has been adjudicated by the highest legal tribunal that this claim was never sold legally, and therefore nothing ever passed to the hands of the assignee.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am aware of that; yet Mr. Erwin paid $3,100 for the claim.

Mr. McMAHON. Not for this claim but for the allotment of uncollected claims.

Mr. LAPHAM. For this and other claims; and the creditors with the knowledge that this claim was embraced in the sale received their dividends. But at any rate the bill is so drawn that every creditor will be entitled to notice and hearing in the distribution of the fund.

Mr. McMAHON. If the gentleman says he is satisfied as a lawyer that the creditors are provided for in this bill, I do not see any objection to its passage.

Mr. LAPHAM. The committee so considered.

Mr. McMAHON. But I do object to the committee reporting that this man is the owner of a claim upon a certain purchase, when it has been judicially determined that upon such purchase he acquired no title.

Mr. LAPHAM. The bill provides specifically that—

After the amount of such proceeds shall have been so ascertained by the court in either case, said court shall proceed to distribute the amount between the said Erwin and such of his creditors in bankruptcy as shall come in, and after such reasonable notice of the pendency of this suit to the creditors of said Erwin and of said Erwin & Hardee, who proved their claims in said bankruptcy proceedings, as the court shall order, to be personally served upon them, and as said court may decide are equitably and justly entitled to participate; and in making such distribution, the said court shall proceed as a court of equity, and shall be governed, both as to the law and evidence, by the rules and laws governing proceedings in equity in the circuit courts of the United States.

I think the bill amply protects the rights of all the creditors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAPHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

House joint resolutions and bill of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment and with a favorable recommendation, were severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 97) to pay G. V. Hebb $55;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to pay C. R. Faulkner $32.50, in full for services as messenger in the Forty-fifth Congress; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2377) for the relief of Catharine I. Gillis.

House bill of the following title, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment, was taken up, the amendment concurred in, and the bill, as amended, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, and George T. Rogers.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend the title of this bill by adding the names "Benjamin P. Gaines and Charles Ford."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following Senate bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole with a recommendation that they be passed, were ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States; and

A bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan.

Mr. WILLITS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 594) was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. As there are, I believe, some bills in regard to which the motion to reconsider and lay on the table was not made, I move in each of these cases to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EASTERN BAND OF NORTH CAROLINA CHEROKEES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to certain taxes on land belonging to the eastern band of North Carolina Cherokees; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MAJOR G. W. CANDEE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report relative to the bill (H. R. No. 3050) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONTINGENT FUND OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with section 193 of the Revised Statutes, a report of contingent expenses of said Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PRESCOTT for one week, on account of important business.

POSTAL REVENUE.

Mr. MONEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the honorable Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House at his earliest convenience what effect clauses 4 and 5 of section 232 of the postal laws and regulations have upon the postal revenue; and also under what section of the law classifying mail matter and regulating rates of postage thereon said regulation 232 was ordered by the Postmaster-General.

B. N. EWING.

Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3293) for the relief of B. N. Ewing, postmaster at Minier, Tazewell County, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAGE, (at three o'clock and forty-eight minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, for the abolition and repeal of the compulsory legal-tender power now given by law to United States Treasury notes—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 12, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, copies of reports of Major H. M. Robert, Corps of Engineers, of the results of surveys and examinations made under his direction for a harbor of refuge at the entrance to the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canal, and of Bayfield and Ashland Harbors, Wisconsin, and Manistique River, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, reports of the results of surveys made under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel George Thom, Corps of Engineers, of Moose-a-bec Bar, Jonesport, and Cathance River, Maine, and at the outlet of Lake Winnepesaukee; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, a letter from the Chief of Engineers and accompanying report of Captain C. J. Allen, Corps of Engineers, giving an account of the construction of the sluice-way at the Falls of Saint Anthony, and urging the importance of immediate repairs to the apron built by the United States for the preservation of the Falls; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, a letter from the Chief of Engineers and accompanying reports from Major G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, of examinations and surveys of Cowlitz River, Washington Territory, of Umpqua River, and of Alsea Harbor and Bar, Oregon, and a report from the same officer of a survey of the bar at the mouth of the Columbia River made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of June 18, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, a letter from the Chief of Engineers and an accompanying report from Captain A. Mackenzie, Corps of Engineers, of an examination and survey of Cuivre River, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of June 18, 1878, a letter from the Chief of Engineers and accompanying reports from Major William H. H. Benyaurd, Corps of Engineers, of a survey made under his direction of the falls on Red River, near Alexandria, Louisiana; and also the examinations of Black River, Arkansas, Tehula Lake, and Yalla-Busha River, Mississippi, in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the river and harbor act of June 18, 1878, a letter from the Chief of Engineers and accompanying report from Major W. P. Craighill, Corps of Engineers, of a survey made on the peninsula of Maryland and Delaware, with the view to the construction of a ship-canal connecting the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates of appropriation required, with tracings of plans, for the construction of officers' quarters at Fort Omaha, Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of the State National Bank of Boston, praying for the passage of a law to waive the statute of limitations as a bar to an action now begun against the United States to recover $60,000, the balance of $100,000 of gold certificates, due on a certain receipt. This petition relates to a very important matter, and there is the draft of a bill with it. I move that this petition and the accompanying draft of a bill be printed and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Timothy Earle, of Valley Falls, Rhode Island, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the extension of his patent for an improvement in an egg-beater; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of H. J. Gregory and 81 other citizens of Michigan, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Gull Lake to Hickory Corners, in Kalamazoo County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MAXEY. I present the petition of the Indian delegates of the Indian Territory, praying for the forfeiture of certain conditional land grants of lands of the Indians claimed by certain railroad companies. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary to be considered in connection with the joint resolution (S. R. No. 54) to forfeit certain public lands granted to aid in the construction of certain railroads and telegraphic lines.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of F. W. Peyton, administrator, &c., of James D. Morton, deceased, of Breckinridge County, Kentucky, praying compensation for a boat lost while in the service of the Government during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Percy H. Hall and 23 other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that their names may be stricken from a memorial heretofore referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the proposed amendment to the charter of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company, the petitioners having signed the memorial under a misapprehension of facts; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the memorial of A. R. Reed and others, of the town of Waldoborough, in the State of Maine, relating to what is known as the Geneva award fund, and the memorial concludes by asking Congress speedily to pass some legislation which will give to all rightful claimants upon the said fund an immediate and convenient opportunity to present their claims to some properly constituted tribunal.

I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a single moment while I invite the attention of the Judiciary Committee to as prompt and early action as may be possible upon this subject. It is one which has long invited the attention of Congress, and I believe I am fully justified in saying that if a little earlier action had been had, or if the measure of legislation to be acted on had been matured at a little earlier day in the session, so that the Senate could have considered the subject when it was not pressed by appropriation bills and other measures, which absolutely prevented a full and fair consideration of it, I think some action might have been reached before this time. It is an important question, and I ask—nay, I invoke—the Judiciary Committee of this body to give to the subject its attention as early as is practicable in view of their other duties. I have no doubt they are desirous of so doing. Its importance is so great that I have felt justified in thus inviting attention to it. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN presented the memorial of George W. Bates and 23 others, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of claims for pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of Oakes A. Ames and Oliver Ames, executors of the estate of Oakes Ames, deceased, and Lemuel Shaw and others, executors of the estate of Samuel Hooper, deceased, praying for the passage of a law reimbursing them for certain money paid into the Treasury of the United States for property illegally seized by the Government during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of William Lilley, of the city of Washington, praying the extension of his patent for an evaporating saucer for promoting the growth of house plants; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of Robert F. Bratton and 29 others, citizens and firms of Somerset County and Baltimore City, Maryland, praying for a survey of the water passage between Deal's Island and Little Deal's Island, Somerset County, Maryland, with a view to cleaning and digging out the same; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of P. A. Keller and 20 other citizens of Philadelphia, praying the passage of the joint resolution providing for the abolition and repeal of the compulsory legal-tender power now given by law to the Treasury notes of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I present the petition of Mahlon C. Frambes and others, owners of the schooner T. P. Lerned, praying compensation for the loss of that vessel in Hatteras Inlet, North Carolina, in January, 1862, while in the service of the Government. As I was personally cognizant of the circumstances attending this case, I shall do myself the honor to appear before the committee and state the facts. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of G. W. Neville, mayor of Xenia, Ohio, and others, citizens of Ohio, praying that Wilberforce University, in that State, may receive a proper proportion of the unclaimed volunteer colored soldiers' bounty; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of John Garrison and 85 other soldiers and sailors of the late war, of Casey, Illinois, praying the passage of an act giving them the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time they received their pay, with 6 per cent. interest, compounded semi-annually; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of W. J. Hoggath and 140 other Union soldiers, of Orange County, Indiana, praying for the passage of a law granting them the difference between greenbacks and gold at the time of their payment while in the Union Army; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Abner S. Pinchin and others, members of the Union Soldiers' Association, of De Kalb County, Indiana, praying to be paid the difference between greenbacks and gold at the time of their payment as soldiers during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the memorial of John Hammond and others, soldiers of the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the affidavit of John S. Corlett, and a petition numerously signed by citizens of the town of Webster, Hamilton County, Iowa, in which Mr. Corlett lives, praying that he may be granted a pension. This matter has been before the Pension Committee for some time, and has been twice favorably reported upon. I move that these papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions, to accompany the bill now before that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GROOME. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Thomas Hendrickson, widow of Major Thomas Hendrickson, praying to be granted a pension, to submit a report thereon, recommending that the claim for a pension be referred to the Commissioner of Pensions.

The report was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 46) for the relief of Frank Rinquet, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 139) granting a pension to Henry A. Armstrong, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Hannah L. Stearns, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered by her husband, Benjamin F. Stearns, in the war of 1812, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Isaac Vansant, praying an increase of pension for services rendered and injuries received in the war of 1812, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that a pension be granted to Aaron Snyder, late a private in Company A, Two hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. RANDOLPH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 8) correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 332) authorizing the appointment of William English to a second lieutenancy in the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 188) correcting the military muster-in of James G. Howard, late captain of Company E, Forty-ninth Kentucky Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, in relation to a military telegraph, and praying the construction of a line of telegraph from Fort Ellis to Fort Buford, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 317) for the relief of Captain J. B. Campbell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 517) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MAXEY. I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 159) to provide for the sale of a certain portion of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation, to report it with an amendment. Accompanying the bill will be found a report which I ask to have printed, and also a map, if it can be found. There is a map which was with the papers, and if found I want it printed as a part of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed as desired.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 315) granting a pension to Henry Stanley Wetmore, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 35) granting a pension to Herman Netterfield, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed, and moved that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that that bill be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee, which will be printed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James Preston, praying for the passage of a law placing his name on the pension-rolls, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 815) to increase the pensions of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who are utterly helpless from injuries received or disease contracted while in the United States service, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have in my hand, from the same committee, two other bills, Nos. 673 and 879, upon the subject of the bill just reported, and as that bill contains all that is sought by the others, I am instructed to report them back and ask to be discharged from their further consideration.

The order was agreed to; and the following bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. No. 673) for the relief of soldiers and sailors becoming totally disabled in the service of the country; and

A bill (S. No. 879) to amend "An act to increase the pension of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands, or both their feet, or the sight of both eyes, in the service of the country," approved June 17, 1878.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 152) for the relief of Thomas Lucas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 706) to amend an act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 198) for the relief of Captain Bird L. Fletcher, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 747) for the relief of Harlow L. Street, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the 7th of January the Senate, on my motion, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. No. 962) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. My honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] had moved that it be referred to the Committee on Territories, but it appeared to me from the title of the bill that it was purely a judicial bill. I afterward learned from him, and on looking at it, that the chief and leading part of the bill related to territorial matters, land grants, &c. I am therefore authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask to be discharged from its further consideration and to move that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 74) authorizing Lieutenant Z. L. Tanner, of the United States Navy, late commanding Pacific mail steamer City of Peking, to accept a pair of flower-vases and a lacquered box from the Japanese government, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislature of Nebraska, in relation to Indian depredations on the Niobrara River in that State, and praying for the establishment of a military post east of Fort Robinson for the better protection of settlers in that portion of the State, have considered the same, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration on the ground that during the last extra session provision was made by the Army appropriation bill for the establishment of the post desired by the memorialists.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is correct.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Alexander S. Brownlow, late a private in Company I, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, praying to have his name placed on the rolls of that company and regiment and for the removal of the charge of desertion from his military record, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 731) for the relief of Major Junius T. Turner, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, it was Ordered, That the petition of J. A. Hodges, with the accompanying papers, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Colonel Peter Clasgens be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. GROOME, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Thomas H. Bradley be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Ordered, That S. Rosenfeld & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, have leave to withdraw the papers in their case from the files of the Senate.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Territories:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of providing a territorial government for the Territory of Alaska, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

REPORT ON THE ECLIPSE OF 1879.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Naval Observatory on the eclipse of 1879, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Naval Observatory.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 385) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin;"

A bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson;

A bill (H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered the Forty-fifth Congress;

A bill (H. R. No. 3064) to remove the political disabilities of W. S. Maxwell, of Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 2569) to remove the political disabilities of William Sharp, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 2566) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Parker, of Maryland;

A bill (H. R. No. 2902) to place William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list;

A bill (H. R. No. 2377) for the relief of Catharine I. Gillis;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 97) to pay G. V. Hebb $55; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to pay C. R. Faulkner $32.50, in full for services as messenger in the Forty-fifth Congress.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2803) for the relief of Doddridge & Davis; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

THEOPHILUS P. CHANDLER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 22) for the relief of Theophilus P. Chandler, reported favorably from the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It relieves Theophilus P. Chandler, late assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, from all liability for the acts of Julius F. Hartwell, late disbursing clerk and cashier in the office of that assistant treasurer, in loaning or advancing the moneys or funds of the United States to Mellen, Ward & Co., and from all liability to account for any moneys or funds of the United States which were loaned or advanced by Hartwell to Mellen, Ward & Co., the same having been without the default or negligence of Chandler.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If the report is short let it be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. As several Senators have asked me questions in regard to this bill, I will state that a similar bill which was pending in the Forty-fifth Congress was reported favorably by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] from the Committee on Claims, was favorably considered by the Senate, and sent to the House. The claimant for relief here, Mr. Chandler, was assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston. A clerk in the employ of the office before his appointment, and who was continued after that time, and for whose selection Mr. Chandler was in no wise responsible, was guilty of using the funds and speculating in them. They were gold certificates. It was impossible for the Treasurer to ascertain what they were. When the detection of the clerk came about, by the efforts of the assistant treasurer, he was duly prosecuted and punished. These gold certificates were returned to the Treasury, and the officer supposed there would be no liability on his part. But afterward, in a suit brought by other parties, these gold certificates were identified and recovered from the assistant treasurer, and now he is technically responsible for them. The object of the bill is simply to relieve him from this responsibility.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will ask the Senator before he takes his seat what is the amount involved and whether this bill has been before the Senate previously?

Mr. COCKRELL. Four hundred and eighty thousand dollars was the amount of the gold certificates given out. The parties bringing suit have sustained claims against the United States for the recovery of gold certificates to the amount of something like $400,000, which the assistant treasurer turned in and which he supposed was the end of his liability in the matter. A similar bill was before the Senate in the last Congress, reported favorably on the 18th of December, 1878, passed by the Senate on the 19th of January, 1879, sent to the House, and no final action was taken by the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will ask the Senator, for information, if there is a recommendation from the Department for or against the passage of this bill, or if the Department has been consulted in regard to the matter?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will say to the Senator that I have never made a report to the Senate, and never expect to do so, where any question involving the action of a Department comes up, that I do not first refer it to the Department and get the opinion of the Department. Generally I concur with the Department, but sometimes I do not. In this case the matter was referred to the Department, and the whole proceeding was laid before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. I will state that this bill was very fully explained at the last regular session of the Senate, and after full explanation passed the Senate by a unanimous vote. Everybody was satisfied who heard the explanation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. C. CANTWELL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 307) for the relief of L. C. Cantwell.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to L. C. Cantwell, postmaster at Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, $327.46, being the amount of money-order and postage funds in his possession belonging to the United States totally destroyed by a cyclone on the 1st day of June, 1878, without any fault whatever of Cantwell, and since fully paid by him to the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. It is very short.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL January 7:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred bill (S. No. 307) for the relief of L. C. Cantwell, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

In the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, on February 10, 1879, the petition of claimant, with a bill for his relief similar to the present one, was introduced in the House of Representatives, and referred to the Committee of Claims, where no action was had. On February 17, 1879, a bill precisely similar to the present bill, with accompanying papers, was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, which reported the said bill back to the Senate favorably without amendment, on February 19, 1879, and for want of time no action was had in the Senate. The said favorable report is as follows, to wit:

"The claimant, L. C. Cantwell, is, and for many years has been, the postmaster at Richmond, in Ray County, Missouri, and is a gentleman of high character and standing. Prior to June 1, 1878, he had built at his own expense a very comfortable building of frame-work for the post-office, and had fitted it up in first-rate style for the convenience of the business and patrons of the office. On June 1, 1878, about four p. m., a cyclone of most wonderfully destructive power swept over and through Richmond, destroying everything in its pathway, killing a large number of citizens, men, women, and children, and wounding many more. The post-office building was in its pathway and totally destroyed, together with its contents. The building was smashed into kindling-wood, and the contents of the office, money-order funds, postage funds, stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, &c., were taken up by the cyclone and almost totally destroyed. Some letters were found over thirteen miles distant from the office. The Post-Office Department has given Mr. Cantwell credit for the losses of stamps, stamped envelopes, &c., sustained. Mr. Cantwell at once made a full report of all losses to the Post-Office Department, and then made a detailed report under oath of the items of his losses, in response to a call from the Department; then the Department sent out to Richmond, Missouri, a special agent, Warren P. Edgarton, to make a personal investigation and report, and who did make a full report. Upon the application of your committee, copies of all these letters, reports, and affidavits were furnished, with an accompanying letter from General Brady, Second Assistant Postmaster-General. From these it is found that Mr. Cantwell had on hand in said building $94.06 of money-order funds and $255 of postage funds, making $349.06 in all, and that of this amount $21.60 were recovered, leaving the sum of $327.46 as the balance of the money-order and postage funds totally lost and destroyed, and for which he has fully accounted to the Post-Office Department and paid in full, and which should be refunded to Mr. Cantwell.

"The bill directs the payment of said sum to Mr. Cantwell, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee have again examined the bill and the accompanying papers, and find the foregoing report true and correct and fully sustained by the evidence and reports from the Post-Office Department. Your committee, therefore, adopt the foregoing report and report the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. LOGAN AND W. L. SHADWICK.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now move the present consideration of the bill (S. No. 24) for the relief of John S. Logan, which has also heretofore been acted upon by the Senate and passed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John S. Logan, of Louisville, Kentucky, $1,000, being money which the Western Bank of Missouri advanced to purchase military supplies for the United States troops under Colonel John Edwards, of which the claimant is the assignee.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to insert after the word "Kentucky," in line 4, the words, "and W. L. Shadwick."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS January 7:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 24) for the relief of John S. Logan, and accompanying petition and papers of John S. Logan and W. L. Shadwick, having carefully examined the same, adopt the following report, which was submitted to the Senate at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress:

"In 1861 Colonel John Edwards raised a force in Southern Iowa and Northern Missouri of some twelve or fourteen hundred men, reported to General Pope, then in command in Missouri, the object of said force being to protect the Iowa southern border, to aid in keeping open the Hannibal and Saint Joe Railroad, and for the public service generally. This force remained in the field during the months of August, September, and October of that year, a part being stationed at Saint Joe and a part at Chillicothe, in said State of Missouri. This force was organized and called into the service to meet a recognized emergency, and the men were without clothing except such as they had on their persons at the time of enlistment. They were even destitute of shoes, clothing, or supplies, became dissatisfied, somewhat mutinous, and threatened to abandon the service. The officers were without funds or means to supply or meet their wants and demands. To meet the emergency, they borrowed from the Western Bank of Missouri $1,000, and gave therefor an order on the Iowa State treasury. This money was all used for clothing and supplies to these troops, the amount thus paid for clothing being subsequently deducted from the pay of each officer and soldier. The demand (the bank having gone into liquidation) was afterward purchased by these petitioners.

"Demand was made upon the State of Iowa, and payment refused, because vouchers were not presented showing the disposition made of the money; it being required that, as there was no authority technically to borrow this money, the State would not pay, except upon proper vouchers showing how and to whom this money was paid. It is understood that all the other expenses attending the raising and taking care of this independent force have been paid by the State and reimbursed by the Government. But this claim has been rejected for the reasons stated. It also appears that Colonel Edwards and his commissary, who also acted as quartermaster, soon after this occurrence, were called to other fields of active service, and that it was some years before their whereabouts could be ascertained. Finally statements were obtained from them, which are found in the record, fully supporting the findings and statements above set out. The claim has never been paid either by the State of Iowa or the United States.

"It seems to your committee that this is a just and meritorious claim. We concede that it would have been more satisfactory to your committee if vouchers had been presented showing that this money was used in good faith and actually for the benefit of the troops. But this is next to impossible at this late day. And especially would it be a great hardship to require this of the present claimants. Then, too, it will be seen at once that no one would expect that the vouchers, if presented, would show that this identical thousand dollars was applied to their payment.

"We admit that the delay has been great; but the circumstances seem to be exceptional, and we therefore recommend the allowance of the claim, ($1,000.)"

The committee recommends that the bill be amended by inserting after the word "Kentucky," in the fourth line, the words "and W. L. Shadwick;" and that, when so amended, the bill pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John S. Logan and W. L. Shadwick."

LOSS OF STEAMER J. DON. CAMERON.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that Senate bill No. 106 be taken up and considered.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 106) for the relief of sufferers by loss of the Government steamer J. Don. Cameron was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to examine into, ascertain, and determine the losses of private property of the officers, enlisted men, and laundress of the Fifth Regiment of United States Infantry, by reason of the sinking of the Government steamer J. Don. Cameron, in the Missouri River, on or about the 18th of May, 1877; and appropriates $31,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of War to adjust and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay the claimants the amount of their losses as allowed and approved.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to insert after the word "act," in line 15, the words "not to exceed the amount for baggage allowed to said officers, soldiers, and laundress by law and the Army Regulations;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of War to adjust and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay the claimants the amount of their said losses, as allowed and approved under authority of this act, not to exceed the amount for baggage allowed to said officers, soldiers, and laundress by law and the Army Regulations: Provided, That the award of the Secretary of War for such losses shall be final, and the payment thereof to the several claimants shall be held and taken as a complete relinquishment and satisfaction of all claims for damages sustained by them by reason of the sinking of the said Government steamer J. Don. Cameron, as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir; there is a report that I made on behalf of the committee, which is quite elaborate and sets out fully the reasons for the action of the committee. If the Senator from Indiana wishes it I shall have the report read.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like either to have the report read or a statement of the facts made.

Mr. MAXEY. It will be briefer perhaps to make a statement.

During the trouble in the Black Hill country, or the Sitting Bull war, the Fifth Regiment of Infantry, then stationed at Fort Leavenworth, in Kansas, were ordered to move up into that country for the purpose of aiding in that campaign. They left behind them all their baggage except such as was absolutely neccessary for the campaign. Subsequently they were ordered by the War Department to remain in that country. They did so. Their baggage and their families, &c., were then at Fort Leavenworth. Under the regulations, which are part of the law, it was the duty of the Government to furnish a certain amount of transportation to this regiment to remove their baggage, families, &c., to their new quarters. The amount to which they are entitled is not fixed by the bill. For the purpose of removal, the baggage, the families &c., were placed on the steamer J. Don. Cameron. There is a statute which makes it punitory to employ a pilot to travel on a river not licensed to travel on that river. There is a penalty attached to a pilot who accepts such service, and a penalty attached to the party who employs that pilot. It appears in evidence that neither the pilot nor any of that crew had traveled upon the Missouri River above Fort Leavenworth or Omaha. It further appears that there were no compartments, no bulkheads in that boat; that the boat was in every sense of the word utterly untrustworthy; and it was the most outrageous negligence, in my judgment, to have sent anybody's baggage or any living being on that boat.

Just below Sioux City the boat struck a snag in about twenty feet of water, running at full speed, striking the snag diagonally and breaking it in two, and sunk in twenty minutes, carrying down everything.

I hold that the granting to these people of transportation is as much a part of their contract as the granting of their pay, and it is but common justice to furnish at least a reasonably safe means of transportation. The utter unfitness of the boat, as well as the fact that neither the pilot nor any of the crew was licensed to travel on that river, fully appears in evidence; and by reason of this gross negligence the whole property was lost.

This bill provides that the Secretary of War shall say what these officers and men were justly entitled to send on that boat under the Army Regulations, and whatever amount it is ascertained that they lost which they were entitled to when this computation shall be made by him shall be the allowance made.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The report had better be read. It is a pretty important matter.

Mr. MAXEY. I would prefer myself that the report should be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. MAXEY. Before the report is read I will further state that the matter was before the Senate at a former session and the bill passed unanimously.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY December 9, 1879:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Executive Document No. 54, "letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition of certain officers of the Fifth Infantry United States Army, praying to be reimbursed for losses sustained by the sinking of the Government steamer Don. Cameron," have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The record shows that in the year 1877 the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army constructed two steamboats at Jeffersonville, Indiana, for the purpose of navigating the Upper Missouri River and its tributaries, in the transportation of public property and materials for the erection of Forts Keogh and Custer in the Territory of Montana.

In July, 1876, shortly after the Custer massacre, the Fifth Regiment United States Infantry was ordered from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for active field service in the campaign against the hostile Indians under Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse. During that summer and autumn and the winter campaign of 1876 and 1877 the officers of this regiment were compelled to leave their private property, except such as was necessary for an active field campaign against the Indians, at Fort Leavenworth, in Kansas. When this campaign had terminated in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the Northwest the officers of the Fifth Regiment of Infantry were stationed, in the spring of 1877, at what was known as Tongue River cantonment, at the mouth of Tongue River, Montana, where their services were deemed necessary by the commanding general of the Army.

The following is the law regulating the allowance of baggage to officers in changing stations:

"OFFICERS' BAGGAGE.

"Paragraph 1097, Revised Army Regulations, is modified as follows:

"The baggage to be transported is limited to camp and garrison equipage and officers' baggage. Officers' baggage shall not exceed (mess-chest and all personal baggage included) as follows:

	In the field.	Changing stations.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
Major-general	1,000	2,500
Brigadier-general	700	2,000
Field-officers	500	1,800
Captains	200	1,500
Subalterns	150	1,000

"These amounts shall be reduced pro rata by the commanding officer when necessary, and may be increased by the Quartermaster-General on transports by water when proper, in special cases.

"By order of the Secretary of War.

"E. D. TOWNSEND,
"Adjutant-General.

"Official.

"_____,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

"NOTE.—Made a part of the law by act of July 28, 1866. (The United States vs. Williamson, 23d Wall., 411.) And see specially the thirty-seventh section of same act, vol. 14, United States Statutes at Large, pages 337, 338."

From this it will be seen that the specified amount may be increased by the Quartermaster-General. On the 3d of March, 1877, the Quartermaster-General, by the following letter, increased the allowance of baggage for the Fifth Infantry, as authorized as above quoted by Army regulations:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, March 3, 1877.

"COLONEL: Referring to letter from this office to you of the 13th ultimo, in relation to the building of boats for service on the Yellowstone and Bighorn Rivers, you are respectfully informed that the Secretary of War directs that the transportation of the company baggage, laundresses, enlisted men, officers' families, and property of the Fifth Infantry, now at Fort Leavenworth, be done by the boats (now building at Jeffersonville) to go up the Missouri River.

"The regimental quartermaster of the Fifth Infantry reports that transportation will be required for officers' families, some twenty persons in number, twenty soldiers, and that children of soldiers will swell the list to about two hundred persons, while the property to be shipped is estimated at one hundred and fifty tons. Please give orders to the boats accordingly.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"M. C. MEIGS,
"Quartermaster-General.

"Lieutenant-Colonel JAMES A. EKIN,
"Deputy Quartermaster-General, United States Army,
"Jeffersonville, Indiana.

"Official.

"G. W. BAIRD,
"First Lieutenant and Adjutant Fifth Infantry."

This letter shows that the Secretary of War, through the Quartermaster-General, had directed the transportation of the companies' baggage, laundresses, enlisted men, and officers' families and property of the Fifth Infantry then at Fort Leavenworth to be performed by the boats then building at Jeffersonville, Indiana.

It further appears, both from the official reports and the affidavits of Lieutenant F. H. Hathaway, John A. Ross, quartermaster-sergeant Fifth Infantry, and Private Leonard B. Whitbeck, Company K, Fifth Infantry, hereinafter quoted, and the affidavit of G. W. Baird, first lieutenant and adjutant Fifth United States Infantry, also exhibited, that Hathaway was the regimental quartermaster of the Fifth Infantry; that on the 10th of May, 1877, he embarked at Fort Leavenworth on the United States steamer J. Donald Cameron, bound for the military post at Tongue River, Montana, where his regiment was stationed, said post being reached by steaming up the Missouri River, thence up the Yellowstone to the mouth of Tongue River; that said boat was laden with some public property and the private effects, household goods, and baggage of a number of the officers of the Fifth Infantry, who, as will be seen by the letter of General Miles, were going to a remote section, where supplies, necessaries, and comforts of their families and themselves could not be obtained, and hence they were compelled to lay in more than the usual quantity transported by officers on change of ordinary station; that on the 18th of May, 1877, about noon, while the said steamer was running at the usual rate of speed up stream, she struck a snag about two feet in diameter with such force as to puncture the boat and break off the snag, some twenty or more feet long, at the bottom of the river; that the water poured through the hole made by the snag in such quantities as to sink the steamer in eighteen feet water and in about twenty minutes after striking the snag, and that all the property of the officers of this regiment then on the boat was submerged and lost. General Terry, commanding the Department of Dakota, under date of May 24, 1877, ordered a board of officers to be convened consisting of Major George W. Candee, Pay Department; Major William B. Hughes, Quartermaster-General's Department; and Captain William A. Elderkin, Subsistence Department, to assemble at Sioux City, Iowa, on the 26th day of May and to proceed thence to the wreck of the steamer J. Donald Cameron to examine into the circumstances of the sinking of that vessel, to ascertain and report the extent of the damage and determine whether any person or persons were responsible for such damages. This board, after examining into all of these matters and taking a large amount of testimony and making a full and complete investigation, submitted and reported that the following points were fully established by the evidence, namely:

First. That the steamer J. Donald Cameron was not properly constructed for the safe navigation of the Upper Missouri River, in that she was not provided with proper bulkheads or water-tight compartments, and that the sinking of said steamer at the time and under the circumstances would not have occurred but for these defects in her construction.

Second. That John S. Ritchie, employed by Lieutenant-Colonel J. A. Ekin, deputy quartermaster-general, United States Army, as master and pilot of said steamer J. Donald Cameron, was not a regularly licensed pilot upon the Missouri River, and had never been up said river above Omaha, Nebraska; that J. C. Woodruff, employed by Lieutenant-Colonel J. A. Ekin, deputy quartermaster-general, United States Army, as pilot of said United States steamer J. Donald Cameron, was not a regularly licensed pilot upon the Missouri River, and had never been upon said river. The committee refer to the report of said board on file in the papers of this case.

Your committee here quote sections 4438, 4442, 4446, and 4463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to navigation:

"SEC. 4438. The board of local inspectors shall license and classify the masters, chief mates, engineers, and pilots of all steam-vessels. It shall be unlawful to employ any person, or for any person to serve, as a master, chief mate, engineer, or pilot on any steamer who is not licensed by the inspectors; and any one violating this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense.

"SEC. 4442. Whenever any person claiming to be a skillful pilot of steam-vessels offers himself for a license, the inspectors shall make diligent inquiry as to his character and merits, and if satisfied from personal examination of the applicant, with the proof that he offers, that he possesses the requisite knowledge and skill, and is trustworthy and faithful, they shall grant him a license, for the term of one year, to pilot any such vessel within the limits prescribed in the license; but such license shall be suspended or revoked upon satisfactory evidence of negligence, unskillfulness, inattention to the duties of his station, or intemperance, or the willful violation of any provision of this title.

"SEC. 4446. Every master, mate, engineer, and pilot who shall receive a license shall, when employed upon any vessel, place his certificate of license, which shall be framed under glass, in some conspicuous place in such vessel, where it can be seen by passengers and others at all times; and for every neglect to comply with this provision by any such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, he shall be subject to a fine of $100, or to the revocation of his license.

"SEC. 4463. No steamer carrying passengers shall depart from any port unless she shall have in her service a full complement of licensed officers and full crew, sufficient at all times to manage the vessel, including the proper number of watchmen. But if any vessel, on her voyage, is deprived of the services of any licensed officer without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the deficiency may be temporarily supplied until others licensed can be obtained."

From the facts ascertained and reported by the board of survey, sustained by the affidavits of Lieutenant Hathaway and others, hereto appended, and the letter of General Miles, also exhibited, your committee are of opinion—

First. That the order increasing the amount of baggage to officers was, in this change of stations, properly issued.

Second. That no other transportation than by the steamer designated for the baggage was furnished by the Government.

Third. That the pilot in charge of the Don. Cameron was not a licensed pilot for navigating the Missouri River; that the captain of the boat, the chief mate, and the other officers were wholly unacquainted with said part of said river.

Fourth. That the boat was unseaworthy.

Fifth. That the navigation of the Missouri River between Omaha, Nebraska, and Sioux City, Iowa, is dangerous, so much so that it has been styled "the graveyard of steamboats."

Sixth. That some of the officers whose property was lost had insured the same, but payment of these policies has been successfully resisted on the ground, as the committee is advised, of gross neglect on the part of the Government officials in officering the boat with men wholly ignorant of those waters and not licensed to navigate the same, and on the further ground that the boat was unseaworthy.

Your committee therefore conclude that the Government was guilty of gross neglect in the construction of this boat for the navigation of the Missouri and Yellowstone Rivers, known to be dangerous waters, without the construction of water-tight bulkheads or compartments in the hold, or steam capstans about the deck, both of which are regarded as necessary and usual in the construction of steamboats for the navigation of those waters.

The Government was further guilty of gross neglect in sending this boat up the Missouri River officered and manned by men unacquainted with those waters, and in charge of a pilot who was not regularly licensed for the navigation of that river.

The navigation laws of the United States are enacted with a view to protect life and property on the high seas and on our navigable waters, and to establish such rules and regulations as have been demonstrated by experience to be conducive to the public good. The Government is as much bound by these laws as the citizen, and may not avoid them without incurring responsibility. In this case it appears, to the satisfaction of your committee, that the officers representing the Government and having this transportation in charge not only disregarded the navigation laws, but neglected the usual and necessary prudence in the construction of the boat, which the most ordinary observation would have shown was utterly unfit, and unworthy the dangerous service of navigating the Upper Missouri River. The officers and men of the Fifth Infantry and their families had no option but to embark upon this boat at the imminent risk of life and property, and, therefore, in no way contributed to the carelessness and gross negligence through which their property was lost. While it is true the Government cannot, in law, be held to be an insurer, yet the Government cannot, more than the citizen, escape or avoid the penalties and liabilities which the law imposes upon gross negligence; and it is submitted that the law of insurance has nothing to do with the case.

There are several precedents established by Congress where compensation has been made for losses incurred under somewhat like circumstances. Your committee deem it proper to cite the following acts bearing upon the case herein considered:

"An act for the relief of the United States troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That there shall be paid, under the direction of the President, to each of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates who, on the 21st day of December, 1853, embarked at New York, under orders for California, on the steamship San Francisco, and who was on board that vessel on the occasion of her recent disaster at sea, and to Lieutenant Francis Key Murray, and other officer or seaman of the United States Navy who was on board the said steamship, under orders, a sum equal in amount to his pay and allowances for eight months.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any such officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, or private shall have died before receiving such payment from any cause consequent upon said disaster, his widow, if one survive him, and if not, then his minor children, if any there be, shall be paid a sum equal in amount to six months' pay and allowances of the deceased. And that the widows and minor children of those officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates who perished by this disaster, or who died from disease in consequence thereof, shall be allowed pensions in the same manner in all respects as if the said officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates had been killed in battle. (10 Stat., 269.)

"Approved March 27, 1854."

"An act for the relief of certain officers of the Third United States Artillery, who suffered by fire at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, on the 3d of March, 1875.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of Treasury of the United States be, and are hereby, authorized to settle with the first lieutenants of the Third United States Artillery who lost their personal effects by fire at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, on the 3d of March, 1875, at a sum not to exceed $600 each, and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"Approved January 30, 1877."

"An act relative to the burial of the officers and others of the United States Navy who perished by the wreck of the United States steamer Huron, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized, at such time as in his discretion may be proper, to have removed to the Naval Cemetery at Annapolis, Maryland, and have buried there the remains of the officers and others who perished by the wreck of the United States steamer Huron on the 23d of November, 1877, and which have been, or may hereafter be, buried on the coast of North Carolina: Provided, That the relatives of any such deceased officers, and others who prefer that the remains of such be taken to their homes within the United States, shall have such privilege extended to them, and the expenses thereof shall be borne by the United States: And provided further, That the expense of removal incurred by the relatives of those whose bodies have already been removed shall be reimbursed to them, and the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act. And the benefit of the provisions of this act as far as applicable is hereby extended to those of the wrecking steamer B. and J. Baker who were lost in the attempt to rescue the crew of the steamer Huron.

"Approved December 15, 1877."

It is submitted that if these salutary acts for the benefit of persons who had suffered by disaster, and the heirs, &c., of such, were well grounded, surely those who suffered by such gross negligence as existed in this case have a valid claim to relief.

"TERRITORY OF MONTANA,
"Custer County, ss:

"Personally appeared before me, G. M. Miles, United States commissioner for the District of Montana, Lieutenant F. H. Hathaway, Fifth United States Infantry, who, being sworn according to law, deposes and says that, on the 10th day of May, 1877, he embarked at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, on the United States steamer J. Donald Cameron, a Government river transport, with a detachment of soldiers belonging to the Fifth Infantry, together with the families of some of the officers of the said regiment, and servants and other persons, bound for the military post at Tongue River, Montana Territory, to be reached by steaming up the Missouri and Yellowstone Rivers. The said boat was laden additionally with some public property, and the private effects, household goods, and baggage of a majority of the officers of the said regiment.

"That upon examining the said vessel deponent discovered that there was no water-tight bulkheads or compartments in the hold or steam capstans about the deck, both of which essential features deponent believes are necessary and usual in steamboats navigating the rivers mentioned; that the said steamer J. Donald Cameron was built, owned, and run by the Government, and that no officer on the said steamer had ever navigated the Missouri River north of Omaha, Nebraska, to his knowledge and belief; that on the 18th day of May, 1877, about noon, while the said steamer was running at usual rate of speed up-stream, she struck a snag, about two feet in diameter, with such force as to penetrate the bow and to raise the deck over the forecastle, and to break off the snag, some twenty-five or thirty feet long, at the bed of the river; that the water poured through the hole made by the snag with such force as to sink the said steamer in ten and eighteen feet of water in about twenty minutes' time; that with the snag stuck fast in the bow it was impossible to head in to the shore, and it became necessary to back in as close as possible; that the boat did not reach a point nearer than thirty or forty feet from the shore, and there sunk in deep water, with all the property of the following-named officers on board, namely: Colonel N. A. Miles, Major George Gibson; Captains D. H. Brotherton, Simon Snyder, James S. Casey, Samuel Ovenshine, E. P. Ewers, and Andrew S. Bennett; Lieutenants Mason Carber, Frank D. Baldwin, E. L. Randall, Henry Romeyn, George W. Baird, T. F. Forbes, F. H. Hathaway, D. Q Rousseau, H. K. Bailey, W. H. C. Bowen, O. F. Long, and C. P. Thompson, all of the Fifth United States Infantry; that all the property of the said officers, excepting a few personal effects in trunks and packages on the cabin deck, were submerged and lost or damaged by the said wreck. Deponent further states that, in his opinion, if the said steamboat had been fixed with water-tight compartments the boat and property lost and damaged might have been saved; and that the place of said wreck was on the west bank of Missouri River, at the Winnebago Indian reservation, Nebraska, about forty miles below Sioux City, Iowa.

"George W. Baird, first lieutenant and adjutant Fifth Infantry, having been duly sworn, on his said oath deposes and says: In the summer of 1876 the Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, stationed at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, was ordered on a campaign against the hostile Sioux Indians in the Territory of Montana; that the families of the officers, together with all their household furniture and all of their personal effects not necessary for a campaign in the field, was left; that the property, consisting of personal baggage, household furniture, &c., belonging to the officers of the regiment, remained at Fort Leavenworth until on or about the 11th day of May, A. D. 1877, when the same was shipped on board of the United States steamer J. Don. Cameron, for the station of the regiment at the mouth of Tongue River, on the Yellowstone, Territory of Montana; that prior to said shipment deponent obtained insurance on a portion of his property so shipped to the amount of $500, and that portion so insured, together with nearly all of the remainder of his property so shipped, was lost by the sinking of said boat on or about the 18th day of May, A. D. 1877; that upon application to the insurance company for payment of the policy the same was rejected, on the ground that the steamer was not properly officered, in that the pilot in charge of the same was not skillful or acquainted with those waters.

"Deponent further says it was currently reported at the time, and generally believed by the officers of the regiment, that the pilot in charge of said boat was not skillful or acquainted with the navigation of the Missouri River between Omaha, Nebraska, and Sioux City, Iowa.

"Deponent further says that, from general repute, the navigation of the Missouri River between Omaha, Nebraska, and Sioux City, Iowa, is the most difficult and dangerous of any portion of that river; that the point in that river above referred to is generally termed by persons acquainted with the navigation of the river 'the grave-yard of steamboats.'

"Deponent further says that, from personal knowledge, he knows that it is the custom of persons navigating those waters to employ two pilots on each steamer, one of whom at least has had long experience in navigating that river.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1879.

"SIR: I have the honor to state, regarding the loss of property belonging to the officers of my regiment, that in July, 1876, immediately after the Custer massacre, my regiment was suddenly ordered from Leavenworth, Kansas, to Montana; the officers could only take what was required for hard field service; they were engaged in the campaign against Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse during that summer and autumn, and the severe campaign of the winter of 1876 and 1877. On the opening of spring their property was put upon the Government steamer Don. Cameron, a steamboat in many respects utterly unsuited for service upon the most dangerous river in the United States. It was built without bulkheads; its officers were either incompetent or unacquainted with the river, which, at least, is considered unsafe, and that portion of the Missouri River below Sioux City has undoubtedly wrecked more steamboats than any body of water in the country.

"The loss of property was particularly hard upon the officers and their families, as many of them lost everything they had in the world except the clothes they were wearing. The valuable service they were rendering at the time to the Government was not only most severe and dangerous but very expensive, and as they had no alternative but to submit their property to the safety of a Government boat, it would seem but just and right that the Government should sustain the loss that they can ill afford to bear, as the loss was occasioned through no fault of theirs.

"Some of the officers had insured their property, but, on the grounds of gross neglect on the part of the Government officials in putting this boat upon the Missouri River, the insurance company refuses to pay any part of the insurance thereupon; they are obliged to look to the Government for assistance. To show what other losses the officers have sustained and the kind of service they are engaged in, I would add that during the past two years that the regiment has been on the Yellowstone it has lost one officer killed, one officer died from exposure, two disabled by wounds received in battle, and three have, by disease contracted in the line of duty, been obliged to leave their commands and are now under medical treatment.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"NELSON A. MILES,
"Colonel and Brevet Major-General United States Army.

"Hon. S. B. MAXEY,
"United States Senator."

The premises considered, your committee are clear that the petitioners are entitled to relief, and therefore report the accompanying bill, authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to examine into and ascertain the losses herein occurring, and making an appropriation of the amount reported necessary to enable him to pay the adjusted claims therefor, and recommend passage of the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSA VERTNER JEFFREYS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President——

Mr. MCPHERSON. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The special order is the bill (S. No. 206) relative to the transportation of animals.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 103, reported unanimously by the Committee on Claims, and I think it will not occupy more than a moment.

Mr. McPHERSON. If it will not occupy very long I shall not object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 103) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys. It provides for the payment to Rosa Vertner Jeffreys of $844, the balance in full compensation for the use and occupation by the military authorities of the United States, in the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, of certain property in Lexington, Kentucky, devised to her, and formerly owned by Daniel Vertner, now deceased.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know nothing of the present merits of this case, but I recollect once having been a member of the Committee on Claims when a similar claim passed the committee and passed the Senate. Now I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if this is another claim, or is it the same original claim?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is the original claim, and the committee report only in favor of the payment of rent, nothing for damages to the property.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is nothing for the loss of household goods?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Nothing for damage done to the property, but merely an allowance for rent of the property. I think the committee originally reported in favor of paying a much larger sum.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I was about to ask the Senator whether he saw the report made at the time the claim was originally presented, made by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have examined that report.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And do I understand the Senator that it is certain nothing was paid under the report of the committee three or four years ago?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Not a dollar has ever been paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF ANIMALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The special order of the day is the consideration of the bill (S. No. 206) relative to the transportation of animals.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to antagonize this bill. On the contrary I am in favor of the object of the bill, very earnestly in favor of it. I am very well aware of the labor that has been bestowed upon it by the committee that reported it. But there are some persons who think the bill can be improved, and who would like to be heard in reference to it, or to have their views presented. I think there are some lawyers in the Senate, too, who think that there are legal questions involved in this bill which require some consideration; that even if the power exists in Congress to pass this bill, and which was asserted in the bill to which this is amendatory, yet in regard to the judicial proceedings involved in this bill there is some room for amendment, in fact some necessity for it.

Under these circumstances, I hope the Senator from New Jersey will allow the bill to lie over for a few days until these suggestions can be heard and considered. There is no danger of the bill being overslaughed or delayed unnecessarily so as not to pass when it shall finally come up. No doubt as the original bill passed before with scarcely any objection, a majority will pass it now. There is no danger to the bill by being postponed. I should be glad if the Senator having it in charge would agree that it may be postponed until this day week; but if he will not agree to that, then I hope he will agree to a postponement to, say, Thursday.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from Ohio is perfectly aware that since the passage of the existing law in 1873, which was discovered to be faulty and loose in its construction so that it was impossible to secure the reforms designed by that law, there has been an effort made to improve the law. Various committees of the House and also of the Senate have held this bill under consideration, or bills having a like object, and various bills have been prepared. I will say to the honorable Senator that it seems to me that in a case of this importance, while such gross and unnatural cruelties are being perpetrated day after day, the neglect of the Senate to adopt some remedial legislation almost approaches criminality.

I have postponed this bill at the request of Senators day after day, because if anything in the shape of improvement can be made in the bill I am as anxious for that improvement as any member of the Senate. But there are conflicting interests; there are the railroad interests; there are the humane interests, and there is the interest of the stock-shippers themselves in the matter. This bill has been prepared by all the interests which have heretofore been antagonistic, so far as I can learn. I do not know that it includes every railroad in this country, but I do know that three of the most important trunk lines in the United States, those that do perhaps more than one-half of the live-stock transportation of the country, have been consulted, and I have the privilege of saying that they entirely concur in the provisions of the bill inasmuch as some legislation is necessary. While they would prefer that we enact no legislation affecting this question at all, at the same time they are desirous, if any legislation is had, that it shall be of the character here presented.

I do not wish to urge this bill before the Senate until every Senator is ready to meet the case. I believe the bill has been so carefully prepared that it will challenge criticism. If the Senator from Ohio will name any day when he is willing the bill shall come before the Senate and be discussed and receive the judgment of the Senate, I shall be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He has named Monday.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think that is too far off.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then he named Thursday.

Mr. THURMAN. I wanted to make my motion acceptable to the Senator from New Jersey. I think myself that if the Senator will consider that at this period of the session we usually adjourn over, at least from Friday to Monday, he will see that he gains nothing by requiring us to take up the bill during this week. I am not the only Senator who is troubled about the bill by a great deal. I hope that the Senator will agree that the bill may be postponed until this day week and be the special order then. I make that motion.

Mr. McPHERSON. I shall make no objection. I desire that the wishes of every Senator should be consulted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order, then, is, the Chair understands, by general consent, that this bill be made the special order for Monday next after the morning hour. It is so ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One word before that order is made. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey observed that but one Senator had made objection. There are several Senators who make objection to the present consideration of the bill. It is a bill, if I understand it correctly, that the stockmen themselves object to. I am informed by stockmen that it will be very detrimental to their interests, and that they prefer to take such railroads as suit them and suit their business. In other words, they want their business to be treated as a business transaction, so that they can ship their cattle in such way as will suit them and suit those who transport the cattle and those who buy them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is made the special order for Monday next.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to take up House bill No. 3015, known as the Military Academy bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as they are recited in the reading of the bill. There are only two or three of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be observed.

Mr. WINDOM. I will state in a very few words the comparison between this bill and the one for the current year.

The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $314,919; the amount added by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is $12,933.12; total of the bill as reported, $327,852.12.

The amount of the estimates for 1881 is $398,132.66. The appropriation for the current year, 1880, is $319,547.33. This bill is, therefore, less than the estimates by $70,280.54, and it exceeds the act of 1880 by $8,304.79.

There are only three items of increase proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. The first is for the pay of professors, $315.25. That amendment is made necessary by the fact that two of the professors will be entitled to increased pay during the year 1881, and this is to make up the amount of their pay allowed by law.

The second amendment proposed is for completing new hospital for cadets, for which the Senate committee propose to add $11,617.84; and the third is for repairing roof of cadet barracks, $1,000.

These are, I believe, all the amendments of any importance proposed, and I ask that they be acted on as the bill is read; but I believe that order has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 8 and 9, after the word "thousand," to strike out "dollars" and insert "$315.28;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of professors, $28,315.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 125, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, assign any officer of the Army as professor of law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 179, after the word "cadets," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$21,617.84;" so as to make the clause read:

For completion of main building and one wing for the new hospital for cadets, $21,617.84.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk concluded the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 183, to insert:

For repairing roof of cadet barracks, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman having charge of this bill. I see on lines 8 and 9 that there is an appropriation for the pay of professors, twenty-eight thousand and some hundred dollars, and on lines 40 and 41:

For additional pay of professors for length of service, $7,500.

It may be all right, but I should like to understand it.

Mr. WINDOM. The addition on lines 8 and 9 of $315 is required in order to pay the regular salary of two officers whose grade will be increased, one in March and the other, I think, in April, 1881. Under the law a service of ten years at the academy authorizes a certain grade, which will be reached by two of the officers during the year for which this appropriation is made, and unless the addition recommended by the Committee on Appropriations be granted the amount appropriated will not pay their full salary.

On lines 40 and 41, to which the Senator refers, we appropriate for the additional pay of professors for length of service $7,500. That is under an entirely different statute, and is what is called the longevity pay. It is the 10 per cent. allowed for length of service; the other is the increased salary by reason of promotion.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT TOWLE.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 17.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 17) for the relief of Albert Towle. It provides for the payment of $365 to reimburse Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, for revenue stamps stolen from his office at that place on the night of October 25, 1869.

Mr. FERRY. This bill has been twice passed by the Senate, and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have examined it closely. The report of the committee can be read if desired. I have an amendment to offer. Since the bill passed before Mr. Towle has died, and I ask that in line 5, after the word "reimburse," the words "the heirs of" be inserted.

Mr. THURMAN. Ought it not to be "the legal representatives of?"

Mr. FERRY. The amendment I moved was suggested by the Senator representing the State.

Mr. THURMAN. If it is a mere money claim it ought to go to the administrator or executor. There may be creditors.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am willing to accept the modification.

Mr. FERRY. I propose to modify the amendment by accepting the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio. I move to insert "the legal representatives of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Albert Towle."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 385) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Erwin;"

A bill (H. R. No. 2377) for the relief of Catharine I. Gillis;

A bill (H. R. No. 2566) to remove the political disabilities of William A. Parker, of Maryland;

A bill (H. R. No. 2569) to remove the political disabilities of William Sharp, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3064) to remove the political disabilities of W. S. Maxwell, of Tennessee.

The following joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 97) to pay G. V. Hebb $55; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to pay C. R. Faulkner $32.50, in full for services as messenger in the Forty-fifth Congress.

The bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered the Forty-fifth Congress was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 2902) to place William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes; which were referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty-one minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 12, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

PROPAGATION OF SALT-WATER FISH.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, the Journal of Friday notes the fact that Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Commerce, when that committee was called, reported back, by unanimous consent, adversely House bills Nos. 1355 and 1858, to protect the propagation of salt-water fish. The RECORD, which I have in my hand, does not show that he asked unanimous consent; but it was so. I am aware that the Chair is bound by the Journal, but the gentleman from Virginia is in his seat and I desire to know whether these bills, which were public bills and not private bills, when presented from the Committee on Commerce were not by unanimous consent of the House, and whether the Chair at the time did not ask whether there was any objection. The reason I mention this is that I desire to have these bills go to the public calendar. There is no objection on the part of the gentleman who reported the bills to having them go to the Calendar, and if the House is willing they should take that course it will avoid the necessity of my entering a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. At the time of the presentation of those two reports it was seen they were bills of a public character, but no objection was made to the reception of the report from the Committee on Commerce. They were adverse reports, however, and the Speaker called the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the fact that under the rule a written report must accompany matters reported back adversely. The gentleman from Virginia stated that he would present a report at a future time, and the Clerk now informs the Chair that the adverse report has been filed.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask if the gentleman from Virginia is willing that these bills shall go to the public calendar? If he is, then it will avoid the necessity, as I have already stated, of my entering the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BEALE. In reply to the gentleman from Louisiana I will say that I did not ask unanimous consent to report those bills. I reported them and no objection was interposed to the reception of the report. I have no objection, however, that they shall go to the public calendar, for it was not my purpose to deprive my friend from Louisiana of the opportunity of offering his adverse report.

The SPEAKER. But these bills came before the House with an adverse report.

Mr. BEALE. The gentleman wants, as I understand, to offer a minority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can do that now after the morning hour, and the Chair will recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. ACKLEN. Very well. I shall ask the Chair to recognize me for that purpose and that the bills shall go to the public calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bills are on the table, and have not been sent to the private or the public calendar. They were reported back adversely and were laid upon the table and the adverse report ordered to be printed.

Mr. ACKLEN. I will ask, then, that they shall be referred to the public calendar. I believe they were laid upon the table, and now, after the gentleman's statement that he did not ask for unanimous consent, I shall ask for their reference to the public calendar.

The SPEAKER. If he did not ask unanimous consent he got it without asking, because what he proposed could only be done by unanimous consent. As there was no objection unanimous consent, as is customary, was taken for granted.

Mr. ACKLEN. Then it is not correct, as stated in the Journal, that "on motion of Mr. BEALE, by unanimous consent," &c.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] received unanimous consent, or he could not have done what the Journal states.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was received, by Mr. PRUDEN, his private secretary; and also the announcement that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1955) authorizing an allowance for loss, by leakage or casualty, of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation; and

An act (H. R. No. 1989) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock; and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call resolutions for information from Departments and memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing.

DAVID G. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. LADD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3294) granting a pension to David G. Hutchinson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

DENNIS SULLIVAN.

Mr. BRIGGS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3295) granting an increase of pension to Dennis Sullivan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FRANK T. HILL.

Mr. BRIGGS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3296) granting a pension to Frank T. Hill, private of Company C, Eleventh Regiment New Jersey Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ALFRED G. FIFIELD.

Mr. BRIGGS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3297) granting an increase of pension to Alfred G. Fifield, private Company C, Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ABIGAIL S. TILTON.

Mr. HALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3298) granting arrears of pension to Abigail S. Tilton; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

GEORGE J. WARDWELL.

CONSULATE AT HONG-KONG.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to resolution of the House of the 3d of December, 1879, relative to the consulate at Hong-Kong, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State with its accompanying papers.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1880.

Mr. HUNTON. I offer the following resolution, disposing of the message just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the message of the President of the United States and accompanying papers relative to the consulate at Hong-Kong be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, with instructions to investigate and report on the same, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg leave to state that in the report of the Secretary of State which accompanies the message just referred the Secretary of State reports that one of the letters embraced in the correspondence called for is, for some reason unknown to him, missing. I have a printed copy of that letter and ask leave to append it to that report so it may be printed with the other papers.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PROPAGATION OF SALT-WATER FISH.

Mr. ACKLEN. I now offer a substitute for House bills 1355 and 1858, to protect the propagation of salt-water fish, together with a minority report; and I move that those bills, which were laid upon the table, be taken up and referred, together with my substitute, to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know whether the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Virginia agree to this?

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes, sir.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PENSION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. HARMER. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the method and manner of the payment of pensions and bounties to soldiers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is a matter of public record that soldiers' claims for pension to the number of two hundred thousand are now pending in the Pension Office and unsettled; and

Whereas it is asserted by the Commissioner of Pensions that under the present system many fraudulent claims have been allowed and the settlement of meritorious claims delayed; and

Whereas it is alleged that bounty and back pay due under existing law to soldiers who have served in the armies of the United States are due and unpaid: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That a committee of seven members of this House be appointed by the Speaker whose duty it shall be to examine and inquire into the method and manner of the payment of pensions, arrears of pensions, bounty, and back pay, and to ascertain whether any irregularities exist in the payment of the same.

And the said committee shall have further power to investigate any subject of complaint that may be lodged with them concerning the payment, rejection, or suspension of pensions, bounty, and back pay; to examine witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk, and to report the result of said investigation to this House, with a view to the enactment of such additional legislation as may correct existing defects, and as may be deemed necessary to protect the pensioners and soldiers of the Government in their rights.

And be it further resolved, That the expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the said committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the reading of the resolution, I notice the words "back pay" and "bounty." Now, those do not come under the Pension Bureau.

Mr. HARMER. I know they do not; but it is a matter, nevertheless, competent for inquiry.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish the gentleman would let it be printed and lie over so we may see it. It is an important resolution.

Mr. HARMER. I prefer to have action on the resolution at once. It is a matter which should not be delayed.

Mr. GARFIELD. It may be all right, but I should like to know a little more about it than I do now before voting on it.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BUCKNER. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Committee on Pensions be charged with this subject instead of any special committee.

Mr. HARMER. The pressure of business before the Committee on Pensions makes it necessary that a special committee should be appointed for this purpose, and I think the chairman of the Committee on Pensions will agree with me in saying that this resolution ought to be adopted for the appointment of a special committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should like to ask my friend from Pennsylvania whether, in his judgment, it may not tend to block the progress of the payment of claims for arrears of pensions now going forward? I do not know as well as the gentleman the scope of the resolution, but I should be sorry to see anything done which would for the time being block the wheels of the machinery for the payment of pensions to soldiers. It seems to me a committee like this to investigate the Third Auditor's Office, that is, the whole business of bounty and back pay, and to go into the whole question of pensions, and especially to examine rejected claims, will substantially stop all progress of the office while their papers are being overhauled. And query, whether we ought to go, without fuller knowledge than we now have, into any investigation which may actually stop the payment of pensions so much needed by soldiers? I ask my friend simply that he may allow this resolution to lie over, so we may have an opportunity to look into it and see exactly what it proposes to do.

Mr. HARMER. There is in view the adoption of a system which may guard the Government against fraud and at the same time protect the soldier in his rights. I will read an extract from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

If new, original claims continue to be presented as rapidly during the remaining months of the fiscal year as they have been for the past nine months, (and there appears no reason for expecting a falling off in the receipts,) there will be pending in the office at the close of the year more than two hundred and fifty thousand unsettled cases.

* * * * * * *

Besides being cumbersome and expensive, the present system is an open door to the Treasury for the perpetration of fraud.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is for the purpose stated in that extract from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions that I offer this resolution. It is not an attack at all upon the Pension Bureau or the Commissioner of Pensions, and I desire that it should not be regarded in any such light.

Mr. WAIT. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. To what extent does he propose to go in this matter of investigating rejected claims? Where is to be the limit? How many are to be examined into? Are all the claims which have been rejected within the last two or three years to be investigated, or is there to be some limit? I do not understand under this resolution there is to be any limit.

Mr. HARMER. That is a matter for the committee to decide after it has been appointed.

Mr. SAPP. Let me ask the gentleman whether the appointment of this committee will stop the payment of claims for pensions and arrears of pensions until the committee has concluded its investigations?

Mr. WAIT. This looks, Mr. Speaker, like the establishment of a court of review upon the Pension Department, to pass upon decisions of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. HARMER. I do not see how this will interfere with the general business of the Commissioner of Pensions. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Let this lie over for a week. I understand the Commissioner of Pensions does not object to any investigation, and certainly I do not, but desire to vote for it if there be proper ground for it; but the question with us here is whether this mixing up of so many subjects—back pay and bounty—with pensions which are not adjusted in that bureau will not impede the payment of arrears of pensions and block the business of the office. Will not my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, let this go over a week until we can examine it, or at least until it is printed in the RECORD, so we can see what it is, when, if not amenable to this objection, we will all vote for it?

Mr. HARMER. Mr. Speaker, would I lose my place for the consideration of this resolution if I allowed it to lie over until next Monday?

The SPEAKER. If the House by unanimous consent agreed to the printing of the resolution and to postpone it until next Monday, the Chair would of course recognize that order.

Mr. HARMER. Then I hope that will be done.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. No; let the resolution be passed now.

Mr. HARMER. I have no objection to that; that is, to its postponement until next Monday, if it can then be considered and acted on.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have no question about the merit of the resolution, and it should be voted on at once.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is a strong resolution. There are a good many points in it, and we should precisely know the scope and direction of anything which affects so nearly so large a number of suitors of the Government. I would be glad, for one, to have an opportunity to look through and see whether in my judgment it will stop the current business of payment of pensions and bounties. If it will, I should like to have it modified so it will not. If it is merely to get a better system, if it is merely to correct abuses—and I am sure my friend has that in mind—then if it is not in shape to do that, and nothing more, we can easily put it in shape. I hope, therefore, it will lie over.

Mr. WARNER. I do not understand that this resolution will impede or delay for an hour the payment of pensions or the adjustment of claims for pensions. I understand the scope of the resolution to embrace simply an inquiry into the present method of adjusting pension claims, the cause of delay, and whether fraudulent claims are allowed or not. I am in favor of the resolution; I am satisfied an inquiry will do good, and I am in favor, also, of a vote upon it at this time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have experienced considerable trouble in ascertaining the state of claims in the Pension Office. I believe the interests of meritorious pensioners demand some inquiry of this character, and I for one desire we shall have action on the resolution at once. While I am anxious to guard the Treasury from unjust claims, I shall, however, insist upon speedy action and fair treatment of the just claims for pension of all the brave defenders of the Republic in all our past wars. If the delay and difficulty which has been experienced in the consideration of such claims is due to anything wrong in the Pension Office, or to the inefficiency of its force or the system adopted, I want it exposed and remedied.

Mr. HARMER. If an agreement such as is proposed can be arrived at, I have no objection to the resolution lying over till next Monday.

Mr. COFFROTH. I hope the House will pass the resolution. The Committee on Invalid Pensions is now overworked, the number of cases pending before that committee being very large. I hope the House will pass this resolution, and that a special committee may be organized to do the work which it requires.

Mr. KELLEY. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Not if it is objected to.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I object.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I wish to ask just one question of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HARMER,] whether the Commissioner of Pensions is in favor of this investigation or not?

Mr. HARMER. I had an interview with the Commissioner of Pensions on the matter of offering this resolution. He raised no objection whatever to it, but thought it the proper thing to do, and that Congress should take some action to relieve him from the unfortunate condition of things in his office.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and adopting the resolution.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that it may be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for a division. I think we can wait till next week and act more intelligently then.

Mr. HARMER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 54 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 54, not voting 51; as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts. Mr. CLAFLIN is absent, sick.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. MANNING, of Mississippi. I am assured that, if present, he would vote "ay;" and as I am also in favor of the resolution, I therefore vote "ay."

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. JOHNSTON, is still detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. MANNING, of Mississippi, is absent on account of sickness in his family. He is paired with Mr. CALKINS, of Indiana; but both gentlemen being on the same side of this question, Mr. CALKINS has voted in the affirmative.

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. BACHMAN, is at home attending the funeral of his mother-in-law.

Mr. MONROE. Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi is paired with Mr. PIERCE, of New York.

Mr. BLISS. My colleague from New York, Mr. O'REILLY, is paired with my colleague, Mr. PRESCOTT. I do not know how either gentleman would vote.

Mr. HARMER. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM, is unavoidably absent from the House.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. FROST, is at home sick.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. REED, of Maine.

Mr. DWIGHT. My colleague from New York, Mr. HAMMOND, is paired with Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

DUTY ON STEEL RAILS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on behalf of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MORTON] who to-day presented a petition from the Union Pacific Railroad Company and others, asking for a reduction of the duty on steel rails, submits the request to the House that the petition may be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means instead of the Committee on Appropriations, the former committee having charge of that subject.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin and Andrew F. Slade.

JOHN N. REED, A. D. ALEXANDER, AND OTHERS.

Mr. SPRINGER. On Friday last the House passed a bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Alexander, and others. Several amendments were made to the bill appropriating sundry amounts for the benefit of other persons. Those amendments were inserted in the body of the bill, but the aggregate amount appropriated by the bill was not changed. The aggregate as now stated in the bill is $2,852.43; with the additions of the items inserted by amendments the aggregate should be $3,029.43. Before that bill is sent to the Senate I ask unanimous consent that the error in the aggregate may be corrected.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is that the bill to which several amendments were made last Friday, appropriating other amounts for sundry persons?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ACKLEN. I suppose the error must have occurred from the amounts of those amendments not having been included in the aggregate.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the statement of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] is correct.

Mr. ACKLEN. I do not suppose there will be any objection to correcting that error.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPEAL OF DUTY ON SALT.

Mr. HATCH. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, a bill to provide for the importation of salt free of duty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That no duty shall be levied or collected, directly or indirectly, on the importation of salt brought into any port of the United States; but salt, fine or coarse, in bulk, or in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, may be imported free of duty.

SEC. 2. That all laws or regulations of the Treasury Department in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, removed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. CONGER. Is this a report from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is not. It is submitted in the individual right of a member of the House.

Mr. CONGER. If it is subject to objection I object to it.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill as read.

Mr. CONGER. Is a bill of this importance to be acted upon without any opportunity for debate or discussion?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. If the gentleman objects to the passage of the bill his remedy is to vote in the negative.

Mr. CONGER. I think I have another remedy. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 84, noes 96.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 97, nays 128, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—97.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HARMER. Mr. BACHMAN is paired with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. REED, of Maine.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, is paired with Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of an act (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 17) for the relief of the legal representatives of Albert Towle;

A bill (S. No. 22) for the relief of Theophilus P. Chandler;

A bill (S. No. 24) for the relief of John S. Logan and W. L. Shadwick;

A bill (S. No. 103) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys;

A bill (S. No. 106) for the relief of sufferers by loss of the Government steamer J. Don. Cameron; and

A bill (S. No. 307) for the relief of L. C. Cantwell.

REPEAL OF DUTY ON SALT.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a privileged report.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the question recurs on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill for the repeal of the duty on salt.

The SPEAKER stated that by the sound two-thirds did not seem to vote in favor of the suspension of the rules.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 115, nays 116, not voting 60; as follows:

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended and the bill was not passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. REED, of Maine. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MULDROW. My colleague, Mr. MANNING, is absent on account of sickness in his family. If he were present, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ELAM. I am paired with Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. I am paired with Mr. RYAN, of Kansas.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, who is absent on account of sickness. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. MANNING, of Mississippi; but I am assured he would vote in the affirmative, and I therefore record my vote.

Mr. HARMER. Mr. BINGHAM is paired with Mr. KING, of Louisiana.

Mr. HENKLE. Mr. TALBOTT is detained unavoidably from the sitting of the House.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. FINLEY, is paired with Mr. BRIGGS, of New Hampshire.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

HONG-KONG CONSULATE.

Mr. HUNTON entered a motion to reconsider the vote taken this morning in reference to the consulate at Hong-Kong; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES B. WELCH.

On motion of Mr. FISHER, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was discharged from the further consideration of papers in reference to the bill (H. R. No. 201) for the relief of John B. Welch; and the same were referred to the Committee of Claims.

HARBOR AT DELAWARE BREAKWATER.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The effect of that motion will be to take this over to Monday next.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be removed from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater and the entrance thereto and in the main ship-channel of the Delaware Bay and River several vessels which were sunk in the year 1877, and now forming obstructions endangering the safety of vessels entering said harbor; and the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, there should be inserted in that bill a clause providing for giving reasonable notice to the owners of said vessels to remove the same. I do not think the Government should assume the liability of removing these vessels until such notice has been given to their owners.

Mr. O'NEILL. There may be some difficulty in finding some of these owners. The bill is just, however, and should be passed.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. In response to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, I have only to say that I imagine there never will be any claim made against the Government of the United States on the part of the owners of these vessels.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Then why not accept the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I have no objection to accept the amendment if that will secure the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Then I suggest the insertion of the words "that reasonable notice shall be given to the owners of these vessels to remove the same."

Mr. REAGAN. That does not remove the difficulty. There must be authority given to the Government. After notice has been given these vessels must be declared derelict so as to avoid any claim on the part of their owners.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, these vessels were sunk three or four years ago in the main channel of the harbor at the Delaware breakwater, and they have ever since been subjected to the action of the water and the ravages of insects until they have now become utterly worthless hulks. These hulks obstruct the entrance to that important harbor, upon which the Government of the United States has expended over $3,000,000 in its construction. The number of vessels and the value of the commerce making use of this harbor are enormous, and unless steps be taken at once to remove these obstructions the expenditure hitherto made from the Treasury might as well have been thrown into the sea.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FORT. This bill should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. It has been already before the Committee on Commerce. It passed this House and the Senate in the Forty-fifth Congress, but was, through some inadvertence, dropped out of the conference report adopted at that time. The United States Engineer reports that unless this work of removing these obstructions is done immediately the harbor will become valueless.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Delaware to accept the modification suggested by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Certainly, if that is the only objection to the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise for the purpose of suggesting that the provision be extended so that notice shall be given that if the owners of these wrecks do not raise them the Government will raise them and sell what is reclaimed.

Mr. CONGER. I move to insert the words "after reasonable notice to the owners of such vessels to remove the same."

The SPEAKER. Those words will be inserted as a modification of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. The object of giving notice is that if the owners do not remove the vessels then the Government shall treat them as derelict property, and become the owner of them when they are raised.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I call for the regular order of business.

The rules were suspended, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, and the bill was passed.

And then, on motion of Mr. BLOUNT, (at four o'clock and two minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 13, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WILLIAM PINKNEY WHYTE, a Senator from the State of Maryland, appeared in his seat to-day.

EULOGIES ON SENATOR CHANDLER.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, I desire to state that it was my expectation to ask the Senate to set apart Thursday of this week for the delivery of eulogies upon the life and character of my late colleague, Zachariah Chandler. To meet the convenience and request of several gentlemen who desire to participate, the time will be deferred. I will at an early period ask the Senate to designate some other day for the eulogies to be delivered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting letters from the First Assistant Postmaster-General, the superintendent of the money-order system, the disbursing clerk, and the superintendent of the Post-Office Department, recommending an appropriation of $101,036.30 to cover various specified deficiencies in the appropriations for that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, calling the attention of Congress to an extract from a report of the Adjutant-General, recommending that the appropriation "for the purpose of examining the rebel archives and having copies furnished for the Government" be increased; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLISON presented the memorial of A. J. Cottrell and others, soldiers of the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of C. W. Hill and others, citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Samuel Moore, late a private in Company A, Thirty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Iowa, officially signed, representing a membership of six thousand, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of L. D. White and others, citizens and business men of Quincy, Illinois, praying for a reduction of the duty on zinc; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of Thomas W. Lang, James Chestnut, and 158 other citizens of South Carolina, praying an appropriation to remove obstructions in and to straighten the channel of the Wateree River, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I present a petition of citizens of the State and city of New York, praying the passage of the joint resolution pending before a committee of this body which provides that after its passage United States Treasury notes shall not be a legal tender in payment of private debts. This petition, as I have had the names counted, is signed by over fifteen hundred individuals and firms. The petitioners are of all classes of our citizens, I believe. It is signed by Lucius Robinson, the late governor; by Sanford E. Church, the chief-justice, and other justices, of both political parties, of the court of appeals, and by citizens engaged in various kinds of business, and who are interested in almost all our varied business industries. They represent, I believe, largely all classes of our people, and nearly all the business industries of our State. Indeed I think I may state that this petition represents the views of a majority of the citizens of the State of New York, and of its great commercial city. The memorialists are of the two principal political parties. They state in substance in this memorial that they believe the measure referred to if enacted into a law would encourage every legitimate business enterprise; would revive confidence in permanent investments, give extended employment to laborers in all industrial pursuits, and secure them a just reward for their toil; and that it would be a sheet-anchor to stability in every department of business, and discourage that spirit of uncertainty which breeds disastrous fluctuations in prices. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance, and I ask for it that consideration which it seems to me the character of the signers of all classes entitles it to receive.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I present the petition of Emory Temple and 77 others, citizens of the State of Delaware; the petition of John A. Casender and 25 others, citizens of Kent County, Delaware, and the petition of D. J. Cummins and 35 others, citizens of Kent County, Delaware, to the same effect as that just presented by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.] I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE presented the petition of J. N. Sawyer and others, citizens of Galveston, Texas, praying for the passage of an act to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONAS presented the petition of the president and directors of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, praying for the passage of a law reducing the duty on imported steel rails; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of Mrs. Julia G. Tyler, widow of Ex-President Tyler, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, to accompany the bill (S. No. 992) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, widow of Ex-President Tyler.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of William Green and other citizens of Manor Dale, Pennsylvania, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CARPENTER presented the petition of J. A. Watrous and W. A. Gordon, representing the Temple of Honor of Wisconsin, consisting of eight thousand members, praying for a national commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to public revenue and taxation, to crime, pauperism, the public health, morals, education, and the general welfare of the people, and also the results of license, restrictive, and prohibitory legislation in the several States and in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FERRY. I present a like petition on the subject of the liquor traffic from the Pennsylvania State Temperance Union, signed by James Black, president. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present a like petition on the subject of the liquor traffic, signed by the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of Massachusetts, representing eleven hundred and fifty-four members, which I move be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a similar petition from the New Jersey State Temperance Alliance, signed by the president and secretary, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of Helen M. Fiedler, widow and executrix of Ernest Fiedler, late a citizen of the city of New York, praying Congress to constrain the government of Brazil to make compensation for the charter of the steamer Circassian in 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of James Brown and others, citizens of North Branch, Kansas, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FARLEY presented the petition of William Evans, formerly a seaman on the ship Sonora when captured by the Alabama, praying to be allowed compensation for the loss of his property and time in consequence of that capture; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANSOM presented a petition from the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of North Carolina, officially signed, representing four thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of John P. Wall, mayor, and the councilmen of the town of Tampa, Florida, praying Congress to make an appropriation for the purpose of deepening and cleaning out the channel leading from the mouth of Hillsborough River into the bay of the same name at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of Henry M. Philler and others, members of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of the State of Pennsylvania, numbering forty-five hundred and seventy-five members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM. I present a like petition of the Union Temple of Honor and Temperance of Minnesota, officially signed, representing sixty members. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration the bill (S. No. 619) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas, and have instructed me to report it with an amendment. If I can be indulged, I ask that it may be considered now.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be reported for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. MORRILL. I dare say the bill is all right, but it is clearly not such a bill as ought to pass upon the immediate report of a committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It ought to go on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to state for the information of the Senator from Vermont that this bill was drawn by the Secretary of the Interior, or under his direction.

Mr. MORRILL. No matter by whom drawn, we ought to have time to look it over and see what it is.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 942) releasing the title of the United States in a certain parcel of land to the assigns of John Cutler, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of Lansford P. Yandell and others, sureties on the bond of Henry L. Norvell, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Tennessee, praying to be relieved from liability as such sureties, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1004) for the relief of the sureties of Henry L. Norvell.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1307) to establish a land district in the Territory of Dakota, and locating the office at Grand Forks, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 6) to establish a land district in Jamestown, in the Territory of Dakota, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 142) for the relief of John M. McClintock, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 216) to extend the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, have instructed me to report it adversely. I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] to this report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland desire the bill to be placed on the Calendar?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

MILLERS' INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. BAYARD. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 931) to admit free of duty all articles intended for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition of milling and mill machinery, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, commencing May 31, 1880, have instructed me to report it without amendment, and I am instructed to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the millers' international exhibition of milling and mill machinery, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, commencing May 31, 1880, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. But all such articles as shall be sold in the United States or withdrawn for consumption therein at any time after such importation shall be subject to the duties imposed on like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation. In case any articles thus imported shall be sold or withdrawn for consumption without payment of duty as required by law, all the penalties prescribed by law shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may make such sale or withdrawal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, George T. Rogers, Benjamin P. Gaines, and Charles Ford.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) touching the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin and Andrew F. Slade; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CARPENTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1005) for the relief of the widow and children of Dr. Lemuel H. Draper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1006) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1007) to provide for the payment of certain expenses of the district judge of the western judicial district of Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAIR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1008) for the relief of William A. Winder; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1009) for the relief of Richard Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1010) regulating the authentication and use of proxies in meetings of shareholders in national banking associations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1011) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1012) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1013) for the relief of William Henry Ward; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1014) in relation to telegraphic communications; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1015) for the relief of Silas F. Feild, one of the sureties on the bond of John G. Halliburton, deceased, late marshal of the United States in and for the eastern district of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1016) authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Drs. Thomas Owens and William Martin for assistant surgeons in the Navy not in the line of promotion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRUCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1017) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Robinson, late commissary-sergeant First Regiment United States Colored Troops; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1018) to establish an additional land district in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1019) to prohibit clerks of the Federal courts from collecting fees in any common-law action for copying the papers filed in such cause in a book styled "The Final Record," and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1020) for the relief of B. F. Rockefellow; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 62) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a sum of money heretofore appropriated for the erection of a storehouse and depot building at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. WITHERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the post-route bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of John L. Williams be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the matter of Senate bill No. 3, third session, Forty-fifth Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the heirs of John Rice Jones be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of George Wright be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That the papers in regard to the claim of Eliza Howard Powers be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mrs. Thomas Hendrickson and her petition for a pension be withdrawn from the files, to be referred to the Commissioner of Pensions, in accordance with the report of the Committee on Pensions touching such petition.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, George T. Rogers, Benjamin P. Gaines, and Charles Ford was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire as to the practicability of refunding any part of the outstanding national debt at a less rate than 4 per cent. interest; and also as to whether or not more effective provisions can be made by which bona fide subscriptions for sums in moderate amounts may be made available; and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give notice that day after to-morrow, Thursday, immediately after the morning business, I shall seek the floor to submit some remarks on the resolution. I move that it lie on the table for the present, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CRAFTS J. WRIGHT.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 752.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 752) granting an increase of pension to Crafts J. Wright. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Crafts J. Wright, late colonel Thirteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteers, a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that which he now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT put the question, and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for a division upon the motion to go into executive session. We are not through with the morning business, and I hope we shall not go into executive session until that is concluded.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. No debate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest if the Senator from Missouri merely wants to make a report——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am making a suggestion, which I think will let us out of the difficulty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont objects to debate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If there is objection that ends it; but my suggestion would have removed the difficulty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called.) I beg leave to state that my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] has been called home by a severe family affliction and is unable to be present. On all political questions he is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Carpenter,	Hoar,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Ingalls,	Saunders,
Baldwin,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Sharon,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Voorhees,
Bruce,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Wallace,
Burnside,	Garland,	McPherson,	Windom,
Butler,	Hamlin,	Paddock,	Withers.

NAYS—25.

Bailey,	Hereford,	Maxey,	Vest,
Bayard,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Beck,	Johnston,	Plumb,	Whyte,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jonas,	Slater,	Williams.
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Teller,
Davis of W. Va.,	Kernan,	Thurman,
Groome,	McDonald,	Vance,

ABSENT—22.

Blaine,	Eaton,	Hill of Colorado,	Platt,
Booth,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Randolph,
Call,	Gordon,	Kellogg,	Ransom,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Lamar,	Saulsbury.
Coke,	Hampton,	Morgan,
Conkling,	Harris,	Morrill,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN OHIO.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask the Senator from Delaware to yield to me to have considered a bill which is merely a local matter.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, to strike out "Tuscarawas" from the list of counties proposed to be transferred to the southern district of Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 4, to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty" before "counties," as the number of counties to constitute the eastern division of the southern district, and in line 7 to strike out "Scioto" and "Lawrence" from the list of counties constituting that division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, to strike out all after the first word, "all," in the following words:

Offenses committed in either of the subdivisions shall be cognizable and indictable within said division.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of the subdivisions shall be cognizable within such division; and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed within either of said counties taken as aforesaid from the northern district, or committed in the southern district as hitherto constituted, shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio what disposition is made with reference to the clerks of the courts.

Mr. THURMAN. The bill adds no clerks at all, and no officer of any kind or description.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill makes provision for courts to be held at Columbus. Is the clerk of the present circuit court to act as clerk of the circuit court sitting there?

Mr. THURMAN. The clerk of the circuit court simply acts by deputy there. The clerk is authorized to appoint deputies now, as many as he pleases.

Mr. ALLISON. And the clerk of the district court the same?

Mr. THURMAN. The clerk of the district court the same.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMANUEL KLAUSER.

Mr. BAYARD. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Delaware will withdraw that motion. I am satisfied that the Senate is not quite so completely exhausted in the consideration of business that it is not able to take up and dispose of some of the work of its committees. There is now on the Calendar Senate bill No. 368, for the relief of a soldier from Illinois. It passed in the Forty-fourth Congress through the Senate; it passed in the Forty-fifth Congress through the Senate; it is now upon the Calendar of the Forty-sixth Congress. I had some hope that we might get it through in time this Congress for consideration in the House. If the Senator from Delaware will withdraw his motion I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill comes up as a matter of course. No motion is necessary, it being on the Calendar of General Orders and its consideration called for when nothing else is pending.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 368) for the relief of Emanuel Klauser. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of mutiny against Emanuel Klauser, late corporal Company H, Fifty-fourth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER MEAGHER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 401) for the relief of Peter Meagher, who is now an infirm soldier in the Soldiers' Home here. The bill provides that he shall receive a slight compensation for services performed in Florida in unloading a large quantity of coal from naval vessels.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add:

In full compensation for the services of himself, and of Louis Helt, Victor Helmkamph, William M. Kinsman, James Riley, Edward F. Riley, F. Richards, and Charles Wilber.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Peter Meagher, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $170 for labor performed in unloading coal from the schooners My Rover, Althea, and Jonathan May, and the bark David G. Wilson, at Long Key, Tortugas, Florida, in full compensation for the services of himself, and of Louis Helt, Victor Helmkamph, William M. Kinsman, James Riley, Edward F. Riley, F. Richards, and Charles Wilber.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the report read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL December 16, 1879:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 401) for the relief of Peter Meagher, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

In the Forty-fifth Congress a bill (H. R. No. 4419) precisely similar to the present bill was passed by the House of Representatives and reported to the Senate, where no final action was had upon it. In the House of Representatives, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, the report No. 634, made on the then pending bill, was as follows, to wit:

"It appears from the facts presented and the correspondence hereto annexed that Peter Meagher was a sergeant in Company M, First United States Artillery, in the year 1861; was stationed at Fort Jefferson, Florida. That in the months of June, July, and August of said year several vessels arrived at the post, under charter from the Navy Department, loaded with coal for the use of the Navy; that no provision had been made for unloading these vessels, and no laborers could be obtained except from the troops. Major Arnold, then commanding the post, entered into an arrangement with the said Peter Meagher, promising extra pay to himself and such soldiers of the command as would volunteer, when off duty, to unload these vessels.

"It is shown that the work was executed by these men in a satisfactory manner, and a correct account kept and rendered for the time occupied for performing the same. The rolls show that Peter Meagher was employed thirty-seven and one-half days, at $2 per day; that he employed a number of men to assist at $1 per day, and that he paid the following-named laborers, as per accompanying vouchers, namely:

Louis Helt, 8 days, at $1 per day	$8 00
Victor Helmkamph, 8¾ days, at $1 per day	8 75
William M. Kinsman, 12¾ days, at $1 per day	12 75
James Riley, 5½ days, at $1 per day	5 50
Edward F. Riley, 25½ days, at $1 per day	25 50
French Richards, 20 days, at $1 per day	20 00
Charles Wilber, 14½ days, at $1 per day	14 50
Total paid out	95 00
Due Peter Meagher for 37½ days, at $2 per day	75 00
Total amount due	170 00

"That the foregoing account is correct; that the services were performed with the advice of Major Louis G. Arnold, commanding Fort Jefferson; that it was impossible to procure other laborers at the time to perform this work; that the men were promised pay for the work done; and that the above amount, under the arrangement made between Major Arnold and Peter Meagher, is fairly due to the men who performed this work is beyond reasonable doubt.

"Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill."

In the Forty-fifth Congress, Mr. COCKRELL, to whom the case was referred, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, and received the following reply:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, February 18, 1879.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing H. R. No. 4419, for the relief of Peter Meagher, and the report of the House Naval Committee thereon, and requesting such information as the Department may be able to furnish in relation to the claim of Meagher.

"In 1876, Mr. Meagher presented his claim to the Department, and with it such evidence as he had in his possession in support thereof. The files and records were examined for the purpose of confirming or refuting his statements, but very little was found to throw any light on the subject. It was ascertained that in the months of May and June, 1861, that cargoes of coal (1,358 tons) were shipped from Philadelphia to Tortugas, for the naval service, and duly receipted for by Lieutenant Benson, of the Army, stationed there.

"This is believed to be the coal for which Meagher claims compensation for unloading.

"The proofs presented, and subsequently withdrawn by him, were not such as to warrant the Department in paying the claim, especially as it was one of fifteen years' standing, and the appropriations from which the money could have been taken were long since exhausted.

"He renewed his claim in 1877, and the Department, on the 24th of November of that year, wrote him that it could only pay out money as the law directs; that is, for necessary work done by order of naval officers; that when work was done without such order and it was necessary for the Government, it was a charge against the United States and not the Navy Department; that the remedy was in the hands of Congress, which would provide for the payment of said bills when they were shown to be right.

"The Naval Committee of the House have examined the facts and correspondence presented to them, and seem to be satisfied of the correctness of the account, and recommend the passage of the bill.

"I am unable to present anything from the records which would aid the Claims Committee of the Senate in determining its course of action.

"The claimant had the appearance and bearing of a man of truth and honesty.

"I inclose a copy of the opinion of the late Naval Solicitor, John A. Bolles, dated March 1, 1876, in the case, by which the Department was mainly governed in its refusal to pay the claim.

"Very respectfully,

"R. W. THOMPSON,
"Secretary of the Navy.

"Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
"Committee on Claims, United States Senate."

Your committee have carefully examined the facts in the case and find the foregoing report substantially correct, and find that Peter Meagher, the claimant, is entitled in his own right to $75 for 37½ days' work at $2 per day, and as assignee of Lewis Helt for 8 days, and of Victor Helmkamph for 8¾ days, and of William M. Kinsman 12¾ days, and of James Riley 5½ days, and of Edward F. Riley 25½ days, and of F. Richards for 20 days, and of Charles Wilber 14½ days, being 95 days in all, at $1 per day, is entitled to $95, making, in all, $170.

Your committee recommend the adding of the following words at the end of said bill: "In full compensation for the services of himself and of Louis Helt, Victor Helmkamph, William M. Kinsman, James Riley, Edward F. Riley, F. Richards, and Charles Wilber," and, as amended, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that there is a matter which is of some moment and on which action failed to be had in the executive session, and I move that for a few moments now the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, as I see the Senate is determined to adjourn very soon any way, and I think in a moment the business that is desired to be transacted can be disposed of in executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 13, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. GARFIELD. I find that in the list of yeas and nays on the Journal, on the motion yesterday to suspend the rules and pass the bill for the repeal of the duty on salt, I am recorded as not voting. I wish the correction to be made. I voted against the motion.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] who is confined to his room by sickness, requests me to state that if he had been present yesterday he would have voted in favor of the bill repealing the duty on salt.

Mr. NICHOLLS. My colleagues from Georgia, Mr. SMITH and Mr. PERSONS, were absent on important business yesterday when the vote was taken on the bill to repeal the duty on salt. Had they been present, they would have voted in the affirmative.

The Journal of yesterday was then approved.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION IN ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] who had leave to report at any time from the Committee on Public Lands the Senate joint resolution touching the Hot Springs reservation, claims that right now.

Mr. CONVERSE. I report back from the Public Lands Committee the Senate joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) touching the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, with the recommendation that the same do pass. I demand the previous question.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the time allowed the Secretary of the Interior to instruct the United States land officers at Little Rock, Arkansas, under section 10 of the act of March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas," be extended for the period of sixty days from the passage of this resolution, and all further proceedings under said act be suspended until that time.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FURNITURE OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] desires to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations touching the comfort of members. The Chair takes leave to recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for furniture and repairs of the same for the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. I ask that the bill be read, and also the accompanying letter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $4,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to meet the deficiency in the appropriation for furniture and repairs of the same for the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

The Clerk read the letter of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1880.

SIR: The recent changes made in the rooms and apartments belonging to the House of Representatives has rendered necessary the fitting up and refurnishing of a number of additional rooms, and therefore requires a larger expenditure than usual for "furniture and repairs of same."

The amount appropriated for that purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, is now well nigh exhausted, and it is estimated that an additional sum of $5,000 will be required to meet the demands of the House in this regard during balance of the present fiscal year.

The House on the 19th of December last, by resolution, directed that the lobby and corridor in rear of the Hall of the House should be at once furnished. A number of committees have also asked for additional articles of furniture not yet supplied, and as neither the order of the House nor the wants of the various committees can be attended to in advance of the necessary appropriation, therefore the importance of early provision for the wants of the House in this regard is too apparent for further comment.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

[Amount of bill presented to Clerk for repairs in ventilation of Hall, $736.40, which amount cannot, under section 1876 of Revised Statutes, be paid out of contingent fund.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to state that the appropriation which was made for the purpose indicated in the letter just read was $7,000, being $3,000 less than the amount which has been usual for a great many years. I mention this as a reason additional to those which have been stated by the Clerk.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3497) was received, read three times, and passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WORKS FOR COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a report from the Committee of Ways and Means. I am instructed by that committee to report the resolution which I send to the desk and to ask for its adoption. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Librarian of Congress be directed to purchase such works on finance and political economy as may be directed by the Committee of Ways and Means, to be kept in the room of said committee, at a cost not to exceed $500 and to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SAMFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama object to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. SAMFORD. My objection is to its passage.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman cannot object to its introduction, because the committee has the right to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, on that subject; but the gentleman from Alabama does not object to its introduction.

Mr. SAMFORD. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not do so at the time. Still, if the gentleman states that he intended his objection to be to the introduction of the resolution, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a very brief statement. The Committee of Ways and Means has before them the whole question of tariff and of internal-revenue taxation, and it is almost impossible for that committee, with justice to other members of the House, to get proper access even to such books on the subject as are in the library. It is a want which has been long felt by all previous committees, and it is especially felt by this committee, who expect to go pretty fully into that class of subjects, and they feel that they ought to have at their command and at their disposition a class of books covering the statistics of finance and political economy, and the whole subject of tariff and taxation. They ask the House, therefore, to order the purchase, to the amount of $500, of books, which shall be the property of the library, and under the control of the librarian, except to this extent: that they shall be deposited in the Committee of Ways and Means, but marked and stamped as library property. It is a proposition that seems to me to be in the interest of good and intelligent law-making, and it is the unanimous request of the Committee of Ways and Means that this be done.

Mr. SAMFORD. I would not be understood as making any objection to this resolution, because it may be necessary; but the purpose of my objection is this: we have just passed a joint resolution appropriating $4,000 as a deficiency to supply the contingent fund of the House that was rendered necessary because of the frequent appropriations made out of the contingent fund of the House. My objection was to the appropriation of this amount until there shall be a fund to pay it. The object of the resolution may be very proper; I do not know anything about it; but having had to appropriate a few moments ago $4,000 to supply a deficiency in the contingent fund of the House it seems to me that we ought not to pass this resolution with so much rapidity.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Alabama must see that this does not come out of the fund he is referring to. And furthermore, in the next regular appropriation bill the Committee on Appropriations will doubtless make such addition to the contingent fund as will cover the use of this $500, so that it will in no way cripple or interfere with any other interest. If there be no further objection I ask the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SAMFORD. I must insist upon my objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman state that he rose and objected to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. SAMFORD. I state that I rose and objected; and the purpose of my objection was to defeat the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had no right to object to the consideration of the resolution after it is introduced. The right of a single member to object is to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a vote; that will test it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have no objection to its consideration, but I am not willing that it shall pass unanimously.

Mr. BUCKNER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] what is the purpose of the Library of Congress? And having that library, why should any and every committee of this House be supplied with books to enable it to discharge its special duties? I admit that the Committee of Ways and Means is an important committee, but it is not more important than other committees in many respects. If that committee is to have a library for its own use, other committees will call for special libraries, and we will be entering upon an entirely new field of expenditure, and one not at all necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of any committee of this House.

There is a library here now, kept up at large expense, in which is every book published in the United States, and probably all of any importance published in Europe, and several copies of many of those books are in that library. Now, why should we go to the expense of furnishing any particular committee with books which have already been purchased and incorporated in our library, and which are subject to the call of any member or any committee of this House? I think the adoption of such a resolution as this will be entering upon an unnecessary expenditure at this time.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not for the casual reading of a book that the Committee of Ways and Means is asking this. What is wanted is that such provision be made that, in the midst of a discussion upon a tariff bill or a tax bill, in which is needed at the very moment whatever light can be had from the books published upon the subject, especially such works as relate to the practice of other governments, the committee may have at its hand, in its room, ready to be referred to at once, all the facts which can enlighten them at points where otherwise they might make blunders.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] says that these books are already in the Library of Congress. If we should call for any given book from the library it is more than likely that it would have been taken out by some one of the three hundred and odd Members and Delegates of this House or of the seventy-six Senators. If the Committee of Ways and Means is to have proper tools to use on this most delicate and difficult and important subject of taxation, such tools as they can use for the best advantage of the country, then they ought to have a complete "kit of tools," so to speak, at their hands ready for their immediate use.

The Committee on the Judiciary have a much larger set of books and one much more extensive than this which the Committee of Ways and Means now ask for. It would be an outrage that the law committee of the House should not have all the means and appliances which they need to properly discharge their duties.

The Committee of Ways and Means occupies, of course, one field of duty entirely apart from any other and all other fields of legislation of this House. I make this statement of the case, and hope not to detain the House with any extended discussion. If any other gentleman desires to ask any question——

Mr. HOUSE. Has any similar appropriation ever been made for any other committee of this House?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly; for the Committee on the Judiciary.

Now, if I can give any further information upon this subject or any information upon any scientific point, such as "Hyperia in nectocalyx of Abyla pentagona," I will be glad to give it, so far as I am able. [Laughter.] If there be no further inquiry made, I will call the previous question.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can accomplish his purpose only by voting down the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, on a division—ayes 101, noes 53; and the main question was then ordered.

The question was upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BUCKNER and Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, on a division—ayes 32, noes 118; more than one-fifth in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 67, not voting 52; as follows:

So the resolution of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. ARMFIELD, is absent by reason of indisposition, and is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEIFER.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. HAMMOND. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. FORNEY. I am paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. WAIT.

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague, Mr. BACHMAN, is detained at home in consequence of a death in his family.

Mr. BLISS. My colleague, Mr. O'REILLY, is paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED.

Mr. ACKLEN. My colleague, Mr. KING, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. HAMMOND.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. KITCHIN. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ROBERTSON. My colleague, Mr. GIBSON, is paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. JOHNSTON, is absent on account of sickness, and is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT.

Mr. DWIGHT. My colleague from New York, Mr. HAMMOND, is paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. KING.

Mr. HARMER. My colleague, Mr. BINGHAM, is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FINLEY.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL J. WARNER.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3498) to restore Samuel J. Warner, Shelbyville, Tennessee, to the pension-rolls; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CLAIMS AGAINST NICARAGUA.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in relation to the claims of certain citizens against the government of Nicaragua be referred to the Committee of the Whole and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3499) granting relief to Archibald Hunley; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, presented a petition of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, representing over five thousand churches and over half a million of communicants, adopted at Saratoga, New York, with much enthusiasm and officially signed, asking for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

SARATOGA, May 26, 1879.

To the honorable the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America (representing over five thousand churches and over a half a million of communicants) in session at Saratoga Springs, New York, respectfully ask you to provide for the appointment of a commission of inquiry, of five or more competent persons, whose duty it shall be, first, to inquire and take testimony as to the results of the traffic in alcoholic liquors, in connection with crime, pauperism, the public health, the moral, social, and intellectual well-being of the people; second, concerning license and prohibitory legislation in the several States of the Union; and, third, to recommend what additional legislation, if any, would be beneficial on the part of Congress to suppress, in the sphere of national authority, the traffic in alcoholic liquors as beverages.

In behalf of the general assembly,

HENRY H. JESSUP, Moderator.

EDWIN F. HATFIELD,
Stated Clerk.

TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, presented a petition of manufacturers and merchants of the city of New York, in regard to the pressing necessity for legislation whereby the treaty obligations of the United States concerning trade-marks may be given effect; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, manufacturers and merchants of the city of New York, respectfully present this their petition, and pray that the same may be considered at an early day.

They respectfully show that there exists a pressing necessity for legislative action whereby the treaty obligations of the United States concerning trade-marks may be given effect.

The United States have entered into treaties for the protection of commercial marks with France, Great Britain, the German Empire, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, and other nations. By a recent decision of the Supreme Court the acts of Congress which made operative these treaties have been annulled, and the solemn covenants of the nation thus practically ignored. It has, unhappily, become necessary for the United States to open the way to the cancellation of treaties by virtue of which alone our citizens are enabled to protect the reputation of their goods in a number of foreign countries.

The consequences of the perhaps probable abrogation of these treaties would be very prejudicial to the interests of a large number of American citizens; their credit and reputation abroad would be impaired. We fear that unless other laws are enacted by the United States many of the most important markets of Europe and Asia will be thrown open to unlawful competition, to the great and perhaps permanent injury of the American producer and merchant.

The products of the United States are sold in foreign markets chiefly by the names of the manufacturers. This is true of our agricultural implements, sewing-machines, pianos and organs, proprietary medicines, carpets, and other leading articles. To take from the American manufacturer the exclusive right to mark his name upon his goods sold in these markets would be to jeopardize all he has accomplished in the past and to render improbable any future developments. We believe that this very grave contingency is imminent. We pray that it may be averted by the enactment of a law such as will meet the just demands of the nations to whose people the United States have promised reciprocal protection.

We have been advised that it is said in the opinion of the Supreme Court announcing the decision herein referred to that the court wished "to be understood as leaving the whole question of the treaty-making power of the General Government over trade-marks, and the duty of Congress to pass any laws necessary to carry such treaties into effect, untouched." We respectfully show, therefore, that there is probably no constitutional objection to the course we point out.

We earnestly pray that the facts we touch upon may receive the careful consideration which their important bearing upon American commerce demands. We believe it will appear to your honorable bodies that there is great necessity for the action which we respectfully urge. It may seem to the superficial observer that the protection of trade-marks is of inconsiderable moment; but reflection will demonstrate that the right of the manufacturer to identify and individualize his products lies at the root of his success, and that unless he may own and enjoy the exclusive right to use his trade-marks, the loss of his individuality is inevitable.

Considerations of our duty as a nation, too, should move us to take steps to correct what may be interpreted to be a want of appreciation of our responsibilities to other powers. We have promised the commercial nations of the world what we have qualified to their prejudice, and have set aside that which we pledged ourselves to observe.

We respectfully and earnestly pray that such action as is just and reasonable may be speedily taken.

JOSIAH FOLSOM.

Mr. COFFROTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3500) for the relief of Josiah Folsom, of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

W. W. WALDEN.

Mr. ROTHWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3501) to pay W. W. Walden for building destroyed by fire while occupied by United States soldiers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

COMMISSIONERS OF CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3502) extending the jurisdiction of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States, and providing for the more summary conviction of persons guilty of offenses punishable by fines; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent to present certain executive communications for reference to committees.

There was no objection.

PAYMENTS BY SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in reply to a resolution of the House of the 6th instant directing the Secretary of the Treasury to communicate a statement of all moneys paid into the Treasury under the act of June 7, 1872, by the respective shipping commissioners; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

REBEL ARCHIVES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending increase of appropriation for the purpose of examining the rebel archives and having copies furnished for the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SLUICE-WAY AT FALLS OF SAINT ANTHONY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the construction of the sluice-way at the Falls of Saint Anthony; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF RED RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report in relation to the improvement of the Red River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BUILDINGS AT FORT OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates for buildings at Fort Omaha, Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PORT OF SAN DIEGO, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending purchase of site of the port of San Diego, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FORT PREBLE, MAINE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation for the purchase of certain property at Fort Preble, Maine; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

USE OF MAILS FOR LOTTERY PURPOSES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, in reply to a resolution of the House calling for information regarding the use of the mails for lottery purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

POST-OFFICE DEFICIENCY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting estimates of appropriations to supply deficiency in the appropriations for the support of the Post-Office Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LOUISIANA PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report on Louisiana private land claims; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

NAVY DEPARTMENT CONTINGENT FUND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting an account of the expenditures of the contingent fund of that Department for the year ending June 30, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with the requirement of the act of March 3, 1879, transmitting the annual report of operations of the National Board of Health for the past year; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and ordered to be printed.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a list of employés of that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States;

An act (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan; and

An act (S. No. 765) to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, in the following cases:

To Mr. KING, until the 16th instant; and

To Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey, for two weeks, on account of important business.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at one o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., and the first question in order is the unfinished business coming over from the last morning hour, a resolution reported from the Committee on Printing, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the order of the House of March 3, 1879, for the printing of the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, with the accompanying evidence, be executed, and that said report and evidence take their place in the series of reports of committees to the House in the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WILSON. I will submit the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. WILSON. I had yielded the floor to the gentleman from Michigan only for an inquiry. I now claim the floor, and, when the gentleman is aware of the information I desire to give to the House, I think he will desist from all further opposition to the adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia had the floor as he reported the resolution, and was, therefore, in charge of the subject.

Mr. CONGER. I was on the floor and demanded the reading of the paper referred to.

The SPEAKER. And just at that juncture the morning hour expired.

Mr. CONGER. I had the floor and was making that demand. I now demand that the paper be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order: that it is not in order to demand the reading of the paper to be printed. And for this reason the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] on the last meeting of the House reported a resolution for the printing of a new edition of the Revised Statues——

Mr. GARFIELD. We cannot hear.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that the gentlemen from Virginia, at the last meeting of the House, when committees were called, reported a resolution providing for the printing of a copy of the Revised Statutes, a new edition of the Revised Statutes. Now, will any gentleman claim it was the right of any individual member of this House to call for the reading of a book which was to be printed before we could take a vote on the order that it should be printed. Such a thing is unknown in legislative bodies, and would utterly obstruct legislation by placing it in the power of any one member to consume the time of the session in calling for the reading of papers.

The rule is this:

The proposition to be voted on may be read on the demand of any member.

But in this case the proposition to be voted on is the resolution submitted by the committee. That any member has a right to demand the reading of before he can be called upon to vote upon it. But, sir, if we should assume that any member may call for the reading of a paper the printing of which is provided for, then it is in the power of any member to obstruct the business of the House, and to demand the reading of a book of any kind the printing of which may be ordered by a resolution of the House. It is within the province of this House by a majority vote to order that report to be read, but the privilege only goes to the extent of moving that the report itself be read before being printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not be in order to call for the reading of the testimony at all. The point is the same as that made at the time of the electoral commission, and the Chair adheres to the decision then made.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to be heard on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The report is another question.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to raise this point: whether it is necessary to have the report sought to be printed within control of the Clerk.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to know whether that report is in possession of the committee which reports this resolution for the purpose of printing.

Mr. WILSON. It is not. I desire to raise the question now as to whether it is necessary that the report shall be in the custody of the House before its printing can be ordered.

I desire to send to the Clerk's desk to have read——

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman in due time; the gentleman is not suffering at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. I desire to send to the Clerk's desk——

Mr. CONGER. I am not suffering at all, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. I did not use the expression in any disrespectful way.

Mr. CONGER. I presume not.

The SPEAKER. But in a proper spirit. The Chair meant that the gentleman should not lose any right he had to be heard.

Mr. CONGER. I simply wish to know whether the point of order was raised in reference to the testimony.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that it was not competent for a member to demand the reading of the testimony. The question as to the reading of the report has not yet been decided. The gentleman from Illinois did not raise that point but rather believed, or expressed the belief, that it was competent to call for the reading of the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; my objection went to the reading of the report as well as the reading of the evidence. The only paper the reading of which can be demanded is the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes a request to know of the gentleman from West Virginia whether the report is in possession of the committee.

Mr. WILSON. In answer to that question, and giving the House further information, I desire to have read the dispatch which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is in response to a telegram I sent to Mr. Glover, on Thursday of last week, informing him that I believe his report would be printed if it were here.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask an answer to my question.

Mr. WILSON. It is not in the possession of the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. It is a simple question and only requires an answer yes or no.

Mr. WILSON. Let the Clerk read the dispatch.

The Clerk read as follows:

LA GRANGE, MISSOURI, January 9, 1880.

To Hon. BENJAMIN WILSON,
Washington, D. C.:
Have ordered report sent from New York to Washington.
JOHN M. GLOVER.

Mr. WILSON. I desire now to have read a letter of the file clerk.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman answer one question which I wish to put to him? Why was this report sent to New York.

Mr. WILSON. I have no idea.

Mr. ACKLEN. It was printed in the New York Sun. Did it not appear in the New York Sun—appear there in full with the heading and title of the House of Representatives and number attached?

Mr. WILSON. I understand the report, or part of it, was published in the New York papers during the last year. I desire further to say there has been considerable clamor throughout the country on the part of the press to have this report printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from West Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest to the gentleman from West Virginia that he withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays and let a motion be made to recommit this resolution to the Committee on Printing. It is evident from the statement of the gentleman and the telegram he has had read at the desk that this report, the printing of which he has asked for, is not now and never has been in the custody of a committee of this House or of any officer of this House. If the gentleman from West Virginia will now withdraw his demand for the previous question I will move to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WILSON. I shall do so in the event it shall be held by the Chair that the order to print the paper cannot be made in the absence of the paper itself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not called on to rule on any such question. That is a matter for the House to judge, whether they will order a paper to be printed which is not in their possession. The Chair declines to rule on any such point as that.

Mr. WILSON. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair stated that I would be protected in my rights; and I expected with a great deal of confidence that the Chair would permit me to be heard on the point of order before putting the question.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the call for the previous question at the instance of gentlemen all around who are favorable to printing the report if we can get it here. They express the opinion that it should be under the control of the House when the order to print shall be made.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from West Virginia withdraws the call for the yeas and nays the Chair will then be bound to recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WILSON. I do not withdraw the call for the previous question except to let the gentleman from Kentucky make his motion.

Several MEMBERS. You cannot withdraw it conditionally.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. When the proposition was made in the Forty-fifth Congress to print this report, it was made in a manner which was very peculiar, as will appear if the matter is ever discussed in this House. It was made in a kind of surreptitious manner. I moved under the rules, as I had the right to do, to reconsider the vote by which the report was ordered to be printed, and that motion was pending when the life of the Forty-fifth Congress expired. The report therefore was not in fact ordered to be printed by that Congress. It was not then in the possession of that Congress, as the report of the statements made at the time will show. It has never been in the possession of Congress. It has never been reported to Congress. It has never been read by its title. It never has been read by any member of the Forty-fifth or the Forty-sixth Congress, unless what may have been published in the newspapers be that report, and members may have read it there.

Now my point is that Congress has not that paper; that there is no such paper upon which this House can act; that no such document has ever been referred to a committee of this Congress; and the gentleman who reports from a committee that some document be printed stands in his place here and says that he has not the document; that he never had it; that he never has seen it; and that the only knowledge he has of it is by a telegram that somewhere between New York and the capital such a document may be passing.

This House, then, is asked to vote that a paper which never had existence as a document belonging to any Congress be printed. I insist, sir, that the Chair cannot entertain the motion to print the document until it is presented to this House, that I may see it, that others may see it, that it may be read by its title, that it may be known what is to be printed. I ask, therefore, that the report be read. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the very rules reported by the Committee on Rules, designating a different course from that heretofore observed in regard to the reading of documents, recognize the fact, as it has always been recognized by the Chair heretofore, that if called for a report which it is sought to print must be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not decided anything else.

Mr. CONGER. I know that, but I am speaking to my demand that the report be read; not the testimony, but the report which is asked to be printed here. I am astonished that there should be found members of this House who will claim that any unknown document, never in the possession of the House, never in the possession of a committee of the House, and never in the possession of a member of this House, on motion may be ordered to be printed for any purpose. If it may be, all the old safeguards that have been thrown around the printing, even the reports of committees, are thrown aside.

I have no remarks to make upon the report or upon its substance, its form or its manner. I leave that to others who may be familiar with its contents. But I stand upon this proposition, that this House, and I as a member of this House, shall not be called under the operation of the previous question or in any other manner to vote money to print a report of the existence of which we only have hearsay knowledge and hearsay testimony.

Now, having said this I have said all I feel called on to say in support of my proposition and my demand that the report of a committee asked to be printed shall be read. That has always been the practice of the House, and if I recollect aright it has been the ruling of the present Speaker that such testimony shall be submitted to the House before he can rule directly upon it. That is all I have asked. The report cannot be read because the gentleman reporting this resolution says he has it not in his possession; the committee has not the report, has never had it, has never even seen it.

What is to be printed under this order, should it be made? What is there in the report? What check is there upon printing any amount of matter that may be incorporated into anything that hereafter may be called a report, ordered to be printed, unless it can be put into the possession of the House, given to the Clerk, and have the proper indicia placed upon it, so as to identify the papers and show the order of the House?

Mr. WILSON. It is proper that I should make this remark in vindication of the Committee on Printing: we were not called upon to examine this report nor to read the evidence accompanying it. We found that a previous Congress had made an order to print what is commonly known as the "Glover report." That order, as I understand, was defeated by a motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to reconsider the vote ordering the printing. The Clerk held, and I believe very properly, that that motion to reconsider held up the printing of the report.

Now, all that the Committee on Printing was called upon to do was to direct that the former order of the House in this respect should be executed. No gentleman on the floor of the House asked us to read the report. It was not contemplated in the resolution that we should do that. We did all that was expected of us, all that we could do, when we reported the resolution which we have reported.

Mr. HAYES. This is the celebrated "Glover report," that we have heard so much about. I desire to ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] two or three questions in regard to this matter. The first is, whether this report has ever been before the Committee on Printing, if it has ever been in the possession of the Committee on Printing?

Mr. WILSON. I have never seen it, and the letter from the Clerk, which has been read, indicates that it never was in possession of the Clerk of the House.

Mr. HAYES. What purports to be this report was printed in the New York Sun. I want to ask the gentleman if the report, as printed in the New York Sun, is the report which he proposes shall be printed for the use of the House?

Mr. WILSON. I do not know, sir.

Mr. HAYES. Another question. In reply to a question propounded by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] the other day, the gentleman from West Virginia said that, so far as he knew and to the best of his knowledge and belief, this report was the same that was offered to this House in the Forty-fifth Congress. Now I want to ask the gentleman if he has examined the report that he now proposes to have printed, if he has ever compared it with the report that was presented to the Forty-fifth Congress?

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] does not ask that question in order to obtain any information for himself; it is in order to obtain information for others, perhaps.

Mr. HAYES. It is for the information of the House.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman knows as well as he knows any fact, because I have told him so repeatedly, that this report has never been before our committee; I have never seen it. I suppose it is the same report that was submitted to this House in the Forty-fifth Congress. I cannot imagine that Mr. Glover or any other gentleman would tamper with the report.

Mr. HAYES. I asked the question for this reason: I have it on very reliable authority, on authority that is sufficient to convince me that the statement is true, (and, besides that, I find that a large proportion of gentlemen on this side of the House believe it,) that very important portions of this report have been eliminated; very important parts of it have been cut out. And if I am permitted to make the statement, I will say that such testimony comes to me from gentlemen who have examined the report and know all about it. And there is other testimony to the effect that the report the printing of which is now asked for by the gentleman from West Virginia is not by any means the same report which was presented to this House in the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to that motion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will hear the amendment read, but I do not yield to have it offered. I desire to call the previous question on my motion to recommit.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the amendment I propose be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And that the Committee on Printing be directed to inquire how this House and the committee which made the report in this case lost possession of this report, who now has possession of it, and how that possession was obtained, and to report the facts to this House.

Mr. HAYES. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am willing to admit that amendment, and I call the previous question on my motion as modified.

The motion to recommit, with instructions as read, was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2170) to provide for the election of a Congressional Printer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Senate shall elect some competent person, who shall be a practical printer, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office.

SEC. 2. That the person so elected shall be deemed an officer of the Senate, and shall be designated "Congressional Printer." He shall superintend the printing and binding of the Journals and such other documents as shall be ordered by each House of Congress, and shall superintend the execution of all the printing and binding for the respective Departments of the Government now required by law to be executed at the Government Printing Office, and shall, in all respects, be governed by the laws in force in relation to the Public Printer and the execution of the printing and binding.

SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act, and the election of a Congressional Printer in pursuance thereof, the office of Public Printer shall be abolished; and the salary of the said officer shall be at the rate of $3,600 a year.

SEC. 4. That as soon as practicable after the election of said Congressional Printer, he shall cause to be prepared a complete invoice of all the material, type, presses, leather, paper, utensils, fixtures, furniture, stock, horses, wagons, carriages, harnesses, and personal property of every description whatever under his charge and belonging to the Government; said invoice shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the Congressional Printer, reported to Congress, and printed. And thereafter, at the beginning of each fiscal year, or as soon thereafter as practicable, he shall cause a new inventory of all of the said personal property then in his possession to be taken. Said inventory shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the Congressional Printer, and published as a part of his annual report to Congress.

SEC. 5. This act to take effect from and after the date of its passage.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONGER. My point of order is that this bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, as it creates an office and makes provision to pay the salary of such officer.

Mr. WILSON. If the Chair shall be of opinion that the creation of the office of Congressional Printer makes this bill liable to a point of order——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman speak in contravention of that point of order.

Mr. WILSON. The chairman of the Committee on Printing, the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] is not in this city. Without discussing the point of order, I am willing that this bill shall be postponed to some future day and until the chairman of the committee shall return. I prefer to have a day fixed for its consideration. I have conferred with the Clerk and find that the first Thursday in February has not been assigned for the consideration of any bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] now asks unanimous consent that the first Thursday in February be assigned for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. Let the point of order be settled first.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say a word upon the point of order. The point is, as I understand, that this bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole for the reason that it creates a new office, which involves an expenditure of money out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. And provides for the payment of money out of the Treasury. That is the point.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does it appropriate money? I do not understand that it does. I would like to have the provision of the bill on that subject read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act and the election of a Congressional Printer in pursuance thereof, the office of Public Printer shall be abolished; and the salary of the said officer shall be at the rate of $3,600 a year.

Mr. SPRINGER. Rule 112, under which this point is raised, provides that—

All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property or requiring appropriations to be made or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in the Committee of the Whole House.

Now, this bill does neither of these things.

The SPEAKER. Does it not require an appropriation of money?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not. It does not make any appropriation.

Mr. HAYES. How will the Congressional Printer get his salary, unless the money be appropriated for the purpose?

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill proposes to abolish one office, and provides that the salary now paid to the incumbent of that office shall be paid to another officer. It makes no appropriation at all, but the appropriation heretofore made for the payment of the Public Printer will inure to the incumbent of the new office. The money is already appropriated till the end of the present fiscal year for the payment of the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Even in that view of the case, would not the bill authorize money to be taken out of an appropriation already made?

Mr. SPRINGER. The appropriation for the payment of the Public Printer is already made.

Mr. HAYES. But not for the payment of a Congressional Printer.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill makes no appropriation. The creating of a new office without appropriating any salary therefor does not bring the provision within the rule. We cannot pass any law that does not involve an expenditure of money. Even the printing of the enactment in the Revised Statutes requires an expenditure of money. Will any gentleman say that we must consider a bill in Committee of the Whole House simply because it involves an expenditure of money? That is not the object of this rule. The object is that appropriation bills proper—general appropriation bills—bills appropriating money or requiring money to be appropriated, shall receive their first consideration in a Committee of the Whole House. The rule does not affect general legislation which simply involves expenditures in the future.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois himself has over and over again made the point of order in exactly the present form—that the bill creates an office, provides for a payment out of the Treasury from appropriations already made, and thus "touches the appropriation of money" as provided for in the rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair is mistaken in the statement that I have made points of order similar to that which I am now contesting.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman say for an instant that this is not a bill "touching the appropriation of money?"

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not increase the appropriations already made, or any expenditures hereafter to be made. It does not involve any appropriation in addition to those already made. That is my point—that it does not provide for any new expenditure, and therefore does not come within the letter or spirit of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that he must maintain his consistency and thereby maintain what ought to be the wish of the gentleman from Illinois. He rules that the point of order is well taken.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole.

INVESTIGATION INTO THE DEPRESSION OF LABOR.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution, with a recommendation that it be adopted with an amendment:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House 3,000 copies of the report and testimony of the select committee to inquire into the causes which produced the depression of the industries of the country and of labor.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report that the printing of the usual number of the report and testimony referred to has been ordered; that the object of printing the additional 3,000 copies is to meet the public demand for the same, which cannot be supplied in any other way. The committee report back the said resolution with the recommendation that the same be amended by striking out "3,000" and inserting "2,000" in lieu thereof, and that thus amended it do pass.

If the printing shall be ordered, it will cost $813.22 for the 3,000 copies, and a proportionately less amount if 2,000 copies shall be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to know what this report is. At any rate, I make the point of order that it should go to the Committee of the Whole, as it involves an expenditure of money.

The SPEAKER. It is provided by law that where the printing of any documents will cost more than $500 it must be provided for by concurrent resolution of the two Houses. The Chair is, however, in doubt whether the point made by the gentleman from Michigan can be raised against a resolution authorizing the printing of documents for the use of the House. It has never been the practice to treat such resolutions in that way.

Mr. CONGER. But the report says this will cost $800, which is more than the limit of the law.

Mr. WILSON. The whole cost of three thousand copies will be $800.

Mr. CONGER. And that exceeds the $500 which is the limit of the law.

Mr. WILSON. Two-thirds of that will be over $500, and I am willing to amend the report so the printing shall not exceed $500, as I understand that to be the limit.

Mr. CONGER. Oh, no; you cannot amend the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the provision of the statute.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1395. All propositions in either House of Congress for printing extra copies of documents, the cost of which exceeds $500, shall be by concurrent resolution, which shall, upon its transmission to either House, be immediately referred to the Committee on Printing of the House to which it is sent.

Mr. CONGER. This will cost over $800.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this is over $500.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The requirements of the law have been complied with in every respect in reference to this matter and the Chair has never known of the point of order being raised against the printing of public documents in this way, and yet a strict construction of the rule, or that clause of Rule 112 which includes propositions authorizing payments out of appropriations already made—as the appropriation has already been made out of which this money is to be paid for printing of this document—it would bring it within the technical language of the rule. Therefore the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order, and the resolution is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. BICKNELL. I am directed by the Select Committee on the state of the laws respecting ascertainment and declaration of result of election of President and Vice-President to report back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2023) to amend sundry provisions of chapter 1, title 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to presidential elections, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, and to move that it be printed; and further, that it shall be considered on the 29th of January in the House after the morning hour, not to interfere with appropriation bills, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read before the time is fixed for its consideration. It is an important subject, and I should like to hear the bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. BICKNELL. I now renew the motion that I have made, that the bill should be printed and made the special order for the 29th day of January next after the morning hour in the House, not to interfere with appropriation bills, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the gentleman shall accompany his motion with a request, also, that there shall be printed for the use of members of the House the sections of the Revised Statutes which are repealed by this bill.

Mr. BICKNELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KENNA. If this be made the special order for the day named, I should like to have it understood that it is not to interfere with a special order already made by the House for the second day of February; that is, of the bill revising the navigation laws of the country, commonly known as the steamboat bill. It is a matter of some importance, and if passed at all by the House it should be passed at an early day in order to give time for its consideration in the Senate. I hope it may be understood that, if this be made the special order for the day requested, it shall not interfere with that other special order.

The SPEAKER. It will not interfere with that order, because, all special orders standing upon an equality, the one of earlier date takes precedence.

Mr. KENNA. If I understand the Chair correctly, although this bill should run beyond the 2d day of February, it will still hold its place.

The SPEAKER. The steamboat bill, to which the gentleman alludes, would come up first.

The Chair will state again the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, so that there may be no mistake about it. He moves that the bill be printed, and its consideration set for the 29th of January, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, after the morning hour, not to interfere with appropriation bills; and, in connection with that, the gentleman from Michigan proposes that there shall be printed, for the use of members, the statutes of the United States which may be repealed or affected.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to inquire whether this bill is to be considered in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana stated in the House.

Mr. BICKNELL. Yes, sir; in the House.

The SPEAKER. It is not subject to the point of order that it shall have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KEIFER. Let it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That was not the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. BICKNELL. The proposition was to have it in the House.

The SPEAKER. The House can cut off debate or regulate debate at any time.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope it will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I desire an opportunity to examine into this matter. I have no desire to delay action upon it.

Mr. BICKNELL. I do not hear very distinctly the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that this matter may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BICKNELL. The committee reporting this measure preferred that it should be considered in the House.

Mr. KEIFER. It will be in the House if my suggestion is adopted.

Mr. ACKLEN. It will be open for debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. KEIFER. It may be under the five-minute rule——

The SPEAKER. The House can regulate the debate.

Mr. BICKNELL. I have understood from several gentlemen that they desire an opportunity to debate this at length.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman reporting this measure to the House does not object to allowing ample debate upon it, I have no objection to the adoption of his suggestion.

Mr. BICKNELL. The object of the committee is to have the bill fully discussed before the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to be heard on it myself.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana reporting this measure will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) touching the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas; when the Speaker signed the same.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. There are a few minutes of the morning hour yet remaining.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am willing, then, to admit that the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. That will have to be done by unanimous consent. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. This will give the Committee of Ways and Means two full hours hereafter.

SPEEDY DELIVERY OF LETTERS.

Mr. MONEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1533) to facilitate the delivery of letters and the speedy return to the writers thereof of such as are refused or cannot be delivered, with amendments; which, with the accompanying report, were ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair, and proceeded to consider the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it will be conceded by the whole House that the Committee on Rules has reported for our consideration a codification and revision of the present rules that will not fail to receive our commendation. While I had my doubts, when this committee was authorized to revise the rules, as to the propriety of the action taken, I now confess that the rules as received from that committee and now before us incline me to receive the report of the committee with much favor, and if the action of the committee shall result in giving us substantially the code that is reported with the rules reclassified and arranged under appropriate heads, I think we shall very soon congratulate ourselves that this work has been done. It is true, nevertheless, that we shall not agree in all the rules that have been presented for our acceptance.

Whatever may be the ultimate action of the House when we come to the adoption of this report, whether it shall contain precisely the rules which have been reported or not, there is one thing, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to insist upon in the adoption not only of each individual rule and clause under it, but of the report as a whole: that there shall be absolute clearness in every rule which we adopt; that there shall lurk about no rule any ambiguity, any uncertainty, or anything which will leave a doubt in any gentleman's mind as to what the rule may mean.

We have in our present code many rules about which members of the House do and will disagree; concerning which we are not certain what will be the ruling of the Speaker. Now it seems to me that our good old English tongue is fully capable of clearly expressing the meaning of each individual rule and clause that we propose to adopt. I had rather have a bad rule, or a rule vicious perhaps to some extent in its consequences, but such that it shall be clearly understood in advance what must necessarily be the ruling under it, than to have a better rule adopted for the guidance of the House about which there shall be more or less uncertainty and more or less of doubt. Very many of the contests which we have had in this House have been upon the construction of a rule, and we have sometimes fought for days over a question, the whole of which turned upon the probable or possible construction that might be given to a rule.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when we come down to business, and take up these rules one by one, and all the clauses under them, we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to those who shall come after us, to insist that there shall be the utmost certainty as to the necessary ruling that must take place under that rule; that the rules shall be absolutely clear of all ambiguity, of all doubt, and of every possible uncertainty.

This report does not lessen so very much the number of rules. We have about as many rules and clauses under those rules in this new code as there are in the present. Some ten or eleven of our present rules have been dropped as obsolete; but we have substantially the present rules of the House rearranged, properly codified, and in a shape in which they can be easily found.

I have made this general preliminary remark with regard to the sentiment which should prevail in the House in the adoption of these rules. Some of the new rules that are recommended will in my judgment, if adopted, work a wonderful reform in the transaction of our business. We are to have henceforth three calendars. I believe that to be a very great improvement. And I might refer to some other matters which are brought out in this report and which will not be overlooked by those who are called upon to advocate the recommendations of the committee. It was my purpose, Mr. Chairman, and is now, to call attention to some rules which I hope the House will change, and the first rule to which I will call attention is the rule that was adopted by the Forty-fourth Congress and which is found on page 38 of this report as clause 3 of Rule XXI. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. DUNNELL. We are all familiar with the history of this rule, which was adopted in the Forty-fourth Congress. Very much has been said upon it at various times while reports from the Committee on Appropriations have been before the House or the Committee of the Whole. I think if we will look at this rule candidly and seriously we shall find that it is absolutely oppressive, undemocratic, and wholly hostile to the genius of the Government itself. We are sent here as representatives of the people. Among other things, we are called upon to appropriate money to meet the expenses of the Government. We are not only to appropriate money to carry out the existing law, but we are also called on to appropriate money, from time to time, as the public interests may require. We are here responsible to the people who sent us. We are the representatives of the people. We are the people in Congress assembled, with the power, under the Constitution, to originate appropriation bills. We are not only responsible in the popular signification of that term, but we are so under the Constitution itself, and never before in the history of the Government has there been found among the rules of this House a rule like the one to which I call attention. It is simply this, that a majority of one committee, composed of eleven or thirteen or fifteen men, the bare majority of that committee may absolutely and completely control the appropriations of Congress itself. It denies to the minority of the committee, it denies to the minority of the House, it denies to the majority of the House, and to the whole House the power either to obey the law or to meet public demands. A law says that an examining surgeon shall have one dollar and a half for examining a pensioner. The Committee on Appropriations comes in with a report, voted by a majority of that committee, and says that that surgeon shall receive $1, and only $1.

I use this as an illustration, because in the present session we have seen this actually done in the report which came from the Committee on Appropriations for the payment of pensioners.

Now, this may be carried to any extent. The law says that the President shall receive $50,000 annually as his salary. It is in the power of a mere majority of the Committee on Appropriations to say he shall be paid $25,000, and it is utterly impossible for anybody in the House to change the result which the Committee on Appropriations has arrived at, unless it be to make it still less.

We are here at the mercy of a single committee, putting its strong hand upon and closing our mouths. No man, either on the right or on the left of the Speaker, can make a motion to increase the amount reported by the committee not simply to what it ought to be in fact, but up to the point at which the law fixes it.

During the last four or five years, since this rule has been in operation, we have seen many such instances where the public good called for a given sum to meet a particular demand, yet the Committee on Appropriations has said that that sum should not be granted.

By what authority should any one committee thus close the power of this House, which is the representative power of the nation? The people who pay taxes, who bear the burdens of the Government, ask us to appropriate money that the Government may thereby provide for the material interests of all the people. I say it is a bad system of legislation which denies to the House the power to regulate the amount of money appropriated. It is disrespectful, it is derogatory to ourselves. And I venture to say that the gentleman who is the reputed father of that rule has never found the original of it in any legislative manual on the face of the earth. It is a rule known only to the Forty-fourth, the Forty-fifth, and the Forty-sixth Congresses of the United States; it never before had a being elsewhere. I think the time has come in our financial affairs and in an intelligent comprehension of the demands of the present hour when we should trust this House of Representatives.

I believe that the majority of the House should be held responsible; I believe that the majority will be and ought to be held responsible. They will be held accountable with this rule or without it. In a democratic government like ours, to deny to the representatives of the people their right to legislate for the people as their interests may demand is unworthy of either side of the House. I hope to see that clause stricken out and that rule cease to exist.

The majority of this House can control every appropriation bill and every item in every appropriation bill; they are bound to do it. If they are in the minority on any one item, then they will not be held responsible; but the party voting the item will be held to answer for it by the people.

In my judgment we have arrived at a time when we may act with broader views than we acted ten or twelve years ago, just after the close of the war. We were cramped then; we were oppressed with burden and with debt. But we have got beyond the burden. The national debt to-day is not such a burden that Congress cannot act wisely, broadly, and liberally in the discussion of all questions and in the action upon them.

Members have spoken about appropriating four, five, or six millions of dollars for the improvement of the water-ways of this grand Republic. What are $6,000,000 when we consider all the harbors and lakes and navigable waters of this majestic Republic? What are $6,000,000, with all our vast resources and our unblemished credit? There are nations with half the resources which we have and with half our wealth, developed and undeveloped, which every year do thrice what we do for their material interests—yes, for their harbors and rivers.

The people of this country have ceased to criticise their public servants in the appropriation of money which clearly has in view the real development of the country. I do not believe that the people will sustain a Congress in a wasteful expenditure of money. But the people are keenly alive to the present material interests of the country. That man is a statesman who votes liberally—not wastefully, but liberally—and intelligently for the development of those material interests, rather than the man who cavils how this bill or that bill may affect the party record that he shall array before his constituents at home.

That rule which we have been acting under, and which we are compelled to act under to-day, is arbitrary and illiberal. It ought to give way to the pressing necessities of the people. This House, in its intelligence and in its responsibility to the people, should be intrusted with voting away the money of the people. We are in a financial condition to do it. What we need to-day is the development of our material resources, is the attraction of the attention of the people away from the sophistries of mere partisanship to those questions which lift up and make prosperous the people, and so make them happy and contented with the Government under which they live.

I have said enough upon that single rule. The next rule to which I wish to call attention is the seventh clause of Rule XI, to be found on page 32 of the report, which reads:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

* * * * * * *

7. To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce, [but they shall report the bill known as the river and harbor bill, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.]

Mr. Chairman, it has been my honor to serve for four years upon the Committee on Commerce. Not only while a member of that committee, but since then, I have never wavered in my belief that it was for the interests of the Government and of the Treasury itself that the Committee on Commerce should prepare and report for passage a river and harbor appropriation bill. This question has been ably argued by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and very clearly and forcibly by the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA,] a member of that committee, as well as by other members; and perhaps I need say nothing further upon this point. I am, however, constrained to say that the Committee on Commerce alone can prepare for report to this House a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors. No matter how much wisdom the Committee on Appropriations may possess, no matter how laborious that committee may be, from the very circumstances surrounding it it is absolutely incapable of making or preparing a river and harbor appropriation bill.

There is hardly a bill or resolution going to the Committee on Commerce which does not itself instruct that committee relative to this very work. The entire work of that committee eminently fits it to prepare bills to be passed by this House and by Congress for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country. The amount of labor performed by that committee is simply enormous. The amount of pages of finely printed matter which that committee is compelled to read averages from twelve hundred to two thousand. This work must be performed by that committee before it can make an enlightened report and present it to this House upon the subject of the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this great country. As one gentleman on this floor has truly said, the Committee on Appropriations cannot report back a river and harbor bill with one hour's less labor than the Committee on Commerce have spent in preparing it. The ground must be gone over. When it is gone over the committee is prepared to report the bill; until the ground is gone over no committee can be prepared to make it. If this be true, no revising committee can prepare that bill without going over the entire ground in precisely the manner in which it has been gone over by the Committee on Commerce.

It has been stated as one reason why the Committee on Appropriations should consider this bill and report it back to the House is that if the Committee on Commerce should report a bill appropriating $8,000,000, the Appropriations Committee might report it back providing for an expenditure of $6,000,000. But when a bill comes back thus reduced by the Committee on Appropriations, great injustice may be done to some improvements. Every item must be considered thoroughly by the committee before passing or reporting the bill. I join with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in denouncing the attempt that has been made on this floor and in the newspapers of the country to characterize the river and harbor bill as a gigantic fraud or "steal." I say that no bill goes through this House that can be better defended in honest, clear, open-handed debate than the river and harbor bills which have been passed here within the last four or five years. Take the sundry civil appropriation bill, which comes from the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DUNNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. If the river and harbor appropriation bill can be so well defended, will the gentleman say why it cannot come before the House for discussion in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It goes there under the rules.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, it can go to the Committee of the Whole as it has gone frequently in the past. There is nothing in the rules now that prevents it from going to the Committee of the Whole. There is no reason why it may not go there. It can go there and undergo discussion as well as some other reports which come before the House and from the Committee on Appropriations.

I was about to refer to the sundry civil appropriation bill. Frequently there is added to this bill by the conference committee a sum almost as large as we are in the habit of appropriating for rivers and harbors. We are not allowed to discuss those amendments incorporated into the bill upon the report of the conference committees; and let me tell the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] a member of the Committee on Appropriations, who now honors me with his attention, that within the last three years there have been found in sundry civil appropriation bills items which would not stand half the scrutiny that the river and harbor bill has received.

Mr. BLOUNT. And if the gentleman will allow me I will say that those items came generally from the republican Senate.

Mr. DUNNELL. Very well. I am speaking of a mode of legislation. I am not charging upon the House or the Senate or any part of Congress a result that may be inevitable.

I think that what has been said against the Committee on Commerce in the past has been unjust. These reports have been made as the result of a great labor. It may be said, perhaps, that now and then we have provided for the improvement of a river having too little dignity as a navigable stream; yet in no instance, as the gentleman from Texas said the other day, have we ever appropriated a dollar for the improvement of a river that has not been examined by the Engineer Department of the Government, pronounced upon favorably, and an appropriation recommended.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, it seems pertinent to say here that the river Clyde, the great shipbuilding river of the world, has taken a century and a quarter to make. It was a mere purling rivulet through a marsh when, one hundred and twenty-five years ago, the apparently mad experiment of making it a navigable river was begun, and from time to time small appropriations for the same object have been made; so that now, when any nation wants to speak of its future prosperity as a commercial nation, with its own marine and marine establishments, it says that a particular river will be the Clyde of its country. And I apprehend that many of the appropriations now made by the Congress of the United States as small beginnings, and which are severely criticised, are like the early movements to convert the rivulet into the great commercial river of Scotland.

Mr. DUNNELL. I thank the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania for his admirable illustration. I will not spend any more time or ask the attention of the committee longer to this point. It has been so ably discussed that I do not doubt what the action of the House will be on that clause.

I now ask attention to another rule only for a moment. Clause 2, Rule XXII, reads as follows:

2. Any petition or memorial excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented.

This may not seem an important matter, and yet I allude to it. A member of the House deposits a petition in the box. He makes perchance a wrong direction of the petition. It goes into the hands of another committee. He makes a false direction to the petition inadvertently. He may have a choice where the petition shall go. It goes into the hands of a committee, and it is then to be reported back by that committee and sent arbitrarily to such a committee as this committee may select. My own judgment is the present rule is far preferable. The Committee of Ways and Means, as it found yesterday in its session, has possession of a bill which ought to have gone to another committee. It is better the committee should report it back and let the House determine where it should go. I do not believe that my petition or my memorial should be at the mercy of a committee to which I may accidentally have sent it. I do not think that rule is an improvement at all.

One other rule I will refer to before I leave the subject. According to a custom which for aught I know has prevailed since the foundation of the Government, there comes to this House and Congress, as a high court of equity, a large class of private claims. I voted in the last Congress very cheerfully for the bill presented by the gentleman from New York, Mr. Potter, creating a court of claims which should relieve Congress from the adjustment of these private claims. Evidently these new rules make very slight provision for the Private Calendar. Evidently the Committee on Rules was not anxious to enlarge the action of the House on the Private Calendar.

Now, sir, I think there is no disgrace to-day under which so much labor, or under which we any more labor, than we do in denying to the citizens of the country the honest payment of honest claims. If we refuse to take care of these claims, claims like the pension cases which come to us from every section of the country, claims that the law will not allow but which equity says ought to be paid, and so long as we thus hold to these cases just so long ought we to go to the Private Calendar and give them honest attention and honest treatment.

The business of Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday cannot be set aside except by a two-thirds vote. That is a good rule.

It works well. It has been adopted since I have been a member of this House. I am in favor of it; and, sir, all the more rigidly we follow the rules, the less will our business be blocked and the more we may do for the country. When we come to Friday, a bare majority, by these new rules, is allowed to dispense with that day altogether. I say that Friday should be sacredly set apart for private business, and the same vote to postpone it should be required as is required for the postponement of public business. We should transact the private business of the country on Friday, and that day should be protected by a rule as stringent as that which protects the other days of the week.

I served two years on the Committee of Claims in this House, during the Forty-third Congress. I know, and every gentleman who has served on that committee knows, what a terrible gauntlet every bill has to run in order to secure a favorable report. There are men in the other branch of this Government, as well as in this, who have said that if they had a claim against the Government, no matter how just, they would not prosecute it, the difficulty of getting justice from the Government was so very great. It has been to our dishonor that we have asked men to defend the country, to uphold it with money, with blood, and with life itself, and then have turned round and allowed their claims against the Government to be thrust aside to gratify the whim of those who are too economical to be just. We ought to be just to every man and woman who has a claim against the Government.

Mr. Chairman, glory comes to the country that is just, glory comes to any government or any administration that is humane—that legislates for its constituent elements because they are a part and a parcel of the government.

We forget the genius of our Government when we say to this man or to that man, "Go your way." We are in no need of any such kind of conduct. We are amply rich and amply able to do justice to every man, from whatsoever section he comes, and we are amply able to do justice to every rising, growing interest of this grand country of ours.

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.]

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to engage in any general discussion of the questions involved in the report of the committee now under consideration. I shall confine myself substantially to the expression of my views in support of that portion of the report which requires what is known as the river and harbor bill to pass the ordeal of the Committee on Appropriations before it is considered by the House. My experience as a member of this House began with the Forty-fourth Congress, and each of the river and harbor appropriation bills which has been passed since that time has been passed under a motion to suspend the rules, without opportunity for discussion or amendment.

I was one of those, Mr. Chairman, who entered a written protest against the passage of the first bill of that character in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and I have seen abundant reason since that time for adhering to the position then taken by those who joined with me in that protest that this class of appropriations should be open for discussion and amendments the same as every other class of appropriation bills.

Those who are familiar with political history will remember that in the palmy days of the democratic party it was the settled doctrine that the General Government should not engage in works of internal improvements. While I concede that the modified condition of the times demands a departure to some extent from that line of policy, I am yet of the opinion that every question for the improvement of a river or a harbor should be able to stand upon its own merits, should be able to endure the ordeal of discussion, should be open to amendment and consideration. Nor do I subscribe to the idea which seems to prevail so extensively here that no one is interested in this question except the particular member whose harbor is to receive a benefaction from Congress. I am interested in proper appropriations for the harbor of the city of New York as well as the members who have the honor to represent that portion of my State. Indeed, in a great sense I am interested with every other citizen in having all proper appropriations for every river and every harbor throughout the entire country which requires such appropriations.

It is a mistaken opinion that the member residing in the county of Monroe, in the district adjoining mine, shall go to the room of the Committee on Commerce and there say what he thinks should be given to the mouth of the Genessee River, and that no other Representative is interested in that question, nor shall it be open to discussion when reported to the House.

Mr. HUBBELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Suppose, under the revised rules, a river and harbor bill should be sent to the Committee on Appropriations, would not then a motion to suspend the rules be in order to pass the bill, precisely in the same manner as now?

Mr. LAPHAM. Most unquestionably that could be done, and that is the point which I was about to consider. What would be thought of a proposition made here to take a general appropriation bill out of the Committee of the Whole and pass it under the force of the previous question? If the House by its action on the proposal of the Committee on Rules so far reconsiders the obnoxious practice of the last four sessions of Congress as to have this class of appropriations go to the Committee on Appropriations, I take it the House would never be led to adopt a practice which has thus far prevailed to prevent the consideration of this, like other bills, in the Committee of the Whole. Undoubtedly that power exists and will exist wherever and from whatever committee this recommendation comes. But, Mr. Chairman, after the Committee on Commerce has examined this question and considered what rivers and what harbors ought in their opinion to be provided for, it is yet a question whether the condition of the Treasury will justify the appropriations recommended, and that question is one mainly, if not exclusively, for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations.

I trust, sir, while I shall have the honor of a seat here I shall never again be called upon to witness the example of a President of the United States, in obedience to what he considered his duty as the Executive of the nation, charged with the execution of the laws, to send back to the House his approval of a river and harbor bill coupled with a declaration which he deemed he was bound in honor and conscience to make, that he would not expend the money provided in such bill any further than he deemed it warranted by the public necessities. Let this class of appropriations be guarded so carefully and adopted with such care and deliberation that they shall receive, as all appropriations ought to receive, the assent of the country and of those charged with the execution of the laws. It is this hasty, inconsiderate legislation which has grown up under this practice that is aimed at by the amendment under consideration, and, Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion, it meets with my hearty approval.

Mr. DUNNELL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BARBER.]

Mr. BARBER. I would like to inquire how much time is left.

The CHAIRMAN. There are eight minutes of the hour remaining.

Mr. BARBER. I understand the Committee on Rules to invite the fullest discussion. I suppose I shall be governed by these rules if they are adopted. I therefore shall not offer any apology for obtruding my views on the House at this moment.

If I can understand the argument which has been urged in support of the proposed rule in regard to appropriations for the internal improvements of the country, it is that we need a committee, a standing committee of this House, to stand between the Treasury and the natural incapacity and greed of this body in its collective aggregation. Now, I might understand the force of this argument if we were living under the old system of confederation, when the legislative functions were committed entirely to one body; but, sir, our fathers devised checks and safeguards against hasty and inconsiderate legislation. They adopted the dual system. They vested the legislative functions in a House of Representatives and in a Senate. It was the chief design of the latter body to afford a check on the hasty and inconsiderate action of the Representatives, who were supposed to stand nearest the people; and with a view to this precise point, the distribution of the public revenues, in order to prevent the spoliation of the lesser States by the greater, there was given to each State equal representation upon the floor of that illustrious body. Nor did they stop there. They went further, and armed the executive authority of this Government with the veto power—the power which can require the reconsideration by this House of every measure which they shall see fit to pass.

Now, sir, what in effect is this proposition? It is to create here in our midst a little senate of our own. It seems to me that that is entirely unnecessary. The facility with which distinguished members graduate from this House into the other renders it entirely superfluous. We can still get the benefit of their matured wisdom. Nor do I deem it necessary, Mr. Chairman, that we bring in here this much despised veto power which was so very distasteful to our friends on the other side during the past session and exalt it as one of our penates.

There is an impression in the country at large, a very general impression, that our rules are simply contrived to strangle, to stifle, and to paralyze the legislative energies of this House. I have heard them compared to the double-entry system of bookkeeping which has been described as an invention of the devil to cheat honest men. It has been frequently said—I have read it in public journals within the last week—that gentlemen of marked ability are not found on this floor. It would ill become me to pronounce an opinion upon that point. I would not be considered an impartial or a competent judge. But I do say this as the result of my observation, that if a man wants to become a splendid cipher, if he wants to get a magnificent position of unimportance, if he wants to become a real nonentity, let him come to Congress and let him get safely ensconced on the tail end of an average committee, and his hopes will be realized. [Laughter.]

Now, I hope to have an opportunity to vote in favor of the proposition of the eloquent gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.] I believe we should distribute these powers among the various committees, develop the ability to determine what appropriations are needed, and educate the House so we can know something about the river and harbor bill, and then we will not have our inability to comprehend the requirements of the situation thrown into our faces, as proposed here, by delegating the power intrusted to us as a House to one standing committee.

I find, Mr. Chairman, [looking at his watch,] that eight minutes is a longer time than I supposed it was. [Laughter.]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. You have half your time left. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBER. I shall not without reason consume the balance of the time, but will gracefully yield the floor.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to occupy the attention of the committee for any long period of time, and I only seek the floor at the present time for the purpose of announcing that, taking the labors of the Committee on Rules, as they have reported the amended rules to the House, and comparing these rules with our existing rules, I am in favor of that report.

It has been my fortune, Mr. Chairman, to be a member of this House for a number of years, and I venture to say I have never seen a better exposition of confusion worse confounded than is to be witnessed in the administration of our present rules. As I have often said, if I were endeavoring to find out how not to do a thing, I would take for my guide in that regard the present rules of the House of Representatives. No man, I care not what position he may have upon the floor, knows how, when, or under what circumstances to get at any question unless he first ascertains what is the will and wish of the Speaker of the House; and in order to do that, he must know that the Speaker is clear and cool-headed and consistent with himself.

I appeal to every gentleman upon the floor if this is not the fact in the administration of our present rules. Their number is large, and in my judgment they are not consistent with themselves, and are incapable of intelligent comprehension; and it was in view of this fact that a codification or revision of them became necessary.

Now, taking the labor of that committee as a whole, and looking as I do to what I believe to be, or ought to be, the object of all parliamentary rules—that is to say, the object of parliamentary rules should be to insure an intelligent consideration and dispatch of the business brought before the body of which those rules are the law of action—looking as I do at what should be that object, I must approve generally the report of this committee, because I think those rules should be few and such as can easily be understood and can be readily enforced. Those rules should be such as will aid the majority of the body in arriving at a conclusion of its business, having due regard to the rights of the minority.

I take, however, some exceptions to different rules which have been reported to this body by the Committee on Rules. I will say for that committee that it has reported the clearest, the simplest, and the most comprehensive set of rules that I ever saw for the guidance of a parliamentary body. Their work is entitled to the approbation of all who have studied parliamentary history. Compare the rules which this committee now reports with those at present existing. As between the two my judgment must pronounce in favor of those now reported. Under them I believe that every proposition of the humblest member of this body can receive its due consideration; I cannot say that that can be done under the present rules. Under the proposed rules as reported every committee can bring its work before the House; that cannot be done under existing rules. Under the rules as proposed it will be impossible for one or two members, as I have often witnessed upon the floor of this House, to keep the work of any committee which has taken months for preparation from being considered by this House. Under these proposed rules, therefore, the people who stand behind us by petitions, memorials, and bills will have an opportunity to be heard; they will have their day in court.

I observed particularly one or two remarks made by my friend from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.] A few moments ago he referred to what he deemed the injustice of the House of Representatives toward the private claims of the people. Sir, my experience does not accord with that of the eloquent gentleman from Minnesota. Too much of the time of this House is given to class, to special, to individual legislation. With your Private Claims Committee on the one hand and the Committee on Appropriations with its usurped jurisdiction on the other, the great public interests of this country have been made to suffer. We should put a check on this special and private legislation.

The gentleman refers to the honest claimant that comes here. It is not the claims of such men that receive the most of our consideration. The honest claimant whom the gentleman describes is very seldom seen at our doors. There comes here a class of persons under the garb of those honest claimants who are too frequently here, who too frequently take up the time of this House.

These new rules are rules for the people, for the public interest; rules which if enforced will give every class of the people an opportunity to be heard. And in this connection I will read an amendment which I propose to offer in due time, and which when offered I trust will receive the favorable consideration of the House. It is this:

That Thursday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of business on the House Calendar unless otherwise determined by a majority of the House.

Now, I submit to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] that we should put the public business of the country on the same footing that we have put private claims. I think that should be made one of the new rules of this House. I have noted in this report the exceptions which I take to it, as I have considered it, I think, with an endeavor to take an impartial view of it.

I will now come to the subject of reports from the Committee on Commerce. I agree with my friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] the chairman of that committee, and with his associates upon the committee, that its duties should be performed as they now are, independently of other committees. I will ask him, however, to add a provision to the rule that the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules for the passage of the river and harbor appropriation bill, but that the House shall have an opportunity to pass in review upon the labors of that committee.

Now, I will give the reason why I shall support a proposition to let the labor of considering the improvement of rivers and harbors remain with the Committee on Commerce. It is new and independent legislation, not already fixed by law. Before I get through I will endeavor to show what I consider to be the proper functions of the Committee on Appropriations.

When I first entered Congress, in the Forty-second Congress, General Coburn, of Indiana, was a member of the Committee on Appropriations. He at that time proposed to divide the labors of that committee as is now proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] and by others. At that time I was heartily in favor of that proposition. But during all these years that I have been here my experience and observation have led me to believe that if we turn loose a half dozen committees upon the subject of appropriations it will be impossible to control the amount of those appropriations. I believe that it is for the interest of the people that the subject of appropriations should be committed mainly to one committee. I say this not out of any feeling with respect to my own committee, because if I considered that I should be jealous of its rights and should speak jealously of its intelligence and its power of comprehending the duty before it. But, speaking in the interest of the people, in the interest of the public Treasury, in the interest of a proper control of public expenditures, I must say, what has been forced upon me contrary to my original convictions, that it is the duty of this House to have the subject of appropriations controlled by one committee. And why? Not that the Committee on Appropriations shall originate any legislation, not that they shall bring into the House any new items, but that they shall be confined to what the law requires. And I, for one, announce to the House that I would be willing to strike out in Rule XXI the last words of clause 3, thus confining the Committee on Appropriations to the provisions of the existing law, and not permitting them to report matters over which they have no legislative jurisdiction whatever.

Mr. Chairman, I sought the floor for the purpose merely of giving utterance to these views, and expressing the hope that in passing upon all these questions the House will look to the ills that we are seeking to fly from, and will take shelter under these rules which promise an intelligent consideration and dispatch of public business.

I yield to my friend from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to occupy a few minutes. I have been a member of this House for some years, and ever since I have been here have been seeking to bring about some revision of our rules. I was glad, therefore, when the House adopted the resolution authorizing this revision to be undertaken. The report submitted by the committee presents to us a choice between the new and the old code. If it were left to me to decide which of these codes I would take, supposing that the new rules must be adopted without amendment, I should without hesitation prefer the old, objectionable as they are.

Under an amendment of the rules adopted by the House at the commencement of this Congress the Committee of Ways and Means, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and the Committee on Banking and Currency, three committees certainly that deal with the most important questions submitted to our consideration, were authorized, as the public interest required they should be, to have priority over the other committees in reporting public business for the consideration of the House.

To the Committee of Ways and Means belongs the duty of reporting all bills affecting our revenue; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, everything affecting our coined money; and to the Committee on Banking and Currency, all subjects affecting the paper money. On these subjects the people of the United States are now demanding some sort of reform which they contend is necessary to their prosperity. In fact, monetary questions are now engaging the attention of the people of the civilized world. No country seems to have a monetary system with which it is perfectly satisfied, and I am sure that a large body of our own people are not satisfied with the present monetary system of the United States with silver demonetized. A large number of our constituents believe that silver ought to be a part of the permanent money of the United States, unlimited in its coinage and unlimited in its monetary functions. I apprehend that those who thus think will not rest until they shall find some means to have their views incorporated into the statutes of the United States.

Now, under this new rule what becomes of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures? What becomes of the "dollar of our fathers," which has created such a great sensation in the country within the last three or four years? Where does this committee go? It is retired ignominiously to the rear. Adopt these rules, and where does the business of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures find a place on the Calendar of this House? At the tail of all other business. This committee has no precedence in the House. The Committee on Banking and Currency share the same fate. Both of these committees are deprived of the priority given them by existing rules. After the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures or the Committee on Banking and Currency has reported a bill (and they only report when their turn comes on the roster) their report goes to the foot of the public calendar, to be reached after all other business on that calendar shall have been swept away.

The rule works on the other side of the question with equal force. Suppose a majority of this House should think it impolitic and unwise to continue the coinage of the silver dollar in limited quantities, and should desire a change of the law in that respect, as the present Secretary of the Treasury desires, and as a large part of the people of the United States unquestionably desire, how is that object to be effected? Under the new rules you could never change that legislation by any regular method of proceeding; the present status of the coinage laws must remain.

What about your tariff? Some people want an increase of tariff duties. There are bills lying on the table of the Committee of Ways and Means proposing to increase duties on various articles, and there are some proposing a reduction of duties. Under the present rules, when the Committee of Ways and Means reports to this House a measure affecting the tariff it can invoke the will of the House to set a day for its consideration, and to be continued from day to day until disposed of. Can this be done under the new rules? The Committee of Ways and Means may report in preference to other committees; it may report at any time; but it cannot move to take the bill up for consideration until the morning hour has expired and until the unfinished business succeeding the morning hour shall have been disposed of. Who here does not know that sometimes for a month at a time we have never had a morning hour? Who fails to remember the struggles we have had upon some measures in the morning hour which could not be taken out of it? In addition to that, the unfinished business coming over is piled in the way, and must be disposed of before we can reach the great questions affecting the revenues of the Government.

Now, as to questions of appropriation. There seems to be among some of our statesmen a mistaken view of their duties and responsibilities, and of the rights, privileges, and responsibilities of their fellow-members on this floor. I beg to assure gentlemen that the majority on this floor are not held responsible to the minority for their conduct. When gentlemen assume that none but the Committee on Appropriations is worthy to be intrusted with the expenditure of the money of the people of the United States they assume a prerogative nowhere conferred upon them. Who has given to them the right to say that the Committee on Naval Affairs cannot faithfully, patriotically, justly, and wisely frame and report appropriations for the Navy Department? Why should the Committee on Appropriations have charge of this work in preference to the Committee on Naval Affairs? Why should the Committee on Appropriations prepare the Army appropriation bill in preference to the Military Committee, or the Post-Office appropriation bill in preference to the Post-Office Committee? There are but two arguments that have been used on this floor to justify the proceeding—one a very plausible argument by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] a gentleman who can throw around a fallacy more force than any man I ever heard in my life. He is a gentleman whose genius and great ability I have always admired. He comes to the House and tells us that there are two great committees of the House standing back to back, one raising the revenue and the other disbursing it; one saying how much taxation shall be collected from the people, the other how the revenue thus derived shall be expended.

Why, sir, the Committee on Appropriations expends year by year, while the Constitution forbids you to make an appropriation passing beyond the term of two years; but is it so with the Committee of Ways and Means? The laws we have on our statute-books which give into our Treasury money that supports the Government are permanent laws, not made every two years like the appropriations for the disbursements of the Government. There is no parallel between the two. Every committee of this House which has to deal with a question of money knows as well as the Committee on Appropriations what amount of money comes into the coffers of the Government and what permanent laws remain upon the statute-book. The Committee of Ways and Means does not have to levy to meet the views of the Committee on Appropriations every Congress. The laws are in force constantly, constantly bringing money into the Treasury. So that objection is exploded.

The other reason is that other committees cannot be trusted; they are not sufficiently economical. Now, sir, it may be that the Speaker in his wisdom in the appointment of the committees of this House during this Congress has selected for the Committee on Appropriations the most economical, the most wise, the most just, the most patriotic gentlemen in this House. But these rules are not for this House alone; they are, in defiance of constitutional authority, to go into other Congresses; they are made the rules of succeeding Congresses, notwithstanding the Constitution says that every House shall make its own rules. They are to go forward in their operation and to be thrown over all future Congresses. It may be in some future Congress there shall be a Committee on Naval Affairs or a Committee on Military Affairs or a Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads which will equal in virtue, in patriotism, in wisdom, and in love of economy the present Committee on Appropriations. I say nothing to the detriment of that committee. It is as good as any we have. But the argument is unfair and unjust. And why? It assumes to arraign all the other committees of this House for extravagance, for want of economy, for want of patriotism, and tries them before its own tribunal. No gentleman has a right to arraign another for any course he may pursue as a member of Congress. The constituent only has the right to call to account. I do not answer to any committee of this House. I do not answer even to my party in this House for what I do if I go beyond what they believe to be my duty. If I do not advocate and vote for measures they believe I ought to sustain and support, I am not responsible to them; my constituents only can call me to account. At that tribunal I bow and to that judgment I submit. But I do not bow to the self-assumed authority of any committee on this floor.

It was argued that we will have less expenditure of money—there will be less money expended—if you will put it in the hands of this committee; that somehow or other, as soon as they are appointed, the Committee on Appropriations becomes supereminently economical, and less money will be expended by them. I do not know that that is so. I cannot say it will be wise to leave our harbors all dammed up, our commerce having no means of communication. I do not know that would be a part of great wisdom or statesmanship. I believe in liberal expenditures by the Government. If there is no other objection save that, I am sure the argument is not sustained that concentrates all the appropriations of this House into the hands of the Committee on Appropriations.

But there are sometimes exceptions to that rule. I served once on the Committee on Naval Affairs. I remember we reported a bill to this House cutting down appropriations in the Navy Department below those which had been reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I have a very distinct recollection of being antagonized by the Committee on Appropriations and of being defeated. So it does not always follow the Committee on Appropriations are going to deal more economically with the public funds than any other committee of this House.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman whether it was the Committee on Appropriations that defeated the bill? Was it not rather the House that defeated it than the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MILLS. My impression is that the Committee on Appropriations turned their backs and saw us die in the House without giving us aid or comfort.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was before the House still. It was here in this House, and it was not because of want of sympathy on the part of members of that committee.

Mr. MILLS. We did not have the support of the Committee on Appropriations, and our bill was defeated in the House. A great deal of this opposition to different committees of this House making appropriations results from a hereditary hostility to this Government making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors. There are a great many democrats on this floor who have inherited the faith of their fathers and the democratic doctrine long years ago, when it was an open question of how the Constitution of the United States should be construed, some holding it should receive a literal construction, that this Government had no power that could not be found in an express grant of words. Then the democratic party held to that doctrine; but since that time we have had a broader interpretation of the Constitution. It is held now the Government can do some things by implied power as well as express power, and the Government has gone on year by year extending the power of the Federal Government, so that to-day it is far beyond the doctrine of our fathers thirty, forty, or fifty years ago. It is now the accepted doctrine among the mass of our people, democrats and republicans, although I do not know much about republicans—I know it is so with most of the democrats where I live—that it is the rightful duty of this Government to improve the lakes, rivers, and harbors, so that the products of the labor of its people may find cheap and easy transportation to market. That is the democracy, as I understand it, of the present day.

There is one other simple objection to the report of the Committee on Rules. I do not know whether that will be amended or not. I have been trying to get the rules so arranged that when a member of Congress desires information from the Departments he can get it during his congressional term. I have frequently failed during two years to get information about the Indians on the frontier. If I offer a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior to know something about the Indians on the frontier, some gentleman who is a little dyspeptic rises and objects, and my resolution lies over as it requires unanimous consent before I can get it adopted. A short time ago, when we were amending the rules, I had that amendment offered, or at least it was amended on my motion, that a resolution of inquiry should be referred to a committee and reported within a week and acted on. Now how is it? A resolution is referred to a committee when you offer it, within a week it is to be reported, and then it is to take its place upon the Calendar way down at the foot with five hundred before it. If I were to ask to introduce a resolution asking for information in reference to the Indians now invading Texas from Fort Sill or Fort Stanton reservation, and the committee were to report it was a harmless resolution, and the Secretary might answer it without detriment to the public service, it would go upon the Calendar, and then, some time about the time this Congress would expire, I could have the resolution sent to the Secretary of the Interior for his answer. That is another objection I have to these rules. There may be others, but I will not stop now to consider them, but will yield to my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a few words upon the matter now pending before the committee.

The Committee on Rules have made a report, after mature consideration, and I am, sir, very reluctant to criticise that report or object to any of its conclusions. The feature of the report which seems to have created more discussion than any other is that which relates to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce over the question of the improvement of rivers and harbors. The old rule referred to that committee for consideration all matters that might be committed to it by the House. The rule as proposed not only gives that committee all the power it possessed under the old rule, but goes still further and authorizes it to prepare the river and harbor bill, and then provides, after its preparation, that it shall be reported to the House and then referred to the Committee on Appropriations for their consideration and supervision. Now, sir, the Committee on Rules had in view some plan whereby the river and harbor bill shall be more thoroughly discussed than it has been heretofore, and in that object I am in hearty sympathy with them; but I must say that my conclusion is that the reference of the report made by the Committee on Commerce to any other committee for its revision will not attain the end desired, because that committee, if it desires so to do, may secure action on the bill under a suspension of the rules, which is the evil sought to be avoided. The complaint is that the Committee on Commerce has hitherto reported the river and harbor bill and procured its passage, under a suspension of the rules, without debate and without offering any opportunity for amendments or for discussion.

What I desire is to see every appropriation bill brought before the House for consideration in Committee of the Whole. I am opposed to the passage of any appropriation of any kind whatever without having it first read item by item, with power to move amendments, and therefore I should be glad to see Rule 112 as it now stands in the rules (clause 3, Rule XXIII, as provided in this revision of the rules) amended so as to provide that this rule shall not be suspended except by unanimous consent.

Gentlemen say that would be giving one man too much power. No. When it goes to the Committee of the Whole the majority of that committee can dispose of it as it thinks proper. Let the bill be considered there; let it be read item by item; let every portion of it be discussed, and then we shall have proper action on it.

We all know—I do not know that there is any impropriety in my saying so—that there has been some reason for the difference in the mode of considering the river and harbor bill from other bills. Why does that reason exist? It is in the fact—and we all know it to be a fact—that the river and harbor bill has been pretty uniformly an omnibus bill, a bill in which the interests of different States and different Representatives and their constituents are put, and put in a skillful way, so as to carry the omnibus with all its freight, good and bad, successfully through, to the great damage of the Treasury.

That we know to be the fact with regard to river and harbor bills; and I venture this assertion, that there has not been a river and harbor bill considered here in which at least one-half of the appropriations would not have been rejected if they could have stood by themselves upon their own merits, and which were only carried through by being in the omnibus with other measures. I regard this system of legislation as vicious, and I wish to see it remedied.

My friend from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] thinks that this proposition originates in hostility to rivers and harbors. For one I disclaim any such hostility. The gentleman says that "these constitutional scruples generally travel by dry land." Now, as to that I will say that I have no constitutional scruples about proper appropriations for rivers and harbors. But I do have scruples as a Representative here about the manner in which these bills have been passed. I say let the measure come before the House to be discussed, and if any portion of the bill cannot stand the scrutiny of the House let it fail, as it ought to fail. That is all I desire with regard to that.

Perhaps I ought to say, Mr. Chairman, that in declaring that this is an omnibus bill I am only stating a fact of history, and I do not wish to be understood as criticising what has hitherto taken place in any spirit of hostility to the action of the Committee on Commerce. Perhaps they could not have done any better. Perhaps the Appropriations Committee could not do any better. I am doubtful whether they could do any better, and for that reason I am in favor of letting the bill go directly from the Committee on Commerce to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to be there considered and passed upon item by item, upon its merits. We shall thus, I think, get rid of a vast deal of vicious legislation.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] said there was no bill introduced into this House that could undergo discussion better than these river and harbor bills. If that is true, why object to their going where they can be discussed? Why object to their going where every clause shall be read by itself? I venture this assertion, that while the river and harbor bill may stand discussion better than any other, there has not been a river and harbor bill for the last ten years which would, if discussed item by item, command the support of half the members on this floor for one-half of its provisions; I mean if every part is considered separately. And yet it passes through under a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for one remark?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. ACKLEN. There is nothing in the rule as it has stood to prevent the river and harbor bill going to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPARKS. But the gentlemen of the Committee on Commerce move to suspend the rules. That is what they do.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. And it is just to meet that that I wish to put in the new rule an amendment declaring that this rule shall not be suspended except by a unanimous vote.

Mr. ACKLEN. Then I understand the gentleman to discriminate against the river and harbor bill, and in favor of the other appropriation bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. If the gentleman from Louisiana had listened to me he would have heard very differently. If he will do me the favor to read my remarks, he will see that I am opposed to the passage of any appropriation bill under a suspension of the rules, but I desire that every bill shall go into the Committee of the Whole and be acted upon item by item, on its merits.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman's remarks were in reference to the river and harbor bill. The gentleman from Louisiana gave him his undivided attention.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I spoke in the outset with reference to all appropriation bills, and if I have confined my remarks mainly to the river and harbor bill it is because that bill has been the omnibus bill, and that bill especially illustrates an evil which I desire to see remedied in this House.

In the last regular session there were motions to suspend the rules and pass appropriation bills, made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and some of them were passed under the suspension of the rules; but they were so passed greatly to the dissatisfaction of some of us, and I believe my good friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] among the number.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no! I voted for them.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I hold that all those measures ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole. It was said in regard to those bills coming from the Appropriations Committee that were passed under a suspension of the rules that we did not have time to discuss them. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that every measure that ought to pass here deserves time for its consideration, and if we have not time to consider we ought not to have time to pass it, especially if it relates to an expenditure of money. No appropriation bill involving the expenditure of millions ought to pass without due consideration, and hence I trust the rules will be so amended as to make it imperative that every appropriation bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole and that this shall not be dispensed with except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] has twenty minutes of his time remaining. To whom does he yield?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE.]

Mr. BROWNE. I desire to tender to the Committee on Rules my thanks, that in the revision they have reported they have put the code in a form so compact that a man can read it in an ordinary lifetime, and then they have put it in language in the main so terse and clear that a man of ordinary intelligence can form an idea of what was intended.

I shall vote for the revision as it stands if the House shall not conclude to amend it. But I think the report ought to be amended in at least two important particulars.

I have been, ever since I have occupied a seat in this House, opposed to committing the entire subject of appropriations to a single committee, and upon this question I desire to speak plainly, and I hope I will offend no one.

It has appeared to me, and I think it has so struck almost all the younger members of this body, that the Committee on Appropriations have absorbed and monopolized the whole business of legislation.

It is insisted, indeed the only forcible logical argument I have heard in defense of giving the whole subject of appropriations to a single committee is, that that method will give us a more economical administration of the affairs of this Government, that it will tend to retrench expenditure, whereas if you give the different subjects of appropriation to several committees the tendency will be to extravagance. Sir, it strikes me that the very opposite of that will be the result.

Now, if it be the object of legislation to go into the several Departments of the Government, to examine them thoroughly and completely to ascertain wherein there are abuses, and to cut off improper expenditures here and there wherever they may exist—if such investigation is to be complete and thorough, it strikes me that it is impossible for a single committee to take charge of all those subjects and give them such examination and attention as their importance may require.

To illustrate: It is insisted by a very large number of gentlemen here, and with much force, that the subject of appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors should be committed to the Committee on Commerce. Why? Because that is a subject which requires research and investigation. In order that the committee may comprehend that subject they should know the extent of our coasts, our inlets and bays, our rivers and harbors, and they should ascertain to some extent the importance of each to the commerce of the nation. That subject being committed to a single committee, it can investigate it and comprehend it and make intelligible appropriations for it. Now I concede that there is much of force in that argument. But will the gentlemen who insist upon it tell me why the Committee on Commerce is any better qualified to make appropriations for rivers and harbors than is the Committee on Military Affairs to make appropriations for the support of the Army, or the Committee on Naval Affairs for the maintenance of the Navy? Why is it that the Committee on Commerce shall appropriate for rivers and harbors, and at the same time you will deny to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the right to investigate and report the necessary appropriations for the Post-Office Department?

Sir, there is an appropriateness in submitting the various subjects of appropriations to these independent and important committees. I believe that if this House will make the experiment it will find my prediction to be true, that you will have a more intelligent and more thorough and more economical administration of the Government, if you will give to each of the committees the duty of preparing the appropriation bills for the particular department that by the rules is committed to the consideration of that committee. If you will give to the Committee on Military Affairs the duty of preparing the appropriation bill for the maintenance of the Army, that committee will examine the military departments of the Government, will ascertain the number of troops, the number and rank of the officers, the number of clerks in the department, the number of military posts, and everything pertaining to the military establishment of the country. If any abuses exist they will ascertain them and will be ready to correct them.

It is simply absurd to assume that a single committee of this House can know more of everything that is being done by the different Departments of the Government than would be ascertained if that work was separated and the subjects relating to each particular branch of the Government committed to separate and distinct committees. I assume that every committee of this House is the peer of the Committee on Appropriations. I assume that every member of each of the committees of this House is the equal of each individual member of the Committee on Appropriations; that each is as anxious as the other that there shall be an honest and economical administration of the Government.

And instead of the system which I have indicated leading to extravagance, my belief is that each committee will vie with the others in bringing its work before this House so as to show that it has done something in the way of lessening the burdens of the people. It will be a race of economy and not of extravagance, in my honest opinion.

I know, as the commander of the left flank of the Committee on Military Affairs, that it will be my pride to assist that committee in making appropriations that may be committed to it, and to bring into this House a work that shall commend itself not only to the House, but to the country, and I believe that same spirit would animate every member of every other committee.

I confess to you, Mr. Chairman, that I feel somewhat sensitive upon that subject. People at home judge of the standing of their Representatives by the frequency with which they appear on the floor of this House and the frequency with which their names occur in the Associated Press dispatches. Consulting that record, the people have been inclined to believe that this Congress is composed of about fifteen men and that they all happen to be members of the Committee on Appropriations. Now, I am opposed to that. And I am opposed to it for another reason, in stating which I certainly intend no reflection upon any one. In looking over the committee to which has been assigned this important duty of making appropriations I find the names of perhaps the most distinguished persons in the legislative annals of the nation, certainly the names of those men to whom the leadership of the several political parties may with propriety have been assigned; yet when we commit practically the whole business of legislation to a single committee, and then give the selection of that committee under the rule to the Speaker, where it may and where it ought to belong, we simply create in that committee a little aristocracy and make the Speaker the autocrat of a republic. That is all there is of it.

It gives him the power to make and unmake men. Whatever there may be of mettle in a man, whatever may be his ability, whatever he might accomplish if he had opportunity, under this arrangement he has no opportunity unless he happens to be one of a fortunate few. I am opposed to this. I am opposed to it in behalf of the younger members of the House, those who have not been or may not be permitted to serve their constituencies for many years—those gentlemen who, as is suggested by a friend near me, have only placed their feet on the mountain-top and are looking over into the promised land. I am in favor of giving these men opportunity; and I do hope that this House may inaugurate this reform and give it a trial at least for a time. Let us see whether we cannot adopt a system which will give to the people a more efficient and economical administration of the Government. I have faith that such will be the result. I shall therefore vote for the amendment to transfer the several subjects of appropriation to the different committees, and until this rule is adopted I shall vote with all my heart to give the Committee on Appropriations the exclusive control of the appropriations for rivers and harbors. If the appropriations for the Army must go to the Committee on Appropriations I would send the rivers and harbors also to that committee. If they are to have charge of the appropriations properly belonging to any other committee, let them appropriate for all. I would send the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Appropriations for another reason: because I believe that out of the $55,000,000 appropriated for this purpose during the last ten years one-half might as well have been taken to those rivers and harbors and sunk to the bottom.

Mr. DUNNELL. I suppose the gentleman is merely expressing an opinion.

Mr. BROWNE. I am simply expressing an opinion; that is all. My friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] is an advocate for the improvement of rivers and harbors in his section, and if he can get $100,000 for them is willing to give four or five millions to everybody else. Let him be made chairman of a committee sent out to find what has become of the $125,000,000 expended in this way within the last twenty years, and he cannot schedule a proper appropriation for fifty millions of it.

Mr. ACKLEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that unless the appropriation bills were distributed to the various committees which he has mentioned he would propose to send the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BROWNE. That is precisely what I said.

Mr. ACKLEN. Does the gentleman believe that the river and harbor bill should go to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BROWNE. No, sir.

Mr. ACKLEN. Then why would you send it there?

Mr. BROWNE. Simply because——

Mr. ACKLEN. Because you cannot get the others referred as you want them.

Mr. BROWNE. Because I simply want that bill to share the common fate. I do not want to discriminate in its favor—to give it a preference over all others. If it be the sense of this House that the Committee on Appropriations may appropriate for everything else, I take it for granted it may appropriate for rivers and harbors also. I will send the river and harbor bill to that committee for another reason—so that I can secure the influence of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] and his friends in doing what is just to the other committees of this House. The gentleman has my answer.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules revising the rules of the House, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 368) for the relief of Emanuel Klauser;

An act (S. No. 401) for the relief of Peter Meagher;

An act (S. No. 752) granting an increase of pension to Crafts J. Wright; and

An act (S. No. 931) to admit free of duty all articles intended for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition of milling and mill machinery, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, commencing May 31, 1880.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3503) to authorize the refunding of the national debt, for reducing the burden of annual interest thereon, and to improve the public credit; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PATENT FOR PRINTING-MACHINES.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3504) authorizing the extension of letters-patent No. 38200, granted to William Bullock, April 4, 1863, for improvements in printing-machines; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

REBECCA ADAMS.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3505) granting relief to Rebecca Adams, widow of John L. Adams, deceased; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

IMPROVEMENT OF SUSQUEHANNA AT HAVRE DE GRACE.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the House, as soon as practicable, the amount of money necessary to deepen the channel of the Susquehanna River at the port of Havre de Grace, in the State of Maryland; and also to report any obstructions in said river that tend to fill up the channel above or below said port, and the cost of removing the same.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF ALLEGHENY RIVER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. REAGAN, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House, at as early a day as practicable, of the manner in detail of the expenditure of the money appropriated by the Forty-fifth Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Allegheny River in the State of Pennsylvania; and also the amount of money that may be necessary to complete the improvements already commenced, and also the amount which may be necessary to improve the navigation of said river from Olean, in the State of New York, to the headwaters of the Ohio River at Pittsburgh.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREEDMAN'S BANK DEPOSITORS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present at this time the petition of a large number of depositors in the Freedman's Bank, and to ask by unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAZELTON. I object, and demand the regular order of business.

CORRECTION OF ENROLLMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the House to make an order in reference to House bill No. 1305, abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands, which by resolution of the House was recalled from the Senate to correct an error in its engrossment. That error has now been corrected, and the Chair has the corrected bill in his hands. The practice requires the House shall direct the Clerk to forward the same to the Senate as corrected. If there is no objection that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

TAKING OF THE CENSUS.

Mr. CHALMERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3506) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Census, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. SAPP, (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 14, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, relative to the joint resolution of Congress for the relief of Bushrod B. Taylor and others, showing the appointment of the board of three officers, as required by the resolution, and their conclusions relative to the cases brought to their notice; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BECK. I present the petition of Mrs. William W. Bruce, Cassius M. Clay, Mary S. Hoyt, Jacob Smedley, George E. Spencer, and other citizens of the State of Kentucky, county of Fayette, and city of Lexington, praying for the following amendment to the national Constitution:

ARTICLE XVI.

The right of suffrage in the United States shall be based on citizenship, and shall be regulated by Congress; and all citizens of the United States, native or naturalized, shall enjoy this right equally, without any distinction founded on sex.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I also present the petition of Charlotte B. Walsh, Amelia Stewart, J. D. Walsh, J. M. Huff, and other citizens of Ashland, Boyd County, Kentucky, and the petition of Annie Laurie Quinby, of Newport, Campbell County, Kentucky, praying for a like amendment of the Constitution. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of Horace P. Gaines, James Turner, John H. Jackson, and William Taylor, a committee on the part of the colored depositors of Lexington, Kentucky, praying for the passage of an act to reimburse the depositors for losses sustained by the failure of the Freedman's Bank; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I present the petition of Elizabeth H. Duvall and others, citizens of Cadiz, Trigg County, Kentucky, and the petition of Mrs. S. S. Bennett and others, citizens of Richmond, Madison County, Kentucky, to the same effect as those presented by my colleague relative to an amendment of the Constitution. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of Benoni Mills and John C. Weddle, late privates in the First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, praying indemnity for property lost in the military service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair presents the petition of Mary E. Hughes, of Savona, New York, and the petition of Elizabeth Schoonmaker, of New York, of similar import to those just presented by the Senators from Kentucky, relative to an amendment of the Constitution with regard to suffrage. They will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the petition of Mrs. A. E. Morris and others, of Dubuque, Iowa; the petition of Anna B. Ross, of West Liberty, Iowa; the petition of Mrs. M. B. Hamilton Harvey, of Ringgold, Iowa; the petition of Emily Gibson Booth, of West Liberty, Iowa, and the petition of Mary V. S. Cowgill, of West Liberty, Iowa, praying for an amendment to the Constitution for the removal of their political disabilities. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I present the petition of Mary G. Townshend, Lydia P. Cowgill, Almira Jepson, E. M. Jepson, William D. Hamill, D. E. Mackey, and others, citizens of West Branch, Cedar County, Iowa, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in the particular mentioned in the petitions which have been presented this morning. These people are my neighbors, living in the adjoining county. I know many of them. They are most excellent and respectable citizens. I move that their petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of S. R. Urbino and others, citizens of Newton, Middlesex County, Massachusetts, and the petition of Mrs. J. G. Ford and others, citizens of Enfield, Hampshire County, Massachusetts, praying for a like amendment to the Constitution. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I present the petition of Mrs. J. M. Brown, Mrs. M. A. Blackman, Mrs. E. C. Hendricks, Mrs. E. A. Thompson, Lydia F. Conway, Grace Anderson, S. H. Blackman, Chandler Richards, and others, citizens of Paw Paw, Van Buren County, Michigan; the petition of Ella S. Hopkins, Lou. C. Wise, Clara V. Hale, George W. Hopkins, Daniel Wise, Charles A. Andrews, and others, citizens of Bear Lake, Manistee County, Michigan; and the petition of Mrs. S. W. Fowler, Mrs. D. C. Pelton, S. W. Fowler, J. A. Brown, M. D., and others, citizens of Manistee, Manistee County, Michigan, praying for a like amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of H. I. Glowacki and others, citizens of Batavia, New York, praying for the passage of the joint resolution, now pending before the Committee on Finance, depriving United States Treasury notes of their legal-tender power in the payment of private debts; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of P. J. Reuss, M. D., of New York, praying that the pension paid him under special act approved June, 1878, be increased from a half to a full pension, and also that he be paid arrears of pension, under the act of January 25, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of New York, officially signed, representing four hundred and fifty lodges and twenty-five thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KERNAN. I present the petition of Rebecca P. Thorn, of Galen, Wayne County, New York; the petition of Sarah Allerton, of Bath, Steuben County, New York; and the petition of Phœbe M. Varney and others, citizens of North Collins, Erie County, New York, praying an amendment of the Constitution by which women who are citizens shall be allowed to vote. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Tennessee, officially signed, representing a membership of ten thousand, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Harvey E. Aden, of Henry County, Tennessee, praying for the passage of a law granting him compensation for certain quartermaster stores furnished the Army of the United States during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of Matilda Wallace and others, citizens of Hammondville, Jefferson County, Ohio; the petition of Mrs. J. A. Newton and others, citizens of Willoughby County, Ohio; the petition of Mrs. B. P. Ludlow and others, citizens of Auburn, Geauga County, Ohio; the petition of S. A. Miller and others, citizens of Mount Gilead, Monroe County, Ohio, and the petition of Nettie Helman and others, citizens of Minerva, Stark County, Ohio, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Delilah Phelps; the petition of Mrs. J. P. Angier; the petition of Sarah A. Bissell; the petition of Emma C. Mott, and the petition of Mary J. Barker, all of the city of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the removal of their political disabilities; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Mary B. Gleason, of Toledo, Ohio, and the petition of Louisa Southworth, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of John Guthrie and 65 other citizens of Wilmington, Delaware, praying for the passage of a law to repeal the compulsory legal-tender power of United States Treasury notes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD. I also present the petition of Joseph P. Comegys, John W. Hall, and others, citizens of Delaware, praying for the passage of Senate resolution No. 49, in relation to United States notes, and coupled with it is a resolution of the general board of directors of the Farmers' Bank of Delaware and its branches favoring the same action. I move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of the shareholders of the Central and South American Cable Company, praying for facilities to establish telegraphic communication between the United States and Central and South America via the Gulf of Mexico, the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and the Pacific Ocean. I have with this petition a resolution instructing the Committee on Commerce to make certain inquiries, and also a request that the petition be printed. It seems to me that under the rules of the Senate the more proper motion for me to make is that the resolution and the petition go together to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I shall ask that committee to decide whether the petition ought to be printed or not, and whether the resolution is appropriate to order. I make the motion for reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of ship-owners of Boston, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of a bill to amend the law relative to the seizure of vessels for breach of the revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. I present resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the Society of the Fifth Army Corps, at Albany, New York, in June last, touching the case of Major-General Fitz-John Porter. These resolutions, adopted by men who served with General Porter, and by men, I may say, of all political persuasions, extol him greatly, and express the confident belief that he should be relieved from the visitation which has fallen upon him as an officer. I move that these resolutions be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a petition signed by a number of citizens of the State of New York, who were soldiers and sailors, who have lost an arm above the elbow or a leg below the knee, praying that their pensions be increased from $24 to $30 a month. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present four several memorials signed numerously by citizens of New York, who were soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 496, and pointing out how unjustly, as they think, it would operate. I move the reference of these memorials to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of Emma Hughes, a citizen of the State of New York, living in the town of Savona, representing that she is an owner of real estate and is annually taxed for the support of pauperism and crime while she has no power to suppress vice or regulate taxation, and praying for the removal of her political disabilities. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a like petition of Harriet E. Beech, a citizen of the city of New York, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present four petitions, which together are signed by a great number of women who are citizens of the State of New York, praying for an amendment to the Constitution, the words of which are proposed in the petition. I will not read the proposed amendment, but it is designed to confer the right of suffrage equally upon all citizens without distinction founded on sex. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I present the petition of Abbie B. Trego and others, citizens of Orion, Henry County, Illinois, and the petition of Norman McLeod and others, citizens of Chicago, Cook County, Illinois, couched in pretty much the same language as those last presented by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] praying that the right of suffrage be conferred on women by an amendment to the Constitution. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Catharine Cornell Knowles and others, citizens of East Greenwich, Rhode Island, praying for an amendment to the Constitution denying the right of the United States or of any State to abridge suffrage on account of sex; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BALDWIN presented the petition of Mary McDiarmid and others, citizens of Pleasanton, Manistee County, Michigan; and the petition of Hattie A. N. Taylor and others, citizens of Constantine, Saint Joseph County, Michigan, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right of suffrage; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of Florence Hardin, of Pendleton, Madison County, Indiana, praying for the removal of her political disabilities so that she may exercise her right to vote, all State constitutions and statute laws to the contrary notwithstanding which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the petition of Lucy L. Cornell, of Hebron, Thayer County, Nebraska, and the petition of Kate T. F. Cornell, of Alexandria, Thayer County, Nebraska; the petition of Mrs. J. B. Vawtrey and other citizens of the towns of Alexandria, Carleton, and Belvidere, Thayer County, Nebraska, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I also present the petition of Sarah A. Church and several others, of Thayer County, Nebraska, representing that they are real-estate owners and that they are annually taxed heavily for the support of pauperism and crime, while they assert that at the same time they have no power to suppress vice or to regulate taxation; and they pray for the removal of their political disabilities. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of E. G. Hoffman, late private Fifth New York Volunteers, Duryea's Zouaves, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARLEY. I present the petition of Lucy A. Brimblecome, Anna Jacobs, Lizzie Saul Woodthams, and a number of other ladies of Santa Clara County, California, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote. I will say that while I present the petition by request, I do not concur in the prayer of the petitioners. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I present the petition of Annie K. Irvine, the petition of Kate Schatz, and the petition of Elizabeth Evans, citizens of Oregon, Holt County, Missouri, similar in character to those which have been presented this morning, praying for an amendment to the Constitution giving women the right to vote. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Andrews, Jessie Wyatt, and other citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, and the petition of Lucy A. Christian, Annie K. Irvine, and others, citizens of Oregon, Missouri, praying for the same amendment to the Constitution stated in the petitions just presented by my colleague. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I present the petition of E. J. Hughes and others, and the petition of Anna Schermerhorn, Lizzie S. Moore, and others, citizens of Nebraska, praying for an additional article of amendment to the Constitution which shall be known as article XVI, and read as follows:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of sex, or for any reasons not equally applicable to all citizens of the United States.

I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I also present the petition of Barbary J. Thompson, the petition of Clara A. Thompson, and the petition of Susan E. Fergusson, of Thayer County, Nebraska, making the same prayer. I move that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I also present a petition signed by 150 citizens of the same county, among whom I discover the names of prominent men of the county, making a like prayer. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOOTH presented the petition of Mary Jewell and others, citizens of Healdsburgh, Sonoma County, California, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I present the petition of Frederic A. Hinckley, Martha W. Greene, Anna E. Aldrich, and others, citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote. I desire to say that the signers of this petition are men and women of high respectability and intelligence. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I present the petition of Lucretia Mott and others, citizens of Philadelphia, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to all citizens of the United States, native or naturalized, the right to vote without any distinction of sex. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I present five individual petitions from citizens of the city of Philadelphia and of Crawford County, Pennsylvania, praying for the removal of political disabilities without any distinction founded on sex. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Pennsylvania, officially signed, representing twelve thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of Elizabeth G. Hedge and others, citizens of Hyde Park, Norfolk County, Massachusetts, and the petition of Hannah Wilbur and others, citizens of Worcester, Worcester County, Massachusetts, praying for a sixteenth amendment to the national Constitution to the effect that all citizens of the United States shall enjoy the right of suffrage, without any distinction founded on sex. I move that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of Anna C. Wait and others, citizens of Lincoln, Lincoln County, Kansas, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHYTE presented the petition of A. Shumaker & Co. and other ship-owners and merchants of Baltimore, and the petition of C. Morton Stewart & Co. and other merchants of Baltimore, praying for the passage of an act amending the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for the breach of the revenue laws; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McDONALD presented the petition of Mrs. Z. G. Wallace, of Indianapolis, Indiana, praying for the removal of her political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Francis Atkinson and others, citizens of Oxford, Benton County, Indiana, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of Mira P. Sturgis and others, citizens of New Gloucester, Cumberland County, Maine, praying for an amendment of the national Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of Delia S. Morris and others, citizens of Kent, Portage County, Ohio; the petition of Mayde M. Flower and others, citizens of Alliance, Stark County, Ohio; the petition of W. G. Meyers and others, citizens of Lawrence and Beach City, Ohio; the petition of Lizzie N. Vogenitz and others, citizens of New Comerstown, Tuscarawas County, Ohio; the petition of J. H. Philleo and others, citizens of Parkman, Geauga County, Ohio; and the petition of Eva L. Pinney and others, citizens of Newbury, Geauga County, Ohio, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Matilda J. Berra; the petition of Mary J. Cravens; the petition of Elizabeth R. Collins; the petition of Martha A. Stebbins; the petition of Rosa S. Segur; the petition of Eliza N. Bailey, and the petition of Elizabeth M. Hawley, praying for the removal of their political disabilities; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 578) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Davis, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of the "old settlers" of Western Cherokee Indians, praying for a settlement and payment of the balance claimed to be due them from the United States under the treaties of 1835, 1836, and 1846, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William Longnecker, asking compensation for the use and occupation of certain houses by the Army of the United States in 1865 and 1866, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Abby A. Ham and Abby S. Vose and others, heirs of James S. Ham, deceased, and of John W. Vose, of Providence, Rhode Island, praying for an issue of United States bonds in lieu of stolen bonds, have instructed me to report it back to the Senate recommending that the prayer of the petitioners be not granted, and that the claim be not allowed. I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] to the case, as the petitions were presented by him. I ask that the adverse report be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule all adverse reports are printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask that the case be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to its being placed on the Calendar, but the case went through the same process under a different name in the Forty-fourth Congress. I shall simply ask, when it is reached on the Calendar, that it may be considered and disposed of, so that it may not be pending eternally here in the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that the case has not heretofore been reported adversely upon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I state a fact which the records of the Senate show, and I would not state it unless it were a record fact. Judge Wright, chairman of the Committee on Claims of the Senate in the Forty-fourth Congress, reported it adversely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would inquire of the Senator from Missouri if there is a bill accompanying the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no bill; there is simply a memorial on which we report. There were two bills in the Forty-fourth Congress, but there has been no bill introduced this Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the case cannot be placed on the Calendar. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 298) for the relief of Van B. Bowers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 52) for the relief of John N. Reed, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 877) to relieve the Treasurer of the United States from the amount now charged to him and deposited with the several States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 455) for the relief of Reuben S. Jones, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George W. J. Crawford, of Benton County, Mississippi, praying compensation for property taken and appropriated by United States military forces during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 76) for the relief of M. F. Clark, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2003) for the relief of J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, of Clinton County, Kentucky, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 891) to locate and purchase a new site for the United States Naval Observatory, reported it without amendment.

ROADWAYS IN CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. WALLACE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to correct an error in the "Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes." I ask the Senate to proceed to its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It amends the clause in the first section of the "Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879, which makes an appropriation "for the payment of retained percentages on contracts made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, for paving roadways in Capitol grounds, $2,217.94," so as to read: "for payment of retained percentages on contracts made during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1876, for paving roadways in Capitol grounds, $2,217.94."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1021) to carry into effect the second and sixteenth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Great and Little Osage Indians, proclaimed January 21, 1867; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1022) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of settlers on what are known as the Osage Indian trust lands, in Southern Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BLAIR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1024) for the relief of Tappan S. Carter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1025) fixing the relative rank and pay of certain officers on the retired list of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1026) for the relief of Daniel J. Benner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1027) to provide for the establishing of terms of court in the district of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1028) in relation to the claims of States against the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1029) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, paymaster United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1030) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens, postmaster at Manchester, New Hampshire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 63) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of James E. Kelsey, John Loughlin, Theron Kelsey, and others against the United States for damages done to the schooner C. and C. Brooks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, George T. Rogers, Benjamin P. Gaines, and Charles Ford; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARLAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, George T. Rogers, Benjamin P. Gaines, and Charles Ford; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WHYTE, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Jacob and Elizabeth Sener be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, to accompany Senate bill No. 354.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Thomas M. Simmons be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, Louisiana, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Samuel B. Brightman be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

DORSEY AND SHEPARD.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. No. 212) for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William F. Shepard.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the payment of $9,021.33 to John M. Dorsey, and of $3,746.66 to William F. Shepard, in full settlement for beef and supplies furnished certain volunteer troops by Dorsey, Shepard, and one S. B. Wallace, while the troops were engaged in quelling the Indian disturbances in the Territory of Utah, now the State of Nevada, in the year 1860.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill is favorably reported from the Committee on Claims, which proposes an amendment——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL on the 7th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 212, entitled "A bill for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William F. Shepard," have considered the same, and submit the following report thereon:

This bill has been three times favorably reported in the Senate and once in the House of Representatives. The bill passed the Senate February 17, 1876. No adverse report has ever been made upon it.

We adopt the report of Mr. Pratt, made to the Senate from this committee February 11, 1875, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Let the Clerk read what appears on the first page of the report made by Mr. Pratt on the 11th of February, 1875.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, read that, for what was just read did not give us a great deal of substantial information.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That report fully states the facts, and after it is read I think the Senator from Vermont will be satisfied that the bill ought to pass.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read from the report submitted by Mr. Pratt on the 11th of February, 1875, embodied in the report of January 7, 1880, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1073) for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William Shepard, submit the following report:

The bill directs the payment to John M. Dorsey of $9,088, and to William Shepard $3,788, in full settlement for beef and supplies furnished the troops by Wallace, Dorsey & Shepard, and by S. B. Wallace, in quelling the Indian disturbances in the Territory of Utah, now the State of Nevada, in the year 1860.

The bill is based on the petition of Dorsey and Shepard to Congress, which is sworn to by Dorsey, and is substantially as follows in its statements: That in the spring of 1860 they were engaged in business in said Territory, when great alarm existed among the inhabitants of the western portions of Utah in consequence of the depredations of the Pi-Ute Indians; that an irregular force of about one hundred of the best citizens was organized, and armed with such weapons as they could procure, and went out from Virginia and Carson Cities to chastise the Indians; that the expedition fell into ambush, and about sixty of the citizens, including Major Ormsby, their commander, were killed, and the others dispersed; that great excitement and alarm followed among the citizens, and it was feared the neighboring towns would be attacked, the Indians having assembled in large force. There were no troops, arms, or government nearer than Salt Lake, five or six hundred miles distant. Under these circumstances the governor of California and the United States officer in command of the Department of the Pacific sent forward to Virginia City arms and ammunition in charge of proper officers. Two or three hundred volunteers also came along with the United States troops. The citizens of Virginia City and its vicinity united with these volunteers and regular troops and organized a regiment, and selected Colonel John C. Hays to take command. The troops thus organized and commanded marched against the Indians, and, after some severe fighting, conquered a peace.

The memorial further states that upon the organization of this force it was without quartermaster or commissary supplies; and in order to obtain them Richard N. Snowden was appointed commissary, and as such entered into a verbal contract with said Wallace and the petitioners to furnish certain supplies; that in conformity therewith the three named furnished them to the amount of $12,868, which was certified to and vouchers therefor issued by said Snowden as commissary. One for the sum of $1,528 was issued to S. B. Wallace; one to John M. Dorsey, S. B. Wallace, and William Shepard for $5,050; and a third one to the three last-named parties for $6,190; that Wallace died in 1862, but before his death assigned to Dorsey all his right, title, and interest in all of the certified accounts; that Dorsey is the just owner of the first-mentioned account (that for $1,528) and of two-thirds of the other two, amounting in the aggregate to $9,088, and that Shepard is the owner of one-third of the last two, amounting to $3,780. The petitioners close by saying they furnished these supplies for the purposes stated in good faith, believing that they would be paid in a short time, and that the prices charged were low for the time, places, and circumstances.

At the suggestion of the sub-committee having this bill in charge, Mr. Dorsey has appended an affidavit to the memorial, and in this he swears that he is one of the claimants therein; that he knows all the statements made therein are true of his own knowledge; that the supplies were actually furnished as stated; that the amount claimed is justly due, the charges reasonable, and that no part thereof has been paid him or any of the other parties; that the amount of money subscribed by the citizens of Virginia City and vicinity had been exhausted, and this fact was the reason and necessity for Colonel Hays and Colonel Snowden making the verbal contract with claimants to furnish said supplies; and had they not, in conjunction with Jordan and McPike, furnished the necessary supplies, the expedition must have failed.

Mr. Dorsey further states in explanation of the long delay in bringing the claim before Congress that it had been duly filed in the War Department, which had finally ruled that there was no law which authorized its payment; that it was then put into the hands of agents, who did nothing; that neither of the claimants possessed the pecuniary means to come to Washington; that about the year 1865 the triplicate vouchers were placed in the hands of Hon. D. R. Ashley, then a member of Congress from Nevada, to present to Congress, but he lost all the papers; that circumstances and sickness in his family prevented him from coming to Washington until recently, and from employing agents. He closes by saying much of his evidence is among the papers in the claim of McPike, which was allowed at the last session of Congress and has been paid.

The following papers are furnished by the War Department in regard to these claims, and sufficiently explain themselves:

The United States of America to S. B. Wallace, Dr.

To supplies furnished the expedition under command of Colonel Jack Hays against the Pi-Ute Indians, in the Territory of Utah, as follows:

To 600 pounds of flour, at 70 cents..... $420 00

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Clerk need not read the mere items. Anything the War Department states about the claim I should like to hear; but the details are of no consequence. Is there anything from the War Department?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is on page 3 of the report. The Senator desires the Clerk to read what the War Department report in regard to the claim.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, December 10, 1869.

The Secretary of War, in compliance with the request of the Committee on Claims of the United States Senate, dated April 1, 1869, has the honor to furnish all the information in possession of the War Department relative to the war against the Pah-Utah Indians in the year 1860, and to return to said committee the list of claims against the United States arising out of said war.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

List of claims for the war against the Pah-Utah Indians in 1861——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care about the list. Does the War Department say anything about the justice of the thing and that it actually took place?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is no question about the fact that it actually did take place. There was an Indian uprising, and there was no military force anywhere nearer than San Francisco, unless, perhaps, at Salt Lake City. Under those circumstances, the governor of California, in conjunction with the United States military commander at that place, sent arms to Virginia City, and some volunteers came from California. Citizens of that part of Utah Territory, now in the State of Nevada, volunteered and joined themselves with the force that came from California. They organized themselves into a regiment, selected officers, and appointed a commissary. There were no supplies for these troops, and the men who now make this claim furnished a portion of the supplies, the larger portion of them in fact. There is no question about the facts of the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did the United States in any way ever recognize or adopt this military expedition? Did they ever pay these troops or do anything about it; or was there a subscription or a fund raised by the citizens to pay for this private organization and its existence?

While I am up, I will state the difficulty that occurs to my mind. This may be, and very likely is, a just case in and of itself; that is, these gentlemen did furnish these supplies; but whether they furnished them on the credit of the United States is, perhaps, open to question; or, if they did, whether they had any right to do so. Of course, in an extreme case, we are sometimes obliged to adopt private acts and foot the bill; but it is a very dangerous step to take, because recognizing the validity of this claim as against the United States, would seem to imply that we recognize the validity of the claims of all these volunteers for military service, and so on. In other words, it amounts to an adoption by Congress, a ratification, of this proceeding by these citizens in their own defense. If we are to apply that to all the United States and to all the turbulence that exists in various parts of the United States from time to time, we are taking a very serious step. I merely throw out that view by way of inquiry that we may see where we are likely to land; that is all.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This claim, with some others, was presented to the Government of the United States, to the proper Department. After long consideration the Department decided that there was no law under which payment could be made, and the claims were referred to Congress. So far as I know, the volunteers upon that occasion have made no claim against the United States. Only those who furnished the commissary supplies for the expedition have made claims, and a portion of those claims have been paid; indeed all have been paid except this one. The whole amount was very small, being about $12,000 or $15,000. I think there is no question whatever about the justice of the claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10 it is proposed to strike out "B" and insert "S;" so as to read "S. S. Wallace."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN OHIO.

Mr. THURMAN. The bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, passed the Senate yesterday. It has been discovered that there is a clerical error in our amendments to it. I move that a message be sent to the House requesting the return of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD P. VOLLUM.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 296) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add:

And that the aggregate amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $700.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to ascertain the value of the property lost by Assistant Surgeon Edward P. Vollum, of the United States Army, who, while under orders of the War Department, was on board the brig Fawn, bound for Fort Umpqua, Oregon Territory, when she was wrecked, on the 21st November, 1856; and the amount so ascertained shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no allowance be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while on the voyage and engaged in the public service, and that the aggregate amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS OF TOTALLY DISABLED PENSIONERS.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 815) to increase the pensions of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who are utterly helpless from injuries received or disease contracted while in the United States service.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all soldiers and sailors who are now receiving a pension of $50 per month, under the provisions of "An act to increase the pension of soldiers and sailors who have been totally disabled," approved June 18, 1874, shall receive, in lieu of all pensions now paid them by the Government of the United States, $72 per month.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, with an amendment, to strike out section 2 in the following words:

That this act shall take effect from and after the 17th day of June, 1878.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

All pensioners whose pensions shall be increased by the provisions of this act from $50 per month to $72 per month shall be paid the difference between said sums monthly, from June 17, 1878, to the time of the taking effect of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. There is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, January 12:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred bill (S. No. 815) to increase the pensions of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who are entirely helpless from injuries received or disease contracted while in the United States service, have considered the same, and report:

By an act approved June 18, 1874, it was provided:

"That section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions,' and approved March 3, 1873, be so amended that all persons who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have been so permanently and totally disabled as to require aid and attendance of another person, by the loss of the sight of both eyes or by the loss of the sight of one eye, the sight of the other having been previously lost, or by the loss of both hands, or by the loss of both feet, or by any other injury resulting in total and permanent helplessness, shall be entitled to a pension of $50 per month; and this shall be in lieu of a pension of $31.25 per month granted to such person by said section: Provided, That the increase of pension shall not be granted by reason of any of the injuries herein specified, unless the same have resulted in permanent, total helplessness, requiring the regular personal aid and attendance of another person."

This act was altered by an act approved June 17, 1878, which is as follows:

"An act to increase the pension of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both eyes in the service of the country.

"Whereas it is apparent that the present pension paid to soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet in the service of the country is greatly inadequate to the support of such as have families: Therefore,

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on and after the passage of this act all soldiers and sailors who have lost either both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both eyes in the service of the United States shall receive, in lieu of all pensions now paid them by the Government of the United States, and there shall be paid to them, in the same manner as pensions are now paid to such persons, the sum of $72 per month.

"Approved June 17, 1878."

It appears from inquiry at the Pension Office "that on June 17, 1878, the names of seven hundred and thirteen pensioners were borne on the pension-rolls at $50 per month," and that "since that date the pensions of three hundred and seventy-seven pensioners have been increased to $72, and five original allowances have been made at that rate under the act of June 17, 1878."

Your committee are fully satisfied that the pensioners who under the act of June 18, 1874, were entitled to receive $50 per month, and whose pensions were not increased to $72 per month by the act of June 17, 1878, are fairly and justly entitled to receive the same benefits conferred on their comrades by the act last named.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out section 2 and inserting in lieu thereof, as follows:

"SEC. 2. All pensioners whose pensions shall be increased by the provisions of this act from $50 per month to $72 per month shall be paid the difference between said sums monthly from June 17, 1878, to the time of the taking effect of this act."

And that the bill so amended be passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have an explanation of the probable number that would be affected by the bill, and the class of persons to which they belong. I could not catch the exact number in hearing the report.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will explain the bill very briefly. There were three bills introduced looking to the same object, one presented by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] one by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] and one by myself. The Committee on Pensions directed me to report back the bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas, which has been done.

In 1874 an act was passed by Congress increasing from $31.25 per month to $50 per month the pensions of soldiers who were totally disabled, rendered so totally helpless as to require the constant aid of another person to take care of them. Among this class were those who had lost both feet, both hands, or both eyes. But, outside of those, there was a large number of persons, if anything, more helpless than they—men who were paralyzed, who were utterly unable to move about, to do anything for themselves, and who constantly required the attendance of another person. In 1878 a bill came from the House to the Senate increasing the pensions of those who had lost both feet, both hands, or both eyes, to $72 per month, but leaving their comrades, who were perhaps more helpless than they in many cases, without any increase of pension at all. When that bill was pending here I called the attention of the Senate to the unjust discrimination made against a portion of the men whose pensions had been increased in 1874, the paralytic or those who from any cause were totally helpless and required the constant attendance of another person. It was replied to me that it was a House bill, and if we did not pass it as it came to us, but sent it back to the House, it might fail wholly; and that those who were not provided for by that bill could be provided for in an independent bill, which bill is now here. That is all there is of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not the second section give all these pensioners pay, whether they were disabled or not, from June, 1878.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought there not to be a restriction in the bill so that those who are totally disabled shall receive the increased pay from the date of their total disability?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. By inquiry at the Pension Office I find that there are seven hundred and thirteen of these totally disabled pensioners altogether. Of that number three hundred and seventy-seven have had their pension raised to $72 per month, leaving the others unprovided for.

Mr. COCKRELL. Three hundred and seventy-seven who lost both arms, both legs, or both eyes?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes. This bill provides that those whose pensions were not increased by the act of 1878 shall have the increase, and that they shall have it from the date of the act of 1878, placing them in all respects upon an equality with those who were provided for by the act of 1878.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the bill is restricted to those who were totally disabled at that time?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. To those only who were totally disabled and required the attendance of another person to care for them.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3497) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for furniture and repairs of the same for the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan;

A bill (S. No. 765) to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) touching the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and theSenate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1305) abolishing the military reservations of Fort Abercrombie, Fort Seward, and Fort Ransom, all in the Territory of Dakota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein surveyed and made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 3497) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for furniture and repairs of the same for the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at one o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 14, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

JOHN B. HART.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3507) granting a pension to John B. Hart; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MUSCLE SHOALS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the following resolution; on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to furnish to this House a certified copy of the contract entered into by the late George Williams, of Iowa, for work upon the improvements in the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, together with a copy of the claim filed by said Williams or his heirs, the names of the engineers appointed to re-examine said work, with a copy of their report, together with all testimony on file in support of or touching said claim, and the authority upon which he paid said award.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN S. LOGAN AND W. L. SHADWICK.

On motion of Mr. FORD, by unanimous consent, the act (S. No. 24) for the relief of John S. Logan and W. L. Shadwick was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

L. C. CANTWELL.

On motion of Mr. FORD also, by unanimous consent, the act (S. No. 307) for the relief of L. C. Cantwell was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

THEOPHILUS P. CHANDLER.

On motion of Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, the act (S. No. 22) for the relief of Theophilus P. Chandler was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of claims.

ELI B. PARKER.

Mr. JOYCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3508) granting a pension to Eli B. Parker; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ALBERT J. DICKINSON.

Mr. JOYCE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3509) granting a pension to Albert J. Dickinson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

YORKTOWN CELEBRATION.

Mr. JOYCE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to present a memorial relating to the Yorktown monument, and, if there be no objection, that it be referred and also printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and the memorial was referred to the Select Committee on the Yorktown Celebration, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, residents of the city of Chicago, and born in New England, view with satisfaction the present movement to erect a national monument at Yorktown. The war of the Revolution, begun in New England, culminated in New York, and closed with the southern campaign, ending in the triumph at Yorktown. The three sections into which the country was then divided, New England, the Middle States, and the South, each bore its share in the sacrifices and earned the honors of the struggle. It is fitting that the nation should recognize in this centennial period the chief points in the great contest, and aid in erecting appropriate monuments to attest its gratitude to the men whose efforts made that nation possible. The battle of Bennington was second to none of these in importance. Burgoyne's expedition, planned in cabinet council at London, to cut off New England, then one-third of the country, from the rest of the colonies was likely to prove successful; and, but for the spontaneous rising of the men of New Hampshire, Vermont, and Western Massachusetts to resist it and defeat the attempt to seize the stores at Bennington, it would have been so. The brilliant victory of New England yeomen over disciplined forces aroused every section of the country to renewed effort, reinforced the northern army by the thousands, and thus insured the success of the Saratoga battles resulting in the capitulation of Burgoyne and his whole army. Consequent on this was the French alliance, without which there would have been no southern campaign and no victory at Yorktown. To the victory of Bennington, one of the most brilliant in the annals of that war, must be therefore accorded in large measure the achievement of the independence of America. An effort has been begun to so recognize it by erecting an imposing memorial structure at Bennington. The nation can do no less than to cordially second so praiseworthy an effort. That the Congress now in session will so legislate as to accomplish this object, as well as the Yorktown project, your petitioners will ever pray.

PAYMENT OF AWARDS.

Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3510) directing the payment of certain awards in favor of parties therein named; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ENOCH DAVIS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3511) for the relief of Enoch Davis, private Company G, Sixth Iowa Veteran Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MATTHEW M'DONNELL.

Mr. HAYES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3512) granting a pension to Matthew McDonnell; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ISSUE OF RAILROAD BONDS, DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. BENNETT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3513) legalizing an election held in the city of Yankton, Territory of Dakota, at which the proposition to issue bonds of the said city in aid of the construction of a certain railroad was submitted, and authorizing and directing the issuance of said bonds pursuant to said election; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

H. V. PHILPOTT.

Mr. MILLS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3514) for the relief of H. V. Philpott; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read a memorial from some soldiers.

The memorial was read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask that that memorial be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The memorial having been read to the House, I ask whether it is not proper that it should go into the RECORD, and whether one single objection can cut it out?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could not object until the memorial was read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It was read, and no objection was raised to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that where bills have been read they do not necessarily go into the RECORD, and the same rule by analogy would apply to memorials.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Who objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will permit the Chair to illustrate. Often on Monday bills are demanded to be read for the sake of consuming time. If those bills which are read were to go into the RECORD, the RECORD would be enormously burdened. And besides, it is a favor to a member to have his memorial read, as it gives to the House information in reference to the subject on which the member presenting it asks for action of the House. That is the gain secured by having the paper read. A member cannot object until he knows what it is, and he can only know whether it is a matter to which his objection will lie when the substance of what is presented to the House, as in the case of this memorial, has been read for information. The Chair understands that to be the position of the gentleman from Delaware to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

The memorial was received, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Subsequently Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, withdrew his objection.

The memorial is as follows:

PETITION.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The petition of the soldiers who served in the Union Army during the war of the rebellion respectfully represents:

That whereas it is conceded that the passage of what is known as the equalization bounty bill is a measure of justice, recognized already by its passage several times in the House of Representatives, and that the present is the opportune time to pass this bill, for the Treasury is overflowing with funds which could be devoted to no nobler purpose than to discharge an obligation to the men who in its hour of need stepped forward to save it from destruction; we therefore most respectfully, yet earnestly, beg of your honorable bodies without delay to pass this bill, and thus perform an act for which you will ever merit our thanks and gratitude.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

PENSIONS.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3515) to amend the act entitled "An act amending the laws granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and their widows, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1878; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN TAYLOR & SON.

Mr. COFFROTH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2609) for the relief of John Taylor & Son, of Newport, Kentucky; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF NAME OF YACHT.

Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3516) to change the name of the yacht Effie Mary to that of Effie; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ANN SMITH.

Mr. MORSE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3517) granting a pension to Ann Smith, widow of the late Levi Smith; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GARFIELD, for two days; and

To Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

PROTECTION OF RIO GRANDE FRONTIER.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (S. No. 53) making appropriations for acquiring sites and the erection of suitable posts for the protection of the Rio Grande frontier; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at thirty minutes past twelve o'clock and reports from committees are in order. The call rests with the Committee of Ways and Means.

IMPORTATION OF CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2524) in relation to the importation of classical antiquities and ancient coins and medals.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That no duty be levied or collected on any objects of classical antiquity imported into the United States, or on any coins or medals, but the same shall be wholly exempt from duty.

SEC. 2. That all provisions of law inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

In the fourth and fifth lines of the first section strike out the words "or on any coins or medals."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Let the report be read.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred House bill No. 2524, respectfully report:

There has been developed of late years among our intelligent and cultivated citizens a taste for the study of archæology, that is, of objects pertaining to the habits, customs, and the arts of antiquity.

A number of most valuable and beautiful collections of this kind have been brought into this country, where in all probability they will permanently remain, and become an important means of instruction in the development of American art, by affording our workmen an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the best forms of antiquity.

By antiquities is understood all objects made by man prior to A. D. 800, and include of course those extraordinary remains of a prehistoric people which are now attracting so much attention in the ethnological and historical world—and also those beautiful works of art which are daily brought to light from ancient tombs and the ruins of long-buried cities.

Objects of art subsequent to A. D. 800 are not comprehended under the term of "classical antiquities," but are denominated "curiosities."

Importations here of "antiquities" have now been unfortunately checked by the different constructions placed upon doubtful provisions of our tariff act.

In the list of free articles (volume 1 Revised Statutes, section 2505, page 484) is found "cabinets of coins, medals, and all other collections of antiquities."

In the same free list (page 489) are admitted collections specially imported and "not intended for sale."

The celebrated Castellani collection, although imported, was ruled by the Treasury Department that so far as respected the antique portion of it it "undoubtedly" belonged to the first-mentioned paragraph, and was therefore admitted without the payment of duty.

Another collection imported since that time by M. Fouardent into New York was entered and passed free, while a precisely similar collection recently brought into the same port by the same person has been decided by the Treasury authorities to come within the purview of the second paragraph, being "for sale," and subjected to a heavy duty. We thus see that the stone celts of the prehistoric period, valuable only to the ethnologist, are placed in the same category with the most expensive productions of modern luxury.

If this latter construction is to remain the law, the anomaly will be presented that while other countries rich in antiquities are passing laws prohibiting the exportation of their art treasures, we are doing all in our power to prevent their importation. These classical antiquities can of course interfere in no manner with any productions of American industry.

On the contrary, they will have a direct tendency to refine the taste of the American workman, and thus make him the better fitted to produce at home many articles of manufacture for which at present we have to depend upon foreign artists.

Your committee therefore report the following amended bill.

The amendment of the committee was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ACKLEN. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the necessity for changing the title of the bill, that it may be in accordance with the amendment just adopted.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Let the title be changed accordingly.

The title was amended by striking out the words "and ancient coins and medals."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMISSION OF DUTY ON AN ALTAR.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD also, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, a bill (H. R. No. 3058) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on an altar, from Rome, Italy, for the Saint John's cathedral of Indianapolis, Indiana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit or refund, as the case may be, the duties paid or accruing upon an altar from Rome, Italy, for Saint John's cathedral of Indianapolis, Indiana, arrived, or about to arrive, in the port of New York; said altar being designed for said cathedral and not for sale.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DE LA MATYR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMISSION OF DUTY ON A STAINED-GLASS WINDOW.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD also, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 153) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on a stained-glass window from Munich, Germany, for All Saints' church, in Saint Michael's parish, in Talbot County, Maryland.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit or refund, as the case may be, the duties paid or accruing upon a stained-glass window from Munich, Germany, for All Saints' church, in Saint Michael's parish, in Talbot County, Maryland, arrived, or about to arrive, in the port of Baltimore.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

In the seventh and eighth lines of the joint resolution amend by striking out the words "arrived or about to arrive," and insert "imported or about to be imported."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NIGHT INSPECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD also, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2508) to regulate the compensation of night inspectors of customs at the port of New York.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That on and after December 1, 1879, the compensation to inspectors of customs employed under section 2733 of the Revised Statutes for service at night at the port of New York shall be, and is hereby made, $3 for each night.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts being inconsistent with the above act are hereby repealed.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

In the sixth and seventh lines of the first section amend by striking out the words "at the port of New York."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Let the title be amended.

The title was amended by striking out the words "at the port of New York."

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3018) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MILLERS' INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3518) to authorize the importation of articles for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition, to be held at Cincinnati in 1880, free of duty; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the millers' international exhibition, to be held in the city of Cincinnati in the year 1880, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; provided that all such articles as shall be used in the United States or withdrawn for consumption therein at any time after such importation shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation; and further provided that in case any article imported under the provisions of this act shall be withdrawn for consumption or shall be sold without payment of duty as required by law, all the penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against persons who may be guilty of such withdrawal or sale.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask to have read some communications which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 17, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a communication addressed to this Department, under date of the 16th instant, by Mr. George Bain, president of the Millers' National Association of the United States, in which he states that an international exposition of milling machinery will be held on June 1, 1880, at Cincinnati, to which foreign inventors and dealers have been invited to exhibit their machinery in motion. Request is made therein that this Department issue orders for the free entry of such machinery, if within its power; and if not within its power, that the matter be brought to the attention of Congress.

The laws now in force do not authorize this Department to admit the articles to free entry for the purpose named; but, in accordance with the request of Mr. Bain, the copy of his letter is transmitted, with the recommendation that it receive favorable consideration at the hands of Congress.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of Treasury.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, December 16, 1879.

SIR: The Millers' National Association of the United States will, on June 1 next, hold an international exposition of milling machinery in Cincinnati, and I have invited foreign inventors and dealers to exhibit their machinery in motion. The association desires to ask you to permit such foreign machinery to come in bond, as it did to the Centennial Exhibition; and if the power to issue such an order is not in your hands, will you kindly bring the matter to the attention of Congress at your early convenience?

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE BAIN,
President Millers' National Association.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALBERT V. CONWAY.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 768) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee to John Vanzant, under and according to the will of James Vanzant, deceased, late of Washington City and District of Columbia, registered bonds of the United States, according to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, and at the rate of 4 per cent. interest thereon per annum, in lieu of the following certificates of registered bonds of the United States, redeemed or assigned upon forged assignments, to wit: No. 7406, act of March 3, 1865, and No. 26273, act of March 3, 1865, consols of 1865, each for $1,000, the property of said Albert V. Conway, trustee, substituted in place of said John Vanzant: Provided, however, That it shall be stipulated in each of said certificates issued under this act that no interest shall accrue or be payable upon either of them until and except from the death of Mary A. Boyd, who is entitled to a beneficial interest in said original bonds for her life, under the will of said James Vanzant, deceased. And the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to require satisfactory proof of the death of said Mary A. Boyd before paying any interest on said bonds issued under this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL-BANK RESERVES.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2715) requiring the reserves of the national banks to be kept in gold and silver coins of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the national-bank act be, and it is hereby, so amended as to require every banking association to keep, in gold or silver coins of the United States, one-half of the reserve fund now required by law.

SEC. 2. Any banking association failing to comply with the requirements of the first section of this act shall not be allowed to increase its liabilities by making any new loans or discounts otherwise than by discounting or purchasing bills of exchange payable at sight, nor make any dividend of its profits until the required proportion of coin has been restored. And the Comptroller of the Currency may notify any association whose lawful-money reserve shall be below the amount and proportion of coin as above required to be kept on hand to make good such reserve, and if such association shall fail for thirty days thereafter so to make good its reserve of lawful money in the proportion aforesaid, the Comptroller may, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, appoint a receiver to wind up the business of the association as provided in section 5234.

SEC. 3. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. I cannot yield for an amendment. I am directed by the committee to move the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. BUCKNER. I have no objection to the reading of the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert the following after section 1:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act the Treasury notes of the United States shall be receivable for all dues to the United States excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender; and any of said notes hereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

Mr. BUCKNER. I cannot yield for that amendment to be offered. I call the previous question.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will my friend from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. What will be the effect of the enactment of this bill into law upon the line of discounts now being made by the banks in the country? Will it tend to contraction or not? I have a fear that it will.

Mr. BUCKNER. If the House will give me its attention for a few moments I will explain the change which the committee propose by the passage of this bill to make in the present law upon the subject of bank reserves. As the law now stands there are two classes of national banks; one the banks in New York City and what are called the reserved cities, some ten or a dozen, which are required to keep 25 per cent. in amount of their actual deposits in legal-tenders, &c. The banks that are non-reserve, or what are known as country banks, are required to keep 15 per cent. of their deposits in legal-tenders, &c.

This bill affects only one-half of these reserves. It requires that one-half of the reserves on deposits, not on circulation, shall be kept in the gold and silver coins of the United States. There is no other change except the one requiring them to keep in coin one-half of the reserves now required by law on deposits. That is all the change that is proposed to be made.

Mr. Speaker, it is a very natural inquiry, what is to be the effect of this change of the law upon the national banks and their reserves? That question I will answer by incorporating in my remarks a statement from the Comptroller of the Currency, the substance of which I will briefly recite. It shows that on October 2, 1879, when the latest return was made from the non-reserve or country banks, those institutions, all of them, had coin in excess of the demands which this bill if enacted would make upon them. In other words, they have more than enough coin to constitute one-half of their reserve as required by this bill. The New York banks also have an excess of $22,000,000 more than this bill would require them to have as their reserve; and the other reserve banks have an excess of something like $400,000. The country banks are required to keep a reserve of only 15 per cent. Their coin reserve as returned in October last was $3,765,338, more than one-half of this 15 per cent. Hence, whether this bill be regarded as a wise measure or not, it will not and cannot affect the interests of the banks in regard to their reserves. The statement of the Comptroller of the Currency is as follows:

Statement of the cash reserve required and held by the national banks in New York City, and in the other reserve cities, as shown by the reports of their condition on December 12, 1879, and of the national banks in the States and Territories, as shown by the reports of their condition on October 2, 1879.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The gentleman from Missouri has not, as I understand, answered my inquiry, which was whether in his opinion this bill would tend toward contraction or expansion of the line of discounts now allowed by the banks of the country?

Mr. BUCKNER. It cannot possibly have any effect in that direction.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will my friend indulge me right here in one remark upon that point?

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly; I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. We are about to put through hurriedly a measure which, as I think, the House does not understand; nor has the gentleman answered definitely the inquiry which I have propounded to him, which seems to me a material one in regard to the business of the country.

Allow me to say, Mr. Speaker, that a turning-point in the policy to be pursued by this House in regard to the currency of the country is whether we shall depend upon the banks to furnish the solid basis for the convertibility of our currency, or shall depend for that purpose upon the Treasury of the United States. In passing upon this bill we are about to take a position upon that question unconsciously to the House and I believe unconsciously to the committee. I announce for one that I stand ready to abide by the fortune of the greenback of this country—to make the Treasury of the United States the authority to which we shall look for the conversion of our currency. I am not willing to depend for this purpose upon the Shylocks, the bankers and brokers of the country. I fear that this measure, if adopted, will turn us over to the bankers and brokers.

Mr. BUCKNER rose.

Mr. BRIGHT. Before the gentleman from Missouri resumes his remarks I call for the reading of the bill. I think it has not been heard by members generally.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will not demand the previous question, but will permit a motion to send the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEAVER. What objection has the gentleman from Missouri to allowing this bill to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? It is a very important bill and ought not to be passed without due consideration. I think the bill ought to be referred as I have indicated.

Mr. BUCKNER. I have no authority to consent to such a reference. The bill is a very plain one, and it seems to me does not require any great amount of discussion. So far as regards the intimation of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] that the bill may militate against the national greenback currency, I will say to him that the effect of the bill will be to withdraw that currency from the banks and put it in circulation, substituting a silver reserve for a greenback reserve. This would be the direct effect.

Mr. WEAVER. It may have that effect in one direction, while it may have a very deleterious effect in another. My impression is that the bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the previous question.

Mr. FRYE. I would like to make one inquiry.

Mr. BUCKNER. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. FRYE. Is there any objection on the part of the gentleman reporting this bill to having it go over until the morning hour of to-morrow? It has not been printed, or if printed, the attention of members has not been especially called to it, and they have not carefully examined it. I confess that I am not prepared to vote on the bill at present, and I judge from conversation which I hear around me that a great many other members are not prepared to vote upon it. The question has not been discussed heretofore at any length. I therefore ask the gentleman whether there is any objection to allowing the bill to go over till the morning hour of to-morrow, so that we may have time to read it?

Mr. BUCKNER. If it is the wish of members that the bill go over till to-morrow morning, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill may go over until the morning hour of to-morrow, to come up as unfinished business in that hour. Is there objection?

Mr. BRIGHT. Is that made with the understanding that the previous question shall be pending?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would reserve the same rights to the gentleman from Missouri he now has and among them would be his right, having reported the bill, to test the sense of the House by demanding the previous question.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRIGHT. It will not operate to supersede the motion if it be in order to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The previous question will cut off any other motion. That is the object, and a gentleman reporting the bill under the practice of the House has always had that right.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether this bill cannot be sent to the Committee of the Whole on a point of order?

The SPEAKER. It is now too late, if it was subject to any point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why?

The SPEAKER. Because it has been before the House and discussed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The bill has simply been read, and the gentleman having it in charge would not yield to a point of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. All points of order were reserved on my motion on the second reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That was too late, but the Chair is perfectly willing to take the responsibility of deciding the point of order.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will state what point of order it was that he made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make the point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I reserved all points of order. Besides it affects the revenue.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the bill the House must judge of. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SIMONTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. State it.

Mr. SIMONTON. In case the House votes down the motion pending, will then a motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole be in order?

The SPEAKER. The present condition of this bill is the motion asking unanimous consent that it may go over until to-morrow morning as unfinished business.

Mr. SIMONTON. In order that I may act intelligently on that suggestion, I ask the parliamentary inquiry whether, if we vote down the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, it will then be in order to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It would either to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Unless the gentleman from Missouri consents to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine, I must insist that the great doubt now existing——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has expressed his willingness to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then, I withdraw my objection and I hope the bill will take that course.

The SPEAKER. There being no further objection, this bill will be considered as the unfinished business and first in order in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON. I object.

Mr. WARNER. I hope that a vote will not be pressed on this bill this morning. I think we should have some time for its consideration.

Mr. COX. What is the present question? Is it the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the gentleman from West Virginia will withdraw his objection, because it only compels us to occupy fifteen minutes of time in a dilatory way.

Mr. WILSON. If it is the manifest purpose to call the yeas and nays to consume the morning hour this morning, so the bill may go over until to-morrow, then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. FRYE. I understand the gentleman withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. COX. I hope my friend from Missouri will occupy the fifteen minutes in explaining this bill, and then we will have it up to-morrow for further consideration and vote.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make an inquiry in order to get the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BUCKNER. You can get it to-morrow. I hope there will be no objection to the bill going over as unfinished business, to come up in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the gentleman from Missouri, I will try to call his attention to a point which I think should be explained.

The SPEAKER. There may be other committees wishing to report. Or, indeed, the Committee on Banking and Currency may have further reports to make in this morning hour.

Mr. BUCKNER. It has. But I will hear the question.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the object of the bill is to withdraw greenbacks from the banks.

Mr. BUCKNER. That may be the effect, but it is not the object of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. To substitute coin in place thereof.

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes.

Mr. REAGAN. Has the gentleman considered the question that if he forces the bank reserves to be held in coin sufficient coin cannot be conveniently secured by the Government without an additional sale of bonds to meet the interest on the public debt?

Mr. BUCKNER. They have an excess over the amount they are required to keep to the extent of some twenty-odd millions of dollars.

Mr. REAGAN. Excess of coin?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. Recently I noticed in the statistics that they only have $30,000,000 among the whole of them.

Mr. BUCKNER. As I stated in my opening remarks upon a report I received from the Comptroller of the Currency of the latest date, the banks of the United States have some $26,000,000 in excess of the reserves which they are required to keep.

Mr. REAGAN. I only say, then, that if that is the effect developed by the Treasury Department there has been a most extraordinary progress in that direction, because only a year since there were only thirty millions in all.

Mr. BUCKNER. That may be so, but the fact is as I have stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this bill goes over until to-morrow morning, to come up then as unfinished business.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the national-bank act be, and it is hereby, so amended as to require every banking association to keep, in gold or silver coins of the United States, one-half of the reserve fund now required by law.

SEC. 2. Any banking association failing to comply with the requirements of the first section of this act shall not be allowed to increase its liabilities by making any new loans or discounts otherwise than by discounting or purchasing bills of exchange payable at sight, nor make any dividend of its profits until the required proportion of coin has been restored. And the Comptroller of the Currency may notify any association, whose lawful money reserve shall be below the amount and proportion of coin as above required to be kept on hand, to make good such reserve, and if such association shall fail for thirty days thereafter so to make good its reserve of lawful money in the proportion aforesaid, the Comptroller may, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, appoint a receiver to wind up the business of the association as provided in section 5234.

SEC. 3. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

NATIONAL BANK AT PONTIAC, ILLINOIS.

Mr. FORT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2649) to authorize the Comptroller of the Currency to issue $500 in new notes to the national bank at Pontiac, Illinois, to replace a like amount which have never been signed, with amendments.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Comptroller of the Currency be authorized to issue to the National Bank of Pontiac, Illinois, $500 of circulating notes of said bank, of the denomination of $5, in place of twenty-five impressions of plate 5–5–5–5, bank numbers 741–764, Treasury numbers 252111–252135, whenever satisfactory proof shall be presented to him that said notes were stolen from said bank without the signature of either of the officers of said bank; provided that if said unsigned notes, or any portion of them, shall, inadvertently or otherwise, be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States, the bonds now held as security for the circulating notes of said bank shall be held subject to the payment of the amount of such notes so redeemed.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth lines, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Said bank shall first give a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 to the United States, with sureties to be approved by said Comptroller, indemnifying the Government in case said."

Insert between the tenth and eleventh lines the following:

"That said bank shall first give a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 to the United States, with sureties to be approved by said Comptroller, indemnifying the Government in case said."

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, $500 in unsigned bills of the National Bank of Pontiac, Illinois, were stolen. They had neither the signature of the president nor of the cashier. The pending proposition provides only that when to the satisfaction of the Comptroller of the Currency the bank shall prove those bills were stolen before being signed, and further give a bond in the sum of $1,000 to the United States to indemnify the Government in case any should be inadvertently redeemed hereafter, then $500 in new bank bills shall be furnished. As I have already stated, the bills were stolen before being signed. I have the testimony here, which perhaps it is not necessary to read, in which there is exhibited one of the bills stolen before being signed. It was taken by a bank in Toledo and returned to the bank at Pontiac. The signature of the cashier was forged, but forged so badly that the name was spelled wrongly. This is the only one of the $500 of bills which has yet made its appearance. No harm possibly can come from the passage of this act. It has been reported unanimously from the committee. These bills were stolen three or four years ago, as the testimony shows, and the amount provided for here is only to be supplied to the bank in case proof shall be made that the bills were stolen before being signed, and further that the bank shall file a bond in the sum of $1,000 to indemnify the Government in case any one of the bills should be hereafter inadvertently redeemed.

Mr. CONGER. Is any provision made for protecting the innocent holders of these bills that are in circulation?

Mr. FORT. There can be no innocent holder of these bills. There are none of these bills in circulation that anybody has ever seen. The one that I have mentioned here is the only one that has yet made its appearance.

Mr. CONGER. I understand the bill you have was in circulation with a forged signature.

Mr. FORT. I will state for the information of the gentleman that at the time these bills were stolen there were other bills stolen which had the signature of the president of the bank upon them. We do not seek to have other impressions given for those bills that were signed by one of the officers, but only for the bills that were not signed by any officer. They were in fact simple pieces of paper. They were blanks, and not bills at all. We do not ask to have returned any bills that had the signature of either officer to them.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. FORT. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. NEWBERRY. What is the use of a bond of a thousand dollars to the Government? How is the Government liable to lose a dollar?

Mr. FORT. That provision is inserted out of abundant caution, and for the purpose of saving the Government. If it should turn out that some officer in the Treasury had inadvertently redeemed one of the bills, then we provide that the Government in that case shall not be the loser.

Mr. NEWBERRY. If the officer of the Government improperly redeems, then the officer would be the loser. How is the Government to lose a dollar? I do not understand of what use the thousand-dollar bond can be.

Mr. FORT. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that the bond can certainly do no harm. This provision is put in to satisfy other gentlemen who might think that some day the Government might be the loser. We wish to make it doubly sure it can never lose a single cent.

Mr. NEWBERRY. The probable loser will be some innocent person to whom that bill, with a forged signature, will be passed. If there was a provision to indemnify an innocent holder, it might be of some avail.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman might say the same of any counterfeit bill that may go into circulation.

Mr. NEWBERRY. You have there all the insignia of a good bill, except the signature of a bank officer. Now, by the fault of the bank officers, probably by their negligence, those bills are in circulation with forged signatures. The innocent holder of those bills will suffer, not the Government, not the bank; but some person who takes the bill. Now I suppose the Government has given the proper seals. The registry is all right, I suppose. The seal of the Government is all right. There is nothing wanting but the signature of a bank officer, and nobody ever looks at a signature when he takes a bank-note. Nobody knows who the officers are. And if the issuing of these bills is owing to the negligence of the bank, I would say it is a matter of doubtful propriety to issue new bills to the bank.

Mr. FORT. I wish to add that I called upon the Comptroller of the Currency and consulted with him about this bill, and he gave it as his opinion that it was eminently right and fair and just that it should pass. It can do no individual any harm; and the provision about the bond was put in for the reason that we desire to satisfy everybody. The gentleman from Michigan, if he chooses, can move to strike that out.

Mr. DEERING. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois admit the amendment?

Mr. FORT. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by adding as follows:

That the same provisions and privileges of this bill be extended to the Osage National Bank, at Osage, Iowa, and that $9,000 stolen unsigned bills be restored in like manner, the bond to be pro rata.

Mr. FORT. I cannot admit that amendment, because there is no proof here in support of it. I have the proof in this case. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DEERING. I hope that motion will be voted down.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope it will be voted up.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 71, noes 9.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this bill will go over until to-morrow's morning hour.

Mr. PRICE. Before or after the other bill?

The SPEAKER. After the disposition of the bill reported by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

Mr. PRICE. I think the Chair is right in that decision. The bill in charge of the gentleman from Missouri it was ordered by the House should come up as unfinished business in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the bill in charge of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] will follow the other bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the bill just reported be inserted in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. It will.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 2791) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of D. M. Hamlin and Andrew F. Slade.

PETITIONS FOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. FRYE. There are a number of petitions from ladies of the United States asking the adoption of a certain constitutional amendment, which petitions they desire may be presented from the floor of the House rather than by being placed in the box for petitions. I ask unanimous consent that these petitions may be referred from the floor.

The SPEAKER. When does the gentleman desire to have it done?

Mr. FRYE. Now.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

TESTING IRON AND STEEL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I have the honor herewith to transmit the final report of the board for testing iron, steel, and other metals, with the accompanying papers. These papers constitute the remainder of the reports made by the board, which were transmitted by me to the House of Representatives on the 15th of June, 1878, (H. R. Ex. Doc. No. 98, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.)

The United States testing machine at Watertown arsenal, constructed for the board, is reported as being of great value in the determination of data and the solution of problems of interest to the people of the whole country, and the special attention of Congress is called to the necessity of an appropriation to enable the War Department to make use of it. An estimate of $20,000 for the purpose was submitted to Congress in the last Book of Estimates, (see page 82,) and an appropriation of that sum is respectfully recommended.

The act of July 31, 1876, (chap. 246, 19 Statutes, page 119,) made an appropriation for completing the experiments in testing iron, steel, and other metals, and provided that the board should be discontinued from and after the expenditure of the amount appropriated. In accordance with this legislation the board ceased to exist on the 30th of June, 1879.

R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 14, 1880.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONERS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. MCCOID, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3519) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INDIANAPOLIS A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. DE LA MATYR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3520) to establish a port of delivery at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ISRAEL WARNER.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3521) granting a pension to Israel Warner; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BROTHERHOOD OF LABOR.

Mr. AIKEN, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3522) to incorporate Lincoln Lodge No. 2, Brotherhood of Labor in the United States of America; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

RETIRED LIST OF THE NAVY.

Mr. BLISS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3523) fixing the relative rank and pay of certain officers on the retired list of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EDMUND T. RYAN.

Mr. BLISS also, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3524) for the relief of Edmund T. Ryan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

STENOGRAPHER FOR COURTS OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that a memorial presented here from the members of the bar of this District, relating to the appointment of a stenographer for the Supreme Court of the District, was inadvertently referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, while the bill presented at the same time upon the same subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that the Committee for the District of Columbia be discharged from further consideration of that memorial and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ELLIOTT & REMLEY.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3525) for the relief of Elliott & Remley, of Charlotte, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

UNITED STATES TREASURY—NEW YORK CLEARING-HOUSE.

Mr. WARNER. I am directed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the resolution which I hold in my hand, calling for information from the Secretary of the Treasury, to report the same back, with a recommendation that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The committee has the right to report at any time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report when, under what law, and under what conditions the United States Treasury became a member of the New York clearing-house; and whether or not said clearing-house accepts Treasury certificates payable in silver coin in settlements of balances, or whether the settlement of balances in standard silver dollars or silver certificates is prohibited by the rules of said clearing-house.

Mr. BREWER. I desire to know whether this resolution comes from the committee.

The SPEAKER. It was referred originally to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and is now reported back in obedience to the rule.

Mr. WARNER. And it is a unanimous report.

Mr. PAGE. I do not understand whether the resolution comes here as the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution of inquiry addressed to one of the Departments and was referred—on Monday last, as the Chair presumes—under the provisions of the rule, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which by another branch of the rule is required to report back such resolutions within one week. This resolution is now reported back in pursuance of the rule.

Mr. PAGE. Is the resolution recommended by the committee?

The SPEAKER. Unanimously, as the gentleman reporting it states.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was ageeed to.

TESTING IRON AND STEEL.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to an erroneous reference. The President's special message in relation to tests of iron and steel ought to have gone, I imagine, to the Committee on Manufactures, not to the Committee on Military Affairs. These tests are not made for purposes of war, but with reference to the mechanic arts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that the reason this subject was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs was that these tests have been made at United States arsenals and the report comes from Army officers. The Chair will, however, recognize the gentleman to make a motion that the President's message relating to this subject be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF GROUNDS SOUTH OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HUNTON. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to ask consent for the introduction and passage of a joint resolution with regard to the improvement of the grounds south of the Capitol.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes, was read. It appropriates $20,000 for the purpose of employing the poor of the District in the work of filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and provides that the commissioners of the District shall determine the plan of the work, shall see that it is properly conducted, and shall disburse the money.

Mr. CONGER. Reserving all points of order, I ask, is there any written report accompanying this resolution?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Does the resolution refer to grounds owned by private persons?

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, no; these grounds belong to the Government.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Michigan who reserved the point of order that if debate be entered upon the Chair will not permit the point of order to be made.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to say to the House before this subject is acted on——

The SPEAKER. The bill is accompanied with a letter from the commissioners of the District, which perhaps had better be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIR: The commissioners have the honor to invite the attention of your committee to the condition of the unfilled portion of the old canal south of the Capitol, and which is a nuisance prejudicial to health and property.

The recovery of the land occupied by this canal would add a valuable tract to the property of the Government. This could now be done very economically, and would at the same time furnish employment to hundreds of willing laborers, who otherwise will become largely dependent for support during the winter upon public charity. The commissioners recommend an appropriation of $20,000 for this purpose, the amount appropriated by joint resolution of February 10, 1879, having been insufficient for the completion of the work as contemplated.

By order of the board.

Very respectfully,

J. DENT, Chairman.

Hon. EPPA HUNTON,
Chairman House Committee on District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask what portion of the old canal is to be filled up?

Mr. HUNTON. The portion south of the Capitol, being in extent about half a mile. A part of this work was done last winter under an appropriation similar to this, passed by a similar vote. The making of this appropriation will be an act of charity to the poor of this District, as it will prevent their becoming chargeable to the public. In addition to this, the sanitary condition of the city requires that this work be done. The ground belongs to the Government of the United States, and its improvement will increase the value of the property.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

USE OF THE MAILS FOR LOTTERY PURPOSES.

Mr. MONEY. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to ask that the communication of the Postmaster-General in reply to the resolution of the House calling for information in regard to the use of the mails for lottery purposes be printed.

There being no objection, the order to print was made.

DEATH OF HON. RUSH CLARK, LATE MEMBER FROM IOWA.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the special order for Saturday, the 31st day of January, 1880, at two o'clock p. m., shall be the presentation of suitable resolutions in reference to the death of Hon. Rush Clark, late a member of this House, and the expression by members of the esteem in which he was held by his associates on this floor.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules in regard to the revision of the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending the motion, I desire to know from the acting chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. BLACKBURN] when he proposes to limit the general debate on this proposed revision. Can we not now agree upon some time for closing general debate?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to that inquiry, Mr. Speaker, I will say it was the purpose of the Committee on Rules, as stated to the House at the time this report was first submitted for consideration, to accommodate its action to the pleasure of the House. It does not appear that the House is yet content with the unlimited debate, judging from the list filed with the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole for recognition. It is a matter I cannot undertake to answer as to when it will be the pleasure of the House to apply the five-minute rule to this debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move, with the consent of the gentleman, that all general debate be limited to two hours. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] Then I will modify it so that it be limited to the present day.

Mr. CONGER. It was announced when this report was made that there would be no restriction upon the debate on the revision of the rules until all who desired to speak had the opportunity to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Rules has not introduced this proposition.

Mr. CONGER. So I understand. That proposition was made to the House, and I presume members have depended on it and that they would not be cut off from general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects to any limitation at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I have a right to move the limitation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move all general debate on the rules be limited to this day's session.

Mr. CONGER. I move that be laid on the table. That does not carry the bill with it.

The SPEAKER. The shorter way is to vote directly on the proposition, and the Chair thinks there will be no difficulty.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state that this day's session may be continued so as to have an evening session, during which the gentlemen can participate in the general debate.

The House divided, and there were ayes 15, noes not counted.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that all general debate be limited to to-morrow's session. It is a good time to come to some determination on this subject.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now ask for a vote on my motion to go into the committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

DEPRESSION OF LABOR.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, by the consent of the gentleman from Kentucky having in charge the report now pending, I ask by unanimous consent to take up the resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Printing to provide for the printing of the testimony taken before the Committee on the Depression of Labor in the Country. I know I can only succeed by unanimous consent, but it will not take five minutes' time, perhaps not three. The work of one of the committees of this House is obstructed for the want of the printed evidence. The House saw fit to appoint that committee, and they have gone through the country and taken a large amount of evidence. They cannot now proceed with their labors until that is printed. I ask unanimous consent to take up the resolution and pass it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That cannot be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON. Only by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is acting under an order of the House, which is that it shall consider the report of the Committee on Rules to the exclusion of everything else. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to take up a certain other matter.

Objection was made.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the House but for a short time in order to present my objections to some of the rules presented for our consideration. I will say first, however, that I have found much in the report of the committee to commend. It has simplified, harmonized, and condensed the rules in such way as to command the admiration of those who have heretofore experienced difficulties resulting from the perplexities of the system under which we have been operating.

The question concerning the duties of the Appropriations Committee has been sufficiently discussed; therefore I will not ask the attention of the committee in that regard.

I wish, however, to bring to the attention of the committee this fact, that one who has been familiar with the machinery by which the functions of this House have been performed in years past will discover, on examination of this revision, that the committee has so arranged the work of committees that there will be, in effect, but three committees which will have anything of importance to do. It has so arranged the jurisdiction of the committees of this House that there will be three bonanza committees. I allude to the jurisdiction conferred upon the Appropriations, Ways and Means, and the wonderfully enlarged jurisdiction which has been conferred upon the Judiciary Committee.

If you will take the report of this committee in connection with the arguments of its advocates, it will be seen that, if its work is adopted and strictly construed, every bill of any conceivable nature that may be introduced into this House, if it is insisted upon, must legitimately go to one or other of these three committees. I lay the proposition down broadly and propose to show the House that, by the statement of gentlemen who are on the Committee on Rules, and by the report itself, that every bill brought into this House, if these rules are adopted, can be legitimately claimed by the Committee of Ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations, or the Judiciary Committee. Now let me prove the truth of this statement.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] the other day said to the House that the Ways and Means Committee should have jurisdiction over all questions providing the revenues of the Government, and that the Committee on Appropriations shall have jurisdiction over the method and manner in which expenditures of the Government shall be made. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that under this revision every bill that does not belong to these two committees would properly go to the Committee on the Judiciary; and, if this report be adopted, it will be entirely useless for the House to keep at least forty-two of the forty-five standing committees provided for, with their clerks and other expensive appendages.

On page 32 of the report it will be found that jurisdiction has been assigned to the Judiciary Committee as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

* * * * * * *

4. To judicial proceedings, civil and criminal law: to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Subjects relating to judicial proceedings, subjects relating to law, criminal and civil, shall go to this committee under that rule. Is it possible to conceive of a bill that can come before this House which does not in some form relate to law, civil or criminal? If a gentleman brings in a bill here providing a pension for a wounded soldier, some of those who serve upon the Judiciary Committee can very properly insist that it relates to the pension law, and therefore it must go to the Judiciary Committee for its consideration. If one should bring in a bill in relation to granting extension of a patent or to a change in the laws relating to patents, some gentleman on the Judiciary Committee would perhaps be quick upon his feet and insist that that bill relating, as it would, to the law of patents, should be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Any measure of any kind whatever, under the wording of the proposed rule, would go to the Judiciary Committee, because we cannot pass a bill in Congress which does not in some way relate to civil or criminal law. Every bill passed and finally adopted and signed by the Executive is a law. I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that if these three committees are to absorb the jurisdiction of all the other committees of the House it will be very proper for us to abolish all of the other committees, and then, in order to save the wounded feelings of those who are deprived of positions which they now enjoy and give all something to do, I would suggest that all the members of the House be divided out on those three committees. All will then stand upon an equality—the equality advocated by Jeremy Bentham: "Everybody to count for one, and nobody to count for more than one." This revisal has greatly, and I think unwisely, enlarged the powers and jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary beyond what was ever conferred on it in any Congress of the past. During the last extra session the question arose between the Committee on Revision of the Rules and the Committee on the Judiciary as to rightful jurisdiction over a bill introduced by myself and referred to the former committee. In discussing then this question I called attention to the history of the rules establishing these committees and the practice of the House in referring business to them.

The history of the Judiciary Committee shows that it was created in 1813 and its jurisdiction defined to extend and relate alone to judicial proceedings. That has remained as the only definition of its power and jurisdiction to this day, as will be seen by reference to the present rules.

I ask that the Clerk shall read in this connection the eighty-third rule, which has been in force since the origin of that committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE 83. It shall be the duty of the Committee on the Judiciary to take into consideration such petitions and matters or things touching judicial proceedings as shall be presented, or shall come in question, and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereon, together with such propositions relating thereto as to them will seem expedient.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is the only extent of the jurisdiction heretofore conferred on the Judiciary Committee, "such petitions and matters or things touching judicial proceedings as shall be presented." Prior to 1813 there was no Judiciary Committee. The functions performed by that committee since its creation pertained to the old Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business, a committee to which the Committee on the Revision of the Laws is the successor. Now the Committee on Rules so enlarges the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee as to give it the powers which rightly belong to all the committees except the Committees on Appropriations and Ways and Means by adding to their jurisdiction "all subjects relating to civil or criminal law."

Mr. Chairman, I once before insisted in this House that by strict construction of the rules in connection with the practice of this House the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee is not more extensive than that of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws was created in 1869. I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read the resolution creating the committee, in order to show that it is the successor of the old Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, a committee which had had an existence from 1795 down to 1869, at the time of the creation of its successor.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be amended so as to provide for the appointment at the commencement of the next session, and at the commencement of each Congress thereafter, of a standing Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to consist of nine members, and that so much of the rules as provides for a Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business is hereby rescinded.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That was the resolution rescinding the powers conferred on the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business and giving jurisdiction to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Under the operation of that resolution, in 1870, 1871, 1872, &c., bills of various kinds were referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws; not bills simply limited to a revision and codification of the statutes, but a variety of bills amending the Statutes of the United States. Mr. Poland, of Vermont, was chairman of the committee in 1870 and 1871. One bill that I have in my mind's eye now was in regard to the bankrupt law. It was acted upon by the committee, reported to the House, debated, and adopted. Another bill that I now recollect was for the purpose of regulating the practice in appeals from the circuit to the Supreme Court of the United States. The bill was in charge of Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, who was a member of that committee. It was reported to the House, debate on it extended through several days, and was finally enacted into law. And no member of this House ever questioned the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws over such matters. I will not consume time in particularizing other bills which have been considered by that committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what work does this revisal mark out for the Committee on the Revision of the Laws? If you will turn to page 33 of the report you will find that the only jurisdiction provided for in these rules for that committee is this:

The revision and codification of the statutes of the United States.

The Committee on Rules has emasculated the Committee on the Revision of the Laws; nay, it has annihilated it, and all the power it has stripped from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws it has conferred on its rival, the Judiciary Committee. We know well the difficulties and the delay in procuring action on bills referred to the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress. Why was it so? Simply because that committee was overcrowded with business. Now this Committee on Rules comes in here and would still further delay the transaction of business in the Judiciary Committee by dumping into its committee-room every bill which might very properly, under the rule as it has heretofore existed, be sent to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I am simply desirous now of calling the attention of the House to this question, and letting it be known that at the proper time an amendment will be offered to this rule giving to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws what in my judgment has heretofore properly belonged to it; and that is not only the revision and codification of the statutes, but also the right to consider all bills which are brought in here looking to an amendment of the statutes.

When that is done we still leave an abundance of work to the Judiciary Committee. I am perfectly willing that the powers of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws shall be limited to that extent—a revision and codification of the statutes and amendments of existing statutes. I have made these remarks in no unkind spirit toward the Judiciary Committee. I have made them in order to expedite properly the business coming before this House. We have on this committee gentlemen of good legal attainments, and who, in my judgment, are as capable of passing upon questions of the nature indicated as the gentlemen who sit upon the Judiciary Committee. As a matter of common sense, answer me the question, Why should you keep in existence a committee, with a clerk and all the outfit of an ordinary committee, and so arrange the rules that it shall have nothing whatever to do, while another committee of this House is overburdened and overcrowded with work? I will not say that all the members of the Judiciary Committee are desirous that it shall have charge of matters which properly belong to other committees.

Some of the members of that committee are very liberal, and are perfectly willing that other committees of this House shall have a fair share of business for their consideration. But there are members of that committee who have manifested an itching desire to encroach on the domain of other committees, and especially that of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

I will particularize an instance. In the last Congress, in October, 1877, I introduced a bill repealing the law authorizing the removal of causes from State into Federal courts. It was a bill of deep importance to the people of the section which I have the honor in part to represent. It was indeed a bill of deep importance to every section of this country. That bill lay in the hands of the Judiciary Committee from October, 1877, until the expiration of the Forty-fifth Congress, that is to say, for two years, without being reported back to this House. When this House met in March last I introduced that bill again, had it referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and in less than sixty days the bill had received consideration in the committee and was before this House for consideration and action.

As soon as the bill came in here a former member of the Committee on the Judiciary, who is at present a member of the Committee on Rules, [Mr. FRYE,] leaped to his feet and raised an objection to the consideration of the bill because it had not come from the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on the Judiciary under the rule having power and jurisdiction only over questions concerning judicial procedure. Yet that gentleman was not willing that any bill relating to the judicial department of the Government or the courts should be considered by any other committee than the Judiciary Committee.

Gentlemen here will remember the struggle that ensued between the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and the Committee on the Judiciary with regard to the proper control of that bill. The decision of the House finally gave the control of it to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and the bill is now pending before the House for action.

It seems, however, that there is still a jealous spirit on the part of some of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary with regard to this very bill, for I learn from the public prints that they are having a somewhat similar question under consideration in the Judiciary Committee. I cannot imagine any other reason for the action of the Judiciary Committee on that question when its members know full well it is before us, has been quite fully debated, and stands at the head of the public calendar to-day, and which will doubtless be considered by this House as soon as this report of the Committee on Rules shall have been disposed of.

My only purpose now is to draw the attention of the House to this question and to say for one that if it is to be the settled policy of the House that all important interests are to be considered and disposed of by these three bonanza committees, for one I will insist that we shall abolish all the other committees of this House and save to the tax-payers of the country the many thousands of dollars which will be uselessly expended in providing clerks, &c., for which we will have nothing to do.

I now yield to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE.] I would inquire of the Chair how much time I have left?

The CHAIRMAN. There is forty minutes of the gentleman's hour remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE.]

Mr. MCLANE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think as badly of the old rules as some gentlemen who have addressed the committee. Nevertheless I appreciate fully the value of this condensation of the rules, and I should be very sorry to take any course in regard to this report which would endanger its adoption by this House.

But in so far as the twenty-first rule has been criticised in connection with the rules distributing work to the various committees, I do not feel that full justice has been done to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. REAGAN.] The report of the Committee on Rules treats the bill making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as a general appropriation bill; and it argues that because it is a general appropriation bill it should take the course of all other general appropriation bills and go to the Committee on Appropriations. Now, what could have possessed the Committee on Rules to make such a statement to this House I am at a loss to understand.

The twenty-first rule defines what are the general appropriation bills. That rule, which is an old rule of the House, and now reported for our adoption, designates as general appropriation bills and the bills which shall go to the Committee on Appropriations such bills as appropriate money for purposes authorized by law. That is why there is no reflection upon any other committee when such bills are allowed to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Army appropriation bill, the naval appropriation bill, and the Post-Office appropriation bill go to the Committee on Appropriations without any reflection at all upon the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; because those three committees have already brought to the attention of the House the laws which require the appropriations of money for those purposes to be made. The laws organizing the Army, the Navy, and the Post-Office Department are reported to this House from those three committees, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The Committee on Appropriations bring in the bills making the appropriations required by those laws, and such bills are known as general appropriation bills.

Now, the river and harbor appropriation bill of itself for the first time authorizes the appropriation of money and also the improvement of rivers and harbors. The circumstances connected with that bill are anomalous. A simple provision authorizing the improvement of a harbor or the improvement of a river does not carry with it any knowledge of how much money shall be appropriated for that purpose in that particular year. But the Army appropriation bill and naval appropriation bill give the House all the information it wants in that respect.

The Committee on Military Affairs report a bill authorizing the construction of a certain number of forts. The Committee on Naval Affairs reports a bill authorizing the building of a certain number of steamships for the Navy. Then the Departments of the Government estimate from year to year what is wanted for the erection of those forts and for the construction of those steamships.

But when we come to the subject of the improvement of rivers and harbors from year to year, the sums appropriated for that purpose, as also the expediency of the works themselves, depend upon the surveys. The same inquiry which enables the Committee on Commerce to designate what particular river and what particular harbor shall be improved will enable that committee, in its discretion, to designate how much money shall be expended in that particular year for the improvement of that particular harbor and that particular river. And if a general reduction from the estimates is necessary that committee indicates it, and it always is necessary. There never was in the history of any Congress a river and harbor appropriation bill passed that was not reduced in amount from the estimates, whether that reduction refers to particular works or to the general number of works for which surveys have been ordered, which are always in excess of the number of works ultimately appropriated for and sanctioned by the committee. Those surveys being made at the request of any member of this House, under an order or resolution of the House, a resolution may be passed through this House at any time requiring information from the Department concerning the cost of improving a certain river or harbor. But the House is in no sense committed to appropriate money for that improvement. That proposed improvement is analyzed by the Committee on Commerce with the survey, and is left out altogether, or a portion of the estimated amount is appropriated and a partial improvement authorized.

The river and harbor improvement appropriation bill is altogether an anomalous bill, bearing no relation at all to a general appropriation bill, which, according to the twenty-first rule, appropriates money for objects already authorized by law, and none others, while the river and harbor bill necessarily authorizes by law the construction of the work in question, while it appropriates at the same time and in the same bill the amounts necessary for the construction of the work in the particular fiscal year for which the appropriation is made. It not only bears no relation to it technically—for, as I have said, this twenty-first rule defines what are appropriation bills—but it is impossible for any other committee than that which authorizes the improvement itself to fix the amount to be appropriated. The two things go together. It is an appropriation bill. That is all that can be said about it; and under the rules of this House it goes to the Committee of the Whole. It has no privilege to be passed under a suspension of the rules. If this point had not been so fully developed I would go into it again; because at the very last, after full explanation had been made, an honorable gentleman on my right referred to this river and harbor bill as a vicious bill, because it could be passed without discussion. Why, sir, the rules recommended for our adoption permit no such thing. They require the bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors to go to the Committee of the Whole, as every other appropriation bill goes. That bill has no privilege whatever that every other bill has not.

It may be true that if such be the pleasure of the House when it comes to consider the river and harbor bill, discussion may not be permitted for one reason or another. But it is, and always will be, the pleasure of this House to pass other bills without permitting discussion. I have no disposition to conceal my own opinion as to why this House has chosen at times to pass a river and harbor bill under a suspension of the rules. It would be very idle to conceal it, because year after year the explanation is made on the floor of this House, before the motion to suspend the rules is adopted. The reason is, that the bill is brought to this House after having been matured by the committee, and if two-thirds of the members are in favor of the bill as reported, then as a matter of course it is passed under a suspension of the rules, to prevent the bill being loaded down with other propositions. If this bill has ever been passed by the House under a suspension of the rules, it has been in the interest of economy. No gentleman doubts that this has been the motive for thus passing it.

Mr. SPARKS. Allow me a moment. Is there not the additional motive of preventing the striking out or amending of objectionable features as well as to prevent loading the bill down? The bill may contain a great many items, many of which a member might approve while others he might wish to oppose, and if possible have struck out, giving his support only to such items as he approves. Is not this a part of the consideration?

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Chairman, practically I suppose that is not part of the consideration. I suppose that practically the question is precisely as I have stated it—that the reason influencing this House in suspending the rules to pass the river and harbor appropriation bill is to prevent additions being made to it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to dwell upon that point as being at all pertinent to what I have to say about the rule. I only wanted to say that there is nothing in the rule which authorizes the river and harbor bill to be passed under a suspension of the rules. I only wanted to call attention to the fact that the question of the suspension of the rules rests with the House, in its own discretion, precisely as it rests with the House to pass any other bill under a suspension of the rules. I rose for a very different object. I rose to call attention to the fact that the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill. I rose to call attention to the further fact that the twenty-first rule is a rule which designates what are general appropriation bills. Now, I say that if the twenty-first rule stood as originally in force, no complaint would have been made against the Committee on Appropriations as having absorbed the business of this House. That twenty-first rule as originally framed confined the Committee on Appropriations to objects already authorized by law. This I say in vindication of the rule and as the answer to those who have alleged that the Committee on Appropriations has absorbed the legislation of the country.

I am very anxious to make myself understood upon this point. The river and harbor appropriation bill is a bill peculiarly proper for the Committee on Commerce to perfect. Nobody takes any exception to this position. Every gentleman who has addressed the committee has conceded that the preparation of the river and harbor bill ought to be confided to the Committee on Commerce. The point taken by the Committee on Rules is that after this bill has been perfected by the Committee on Commerce it should go to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Rules fell into what I consider a most extraordinary error of saying it ought to go there for the reason it is a general appropriation bill. I desire to say that it is not a general appropriation bill at all. This I show by calling the attention of the committee to the twenty-first rule, which is an old rule, and which it is proposed to re-enact. That rule is:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Under that rule the Army and Navy bills, and the Post-Office bill, and bills for the erection of public buildings, are framed by the Committee on Appropriations. A certain number of post-offices in the country have been authorized by law to be built. They are authorized by law as reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and by law certain ships have been authorized to be constructed, and they have been authorized under laws reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. So with ports; so with ordnance; so with public buildings; so with all the great expenditures of the Government, including the pay of soldiers. They have always been authorized by laws reported to this House from appropriate and proper committees. When these objects have been authorized by law, then, and not till then, have the Committee on Appropriations any right to report a bill concerning the Army, or the Navy, or the Post-Office. If we had stopped there—and there is where we stood originally—if we had stopped there the Committee on Appropriations would have had less to do than any committee in this House; it would have had no original responsibility or discretion at all; but in the interests of economy, entirely in the interests of economy, the latter part of the twenty-first rule was adopted, and that permits the Committee on Appropriations, as it permits every individual member of this House, to move amendments to these general appropriation bills, if they are germane and are already authorized by law and if they tend to reduce expenditures. And it is only when an object has been authorized by law and when the amendment does tend to reduce expenditures that the Committee on Appropriations can do anything at all beyond the appropriation of money for objects authorized by existing laws.

There is, therefore, no reason at all why we should make war on the Committee on Appropriations. We can very well leave that committee to provide the means for carrying on this Government in the manner, and only in the manner, which the law of the land authorizes, restricting them to the privilege of making amendments germane to objects authorized by law and reducing expenditures. And I for one would not disturb them in the possession of this power, and I do not believe there is a man in this House who would desire to take away from them that power.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it not competent for any member of this House to restrain the Committee on Appropriations within the limits just stated?

Mr. McLANE. Perfectly; but I think the statement I have made to the House is sufficient for my argument that the Committee on Appropriations can do nothing but bring in bills appropriating money to carry out objects already authorized by law or to amend those bills by reducing expenditures, providing the amendment is germane to an object already authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's twenty minutes are up.

Mr. McLANE. My friend will allow me to go on—he gave me the whole of his time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. McLANE. Now, with that explanation of why I had no war to make on the Committee on Appropriations, I feel at liberty to recur to the rule which undertakes to confine the Committee on Commerce to the preparation of a bill and then requiring the submission of it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, if it be the pleasure of this House to do what it never has done, submit one committee to the supervision of another, then let it take a mode more intelligent; not only more intelligent, but in much better taste than the mode prescribed in this new rule. Let them authorize the Committee on Commerce to prepare a river and harbor bill without appropriating the money. Let them confine the Committee on Commerce to the preparation of a river and harbor bill proper. Let that committee go over the estimates and the surveys and report to this House what the exigencies of commerce demand, what rivers require improvements, what harbors require improvements, and let them submit precisely such a bill as the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs would, and then let the Department estimate directly to the Committee on Appropriations for the money necessary to improve these rivers and these harbors.

Let the Committee on Commerce by law designate what rivers and what harbors ought to be improved, and then let the Government estimate for the money necessary to carry on those improvements, year by year. Then you will not submit the Committee on Commerce to be supervised by your Committee on Appropriations. You leave your Committee on Commerce precisely where you leave your Army, your Navy, and your Post-Office Committee. They will bring in a law which authorizes a certain expenditure of money in the construction of certain public works, and because the law authorizes it, it then becomes the duty, under the twenty-first rule, of the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate the money. They have no discretion about it except in so far as Rule XXI gives them discretion, which is to reduce the appropriations. The House would then be going intelligently to reach its results without degrading the Committee on Commerce. Doubtless, if it be the pleasure of the House to sustain the Committeee on Appropriations in reducing those expenditures, that is legitimate, just as we can reduce the expenditures for the Army under this twenty-first rule. It is for that I want the attention of the committee.

The law authorizes now a certain expenditure for the Army and a certain expenditure for the Navy. Very well; it is entirely competent for the Committee on Appropriations to move to reduce the expenditures now authorized by law. That is doubtless what a large and very respectable number of gentlemen would like to do in reference to the river and harbor bill. My appeal is, to such of them as want to reduce appropriations, to proceed in a parliamentary manner and with proper respect to the committees of this House, and, what is more material, paying proper attention to the rules of this House. That is why I make my criticism on the report of this Committee on Rules that they should, in the very moment they are revising these rules and giving us this perfect code, utterly ignore one of the most important rules they have given for our consideration, and that is the twenty-first rule.

Now, sir, one word more as to that twenty-first rule, and that is addressed to those gentlemen who would take away from the Committee on Appropriations this general business of the House. I wish to make my special point on that rule that once the object being defined by law that committee has no power over it except to reduce expenditures; and in that view of the case I for one would make no war on it, because it always rests with the House to approve or disapprove the recommendation of the committee. The only thing the Committee on Appropriations can do is to recommend to the House to spend less money than has been estimated for; and that is a very great and important duty which ought not to be taken away from any committee that has been charged with the preparation of the general appropriation bills for the support of the Government, as the House should never lose for a moment its prompt and intelligent control of the national expenditures.

If it proposes to take away too much and reduce expenditures injudiciously, it is in our power to reject their economic recommendation and to adhere to the estimate, but they can originate no reform or appropriation of money—in my judgment they can originate no economy even. The only economy they can recommend to the consideration of this House, is economy on objects authorized by law and estimated for by the Government, and that is a power which I, for one, will never assail. But while I will never assail the committee which is charged with retrenchment or authorized at all events to propose retrenchment, I would give to it no more jurisdiction than is given by the twenty-first rule. As it stands in the report of the Committee on Rules you degrade the Committee on Commerce by sending for revision to the Committee on Appropriations the work which has occupied it fivefold the time which can be bestowed on it by the Committee on Appropriations in the process of revision.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLANE. With pleasure.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. If the only thing the Committee on Appropriations can suggest is the spending of less money, cannot any gentleman of this House propose the same thing?

Mr. McLANE. I did not hear the inquiry.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Cannot any intelligent gentleman ask the same thing from the House as the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly he can; and I think I have already stated what is substantially an answer to the question, if I understand it.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question: whether or not he would favor a rule like this: It shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain any motion for the suspension of the rules and the passage of the river and harbor bill until that bill has been first considered in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Chairman, the answer I mean to make to that question may be unsatisfactory, although I think it ought not to be so considered. I would cheerfully apply that rule to the river and harbor bill if there was any good reason which required it to be applied to all other appropriation bills, but I do not think it would be easy to take from this House the right to suspend the rules for the passage of any bill. I do not think it would be judicious, and nobody knows it better than the gentleman from Maine, whose experience is much greater than mine, much greater than most other gentlemen in this House; and I need not say to him that there are constantly occurring exigencies which make it a necessity to suspend the rules for the passage of appropriation bills.

Mr. FRYE. Therefore the gentleman is in favor of the rule standing precisely as it does now in relation to that bill?

Mr. McLANE. No; I propose to strike out of that paragraph which defines the duty of the Committee on Commerce so much of it as requires the reference of the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRYE. I understand the gentleman is in favor of the old rule in relation to that.

Mr. McLANE. I am; certainly. I do not think it can be changed as proposed in the report of the Committee on Rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I yielded the whole of my time that remained to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. CABELL.]

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor to occupy but a short portion of the time of the committee. I had intended to discuss at length some of the questions involved in the report of the Committee on Rules, but I find that there is such a general desire to close this debate that I shall be as brief as I can.

The distinguished Committee on Rules have, as was to be expected, not given entire satisfaction by their report. Indeed, it is impossible that they should have done so. Many of the members of this House entertain the idea, Mr. Chairman, that the business of this House should be better and more equally distributed than it is. Many of us believe that all matters relating to military affairs should be referred to the Military Committee, and that that committee should recommend appropriations for military purposes to the House. We believe, too, that the Naval Committee should make the recommendation for appropriations for all naval purposes. We believe that the Commerce Committee should recommend appropriations for those matters relating to harbors; and that all other committees charged with important duties wherein appropriations are involved, or to which they relate, should recommend such appropriations to the House. I agree with many gentlemen who have preceded me in regard to this matter, and as that question has been fully discussed I will not detain the House longer with reference to it.

The Committee on Rules, Mr. Chairman, in its wisdom has seen fit—as indeed it has done in the case of many other committees—to impinge upon the rights, the privileges, and the prerogatives of that committee over which I have the honor to preside; and it is particularly in behalf of that committee that I speak to-day. And I ask the attention of the House to what I shall submit, because in part I shall express the ideas, I think, of many gentlemen upon this floor in regard to the distribution of the labors of Congress. We all know that many of the rules of this House are rules of obstruction rather than rules of facilitation. I shall not allude further to that subject as relating to other committees, but I will say that in the report made by the honorable Committee on Rules it has been deemed best to alter one of the rules of this House, namely, Rule 94, by striking out from the rule that portion of it which relates to the "improvement of the navigation of rivers," thereby depriving the Committee on Railways and Canals of the powers and jurisdiction which have pertained to that committee since 1831, which powers and jurisdiction, I will here say, have very many times by the orders or practice of the House been accorded to the Committee on Commerce, now presided over by my distinguished friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

I was somewhat amused the other day, when this discussion commenced, that the first voice of lamentation should come from the Committee on Commerce—that committee which I will not say ruthlessly but certainly without regard to the rights and interests of the Railway Committee, and without thinking of the infringement upon our rights, or how, perhaps, it might reflect upon us, has, for a series of years, I will not say usurped but deprived us of a part of our jurisdiction and taken it to themselves.

In the general principle of absorption which has prevailed in behalf of many of the committees of this House the Committee on Commerce has caught the infection, and has for a number of years absorbed a great part of the business and duties of the Committee on Railways and Canals. I do not complain particularly of gentlemen who now compose the Committee on Commerce in regard to that matter. They have simply been following precedents laid down for them by their predecessors and by the House itself. The trouble has been going on for years, and now that we have come to the consideration of the revision of our rules it seems to me to be a good time to put a check to a bad practice, and to make such changes, such alterations and amendments as will tend to facilitate business and advance the legislation of the country.

Prior, Mr. Chairman, to the Twenty-second Congress matters relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors were generally assigned to a special committee selected at each Congress for the purpose, and designated as the Committee on Roads and Canals.

The Committee on Commerce was created in 1795, and that committee, it is true, sometimes had the consideration of the improvement of the navigation of rivers, as well as of harbors, for a long series of years. So had the Ways and Means Committee. But in process of time, when business commenced to accumulate, when Congress was cumbered with much thinking, and much working too, it was found that other means would have to be resorted to than through existing committees to compass the vast amount of business submitted for the consideration of Congress. The House, as I have stated, had special committees to inquire into matters of the kind of which I have spoken until the time of the Twenty-second Congress, when the Committee on Roads and Canals, now Railways and Canals, was erected into one of the standing committees of this House. After that, for seven long years not a bill in relation to the improvement of the navigation of rivers was referred to the Commerce Committee.

In the second session of the Twenty-third Congress the Roads and Canals Committee submitted two general bills for the improvement of navigation of rivers. In the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth and Twenty-seventh Congresses they also submitted general bills for the improvement of the navigation of rivers, that matter not having been at all interfered with by the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce during that time were reporting general bills for the improvement of harbors and matters relating to the outgoing commerce of the country. They gave no consideration whatever to the question of the improvement of the navigation of rivers.

And so it continued up to the time of the Twenty-eighth Congress. Perhaps I should say that during the Twenty-third Congress the question arose, brought before the House by a gentleman by the name of Bayliss, I believe, in regard to the improvement of the great Taunton River and the removal of obstructions from and the placing of buoys in its channel. A contest upon the subject arose at that time and it was discussed in the House fully. The two rules, Rule 79, relating to the Committee on Commerce, and Rule 94, relating to the Committee on Roads and Canals, were both fully discussed and considered. The determination of the House at that time was to refer the matters relating to the placing of buoys upon the river to the Committee on Commerce, and the matters relating to the removal of obstructions from the channel of the river to the Committee on Roads and Canals. In that way, or rather through that discussion, we have a construction placed upon the powers and jurisdiction of the two contesting committees at a period contemporaneous with the establishment of the Committee on Roads and Canals.

After that for years there was no question and no dispute about the jurisdiction of the two committees. They worked harmoniously together until comparatively a few years ago. The distinction between the rights and privileges of the two committees, which each for a long time observed, seemed to be this: that all questions relating to the improvement of harbors, looking to the sea-going or outward-bound commerce of the country, were referred to the Committee on Commerce; and those questions that related to the internal navigation of the country and the improvement of the navigation of rivers were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

In former years, so far as we are informed, little or no conflict arose between the different committees of the House, but each performed its duties industriously and efficiently in perfect harmony with the other, and each from time to time extended the hand of assistance to the other, whenever required or as opportunity was afforded. There has been the most perfect friendliness between the two committees, on Commerce and on Railways and Canals, so far as I am informed; and I trust as it ever has been so it will continue to be.

For the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and its genial members I have the kindest and warmest feelings of regard. It is with no purpose to attack that committee that I now speak. It is in conformity with that general wish which I and others entertain that the business of this House shall be so distributed that each committee can compass and complete its work without unnecessary labor and delay, so that each committee may aid the other, and that the business of this House and the people be facilitated and perfected in a manner honorable to Congress and beneficial to the country.

Upon examination I find that the first time the Committee on Commerce reported a general bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors was during the existence of the Twenty-eighth Congress. At that time that committee reported a general bill for the purposes named, which bill I believe was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. The Committee of Ways and Means reported in favor of the appropriation, in pursuance of the recommendations made by the Committee on Commerce.

It is proper, however, to note that the report from the Commerce Committee just mentioned was induced by the fact that, for some special reason, that portion of the President's message relating to the improvement of the western lakes and rivers was referred by the House for the action of that committee.

Before that period the Committee on Roads and Canals had reported general bills to the House for the improvement of rivers, and those bills were also referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and that committee made the appropriations pursuant to the recommendation, or included the action of the committee in the report from Commerce, and thus made up in fact what became a river and harbor bill. In this way was this business conducted.

Since the adoption of Rule 94 I can see no warrant of authority for the Committee on Commerce ever to have taken jurisdiction of the improvement of the navigation of rivers. Prior to that time I can well understand why bills on that subject were submitted to the Committee on Commerce, and why that committee reported upon them. I have not a question that such matters were referred to the Commerce Committee, because it was the duty of that committee to consider propositions more nearly akin to the improvement of the navigation of rivers than any other existing or standing committee of the House.

I think and believe, therefore, that in process of time the Committee on Commerce overstepped the rule, overstepped the bounds of its appointment, and entered upon a work which had been set apart, subsequently to 1831, for the Committee on Roads and Canals, afterward called the Committee on Railways and Canals.

I stated awhile ago that up to the Twenty-eighth Congress the Committee on Commerce had never reported a general bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors. At that time I think they reported such a bill, and it was perhaps enacted into law. That committee assumed from year to year to bring in other river and harbor appropriation bills without any contest up to the first session of the Thirty-second Congress.

At that session a Representative from the State of Illinois, Governor Yates, I believe, introduced a bill for the improvement of the Illinois River, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals. Mr. Seymour, of New York, then a Representative on this floor, objected to that reference and asked that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce. There was an extended discussion of the question, and hours were spent in its consideration. The House divided; tellers were had, and the yeas and nays called; and at last, by a vote of 113 to 70, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Railways and Canals was sustained, and the bill was referred to that committee.

Mr. REAGAN. If my friend will allow me, I will call his attention to what I think he will see are some errors in his statement. He has stated that the Committee on Commerce never reported a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors until the Twenty-eighth Congress. A reference to the records of the House will show that the act of April 27, 1816, for the improvement of rivers and harbors, was reported to the House by that committee and passed by the House; also the act of March 3, 1823, the act of May 26, 1824, and the act of March 2, 1827, all bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which were reported to the House by the Committee on Commerce and passed by the House. Then, by the act of June 11, 1844, a bill was passed upon its report; by the act of March 3, 1845, a bill was passed upon its report, and so on down.

I beg further to say, while endeavoring to correct statements of fact, that so far as the Journals and the laws show I have never found, after a pretty full examination, a case in which a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors has been reported to this House from the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, my friend the distinguished gentleman from Texas is correct in part, but errs greatly, I think, in other portions of his remarks. It is true, as he alleges, that the Committee on Commerce as early as 1816 and subsequently reported general bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors. That fact does not come in conflict with anything that I have said—certainly not in conflict with anything I have intended to say.

The Committee on Roads and Canals, now the Committee on Railways and Canals, was not designated as a standing committee of this House until 1831. Prior to that time of course all matters in reference to the improvement of the navigation of rivers were, as I have said, considered by other committees; sometimes by the Committee of Ways and Means, sometimes by the Committee on Commerce, and sometimes by special committees constituted for that purpose.

But I say that my friend falls into a mistake by overlooking this fact: that never until the Twenty-eighth Congress was a river and harbor bill passed upon its presentation to the House by the Committee on Commerce. It is true, as my friend alleges, that the Committee on Commerce presented general bills for the consideration of Congress, but as a general thing, from 1831 down to the Twenty-eighth Congress, that committee presented only general bills in relation to the improvement of harbors necessary for the safety and protection of the commerce of the country. The Commerce Committee did not assume to present bills for the improvement of the navigation of rivers until many years subsequent to the last-named date. But when the Committee on Roads and Canals was established, in 1831, that committee considered questions in regard to the navigation of rivers and made general reports, which reports, like the general reports from the Committee on Commerce, were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, which, as the financial committee of the House, took the reports into consideration, and in its judgment recommended that the matters of interest reported by its associate Committee on Roads and Canals should have appropriations made for them to such extent as a prudent administration of the finances of the country would permit.

Mr. Chairman, the questions to which I have invited the attention of the committee are important. We are now revising the rules of the House. From a large majority of the committees comes up the wail that three or four other favored committees are absorbing the powers and prerogatives of all the rest. Why, sir, I have heard it asserted on this floor to-day that we might as well have but three or four committees of the House; that Congress had as well be disbanded until the gentlemen comprising these favored committees should make up their reports and send for us to come here—for what purpose? Not to consider the bills, not to add to or subtract anything from them, but to be coerced into their passage just as they come from the hands of our superiors. I entertain, however, the highest respect for our privileged committees, as also a wonderful appreciation of their powers of absorption.

I have undertaken to make a plain statement of the matter in controversy; and I say it is an important question to every member of this House, because the rights of all are assailed to a more or less extent. If in the disposition of this question this House is not ready to mete out to the committee over which I have the honor to preside fair and equal justice, would it be wrong in me to hope that the active projectors of the wrong may be overtaken by a somewhat similar fate?

But let us look at these rules. The rule in reference to the Committee on Commerce declares that—

> It shall be the duty of the Committee on Commerce to take into consideration all such petitions and matters and things touching the commerce of the United States as shall be presented or shall or may come in question and be referred to them by the House.

That is the present rule regarding the powers of the Committee on Commerce. It defines and limits its powers and jurisdiction. I would not take away one atom of power from that committee. I would rather give it additional power and jurisdiction. I am willing to accord to it the right to report appropriations for the improvement of harbors, and I am willing that their bills embracing such appropriations shall come directly before the House for its action. I am not willing that my distinguished friend from Texas and his committee shall be made clerks for the Committee on Appropriations. I will join him in his effort to free himself and his committee from the vast and absorbing power of the Appropriations Committee. But while I am willing to do this, I ask my friend the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and his magnanimous associates on that committee to recollect that while they seek not to be overshadowed by the Appropriations Committee, they should not endeavor to overshadow the Committee on Railways and Canals and take from us the power and jurisdiction which belong to us under the rules of the House.

I am willing to accord to the Commerce Committee all of its rights, powers, privileges, and prerogatives. I am willing to aid in warding off any indignity offered or coercion attempted upon it, but I am unwilling that it should transcend its powers as defined and limited by Rule 79—I am unwilling that it should overleap its proper jurisdiction and take from the Railway Committee the rights which are plainly accorded to it under another rule of the House.

Mr. KENNA. Do I understand the gentleman as maintaining that under Rule 79 the Committee on Commerce have not jurisdiction of the river and harbor bill?

Mr. CABELL. I say it has jurisdiction of the improvement of harbors, but I say distinctly that it has not jurisdiction over the question of the improvement of the navigation of rivers, and never has rightfully had such jurisdiction since the year 1831, when the Committee on Roads and Canals was instituted as a standing committee of this House.

Mr. KENNA. Without desiring to interrupt the course of the gentleman's remarks, let me put another question in this connection. Apart from the fact that the House, on more than one occasion when the question of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce under that rule has been under discussion, has decided that this jurisdiction does belong to it, I desire to ask the gentleman whether the language of the rule conferring upon the Committee on Commerce jurisdiction of matters relating to improvements of the commerce of the country is not at least as broad as the language of the Constitution itself which confers jurisdiction of the subject upon Congress? In other words, if the provision of the Constitution authorizes the Congress of the United States to make appropriations for the improvement of rivers running between States, does not the clause of the rule giving to the Committee on Commerce jurisdiction of all matters relating to commerce extend equally far, if not farther?

Mr. CABELL. I do not think it does, Mr. Chairman; but even if it did I say to my friend from West Virginia that the powers and the duties accorded to it aforetime by the Rule 79 of this House were taken from the Committee on Commerce on the adoption of the Rule 94, which relates to the duties and business of the Committee on Railways and Canals. I admit and I grant, and it needed not my distinguished friend to remind me, that the practice of the House has been different from that which I now claim. I concede that it has been different, and that is one of the matters of which I complain. The perversions of a rule of the House are the questions to which I would call the attention of members, and ask them to regard the laws of the House and the rule already constituted and made for our government. I ask them to do justice in the premises, and see that the rights of each committee are respected, and that each is allowed to perform its proper functions in the mode prescribed by law.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. They have only the right to consider what is referred to them by the House and report their opinion.

Mr. CABELL. That is true. I read the law under Rule 79, but my friend has stated that the practice of the House has been frequently to refer these questions to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman misunderstands the purport of my question. I made no allusion whatever to what the practice of the House has been; although it has been, as a matter of fact, as the gentleman states, at least of late years, to refer these matters to the Committee on Commerce. What I desire to direct his attention to is this, if I am not interrupting him too long: The language of the Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce has been construed by numberless bills to embrace the power to make appropriations for the improvement of rivers. Now, if the language of the Constitution giving power to Congress carries with it the power to improve these rivers, why is it and how is it, I wish to ask him, understanding him as I do to deny this jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee—I ask why is it and how is it the language of the rule requiring matters relating to commerce does not confer this same jurisdiction on that committee? It seems to me it is a broader provision which defines the jurisdiction of this committee than the provision in the Constitution which confers jurisdiction over this subject to Congress. It was to that question and not to the practice I desired to call the attention of the gentleman.

Mr. CABELL. I think I understand the gentleman. As I said before, I think the language of the Constitution and the inference to be drawn from that clause of it relating to commerce are much broader and plainer than those contained in Rule 79, defining the duties of the Commerce Committee. That grand old instrument the Constitution has been so frequently tampered with of late years that a very latitudinous construction can now be placed upon most of its provisions. Such great latitude of construction does not befit a rule of this House. It is not, however, a question of constitutional construction that we have here, but a question of legislative intendment. I do not choose, therefore, to enter upon a constitutional argument of the subject at this time, because the facts involved in the case are sufficient for the purposes that I have in view.

Mr. McKENZIE. Practice is more important than theory.

Mr. CABELL. Yes, as my friend suggests, practice is much more important here than any constitutional inference which we might draw from what has been said or what has been written. But, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House, having read this Rule 79, in reference to the duties of the Committee on Commerce, to Rule 94 relating to the business, the powers, and the prerogatives of the Committee on Railways and Canals. Here is the rule, and to that I would invite the careful attention of gentlemen. Just here, my friend has asked me why it is that in the contests that have taken place before the House the advantage has been held by the Committee on Commerce? Why, I will say to my friend, that in more than three to one of the contests which have taken place the victory has remained with the Committee on Railways and Canals. Sometimes, it is true, the Committee on Commerce prevailed. But why did it prevail? I mean it in no unkindness and as no reflection upon any one; but the fact of the business is, that when the Commerce Committee came along with its bill for rivers and harbors, there was such a splendid presentation for a great many members of this House that they never thought of or cared about Rule 94, but rushed pell-mell up to the ballot-box, as it were, and registered their votes against the Committee on Railways and Canals and in favor of the Committee on Commerce. [Laughter.]

Mr. KENNA. I hope my friend was not himself guilty in that sense.

Mr. CABELL. No; "not by a large majority." [Laughter.] Not at all. Never did I engage in anything of the kind. The plain English of the whole matter is—and my friend will pardon me and bear with me when I make the assertion—that whenever the river and harbor bill was brought into this House a general state of demoralization ensued. We forgot all propriety, and most of us jumped at the conclusions to which the Committee on Commerce after much labor had arrived, and rushed the bills they presented in thundering haste through the House. A friend asks why is this? The reason is that the most of us have got a little something in that bill, and that, it may be, is the reason why it gets through so readily.

Mr. ACKLEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is that the reason why the gentleman voted for the bill?

Mr. CABELL. I never voted for one in my life, that I remember.

Mr. ACKLEN. Then, does the gentleman suppose that that is the reason why other gentlemen voted for the bill?

Mr. CABELL. Well, now, that is crowding an American citizen a little more than is agreeable. [Laughter.] I think I may be excused from answering that question, and under the Constitution, Mr. Chairman, I shall decline to answer it.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is only a matter of opinion any way.

Mr. CABELL. Yes, as my friend states, it is only a matter of opinion, and I do not know anything on earth about it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will now read to the House Rule 94, and I wish to call the particular attention of the committee to it, because it is still one of the rules of this House. This is one of the rules proposed to be changed by the report from the Committee on Rules, and I will say just here, that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the report of the committee restoring to this the Committee on Railways and Canals all of its rights and privileges, and when I do that I will give to the House my reasons for restoring these powers and prerogatives to that committee. But to the rule. Rule 94 reads as follows:

> It shall be the duty of the Committee on Railways and Canals to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things relating to roads and canals and the improvement of the navigation of rivers as shall be presented or may come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient.

Now, the rule in regard to the Committee on Commerce provides that the Commerce Committee shall take into consideration matters relating to commerce and give its opinion thereon. "Give its opinion thereon." The rule in relation to Railways and Canals instructs that committee—not by inference or implication, but in direct and positive language—to take into consideration matters relating to roads and canals and all matters relating to the navigation of rivers and to "report thereon." What can be plainer? What can be more distinct?

Now, at the time Congress enacted that rule it evidently designed to define as well as limit the rights and duties of this committee. Moreover, as this Rule 94, in reference to railways and canals, was adopted after Rule 79, by all fair inference and legal construction it repealed every portion of Rule 79 to which it was in any degree repugnant. That is a plain construction of a familiar principle of law, as I conceive. I would here repeat, Mr. Chairman, for I do not wish to be misunderstood upon this point, that I do not deny that during the existence of the Special Committee of Roads and Canals, as appointed at each session of Congress, and before that committee was made a standing committee of the House, the Commerce Committee may have considered questions relating to the improvement of the navigation of rivers in common or in connection with the Roads and Canals Committee, but after the latter was made a standing committee all subjects embraced in Rule 94 were referred to it. And Roads and Canals, afterward Railways and Canals, exercised its powers, privileges, and jurisdiction as prescribed by the rule Congress after Congress for many years, unchallenged by any other committee except in the instance mentioned, in perfect harmony with the other committees of the House, reporting its bills for the improvement of rivers just as the Commerce Committee reported for the improvement of harbors, the reports from both committees being afterward sent to the Ways and Means Committee, with the view of securing such appropriations as that committee might consider that the nature of the subjects might require and the ability of the country permit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when you look to the rules of the House, rules which exist here to day, it is for this House to say whether or not it will change them, alter or violate them so as to permit one committee to absorb those powers and privileges which belong to another. Many gentlemen complain of the Appropriations Committee, but I have no unkind word to say of that hardly-worked and well-abused committee. It is true that it forms a little congress in itself. It has, in my judgment, improperly absorbed much of the work belonging to other committees of the House. For the good that we can do many of us had as well be somewhere else as in this House until that committee makes report of its conclusions. But, at last, whose fault is it that these things are so? We complain of the action of the Appropriations Committee reaching out after and absorbing, as it does, many of the powers and duties which should be distributed among the various committees of the House; but you have a remedy and ought to apply it. A grand opportunity for the correction of wrong is afforded by the report from the Committee on Rules. And I say to the members now, when you come to the main work in hand let justice be executed and the law fairly dealt out as between the committees. Let the rules adopted be so plain that no committee can fail to understand its power or mistake its privileges. Just here I will say to my able friend [Mr. REAGAN] and his associates of the Commerce Committee—and I say it in all kindness—that when, as now, you come to ask for justice you should be required to do it yourselves. There is a familiar principle of the chancery court that when a man comes into court asking equity he should be required, if he is not disposed that way, to do equity himself.

The first question in my opinion that should be propounded to our friends upon the Committee on Commerce, when they indicate by amendment the relief they wish, is this: Before you are relieved from the absorption of your powers by any other committee, are you willing to turn those powers which do not belong to you, and which you have improperly "absorbed" for years, back to the committees from which you have taken them? And the Committee on Commerce should be required to give back to us our legitimate work. That is right; it is proper; it is just. Why should not this be done? Every gentleman from the Committee on Commerce who has addressed this House has told you of the importance of that committee. They have told you how hard and how laboriously they have worked, and I will bear them witness it is one of the hardest-worked of the committees in this House. It is an able committee; it is an honorable committee; it is a good committee, but I should like to know, in the name of all that is good, why a committee that is so hard-worked and dreadfully pressed should desire to take voluntarily upon its shoulders such a vast amount of labor that does not justly and rightfully belong to it? Why do you wish to go and shoulder a mountain of labor, when you have got more than you can stagger under already?

Sir, just a few months ago the cry came up from that splendid committee, the Commerce Committee, that they were overworked; burdened by labors coming upon them from one end of the land to the other, thrust upon them by members representing this country in all its different parts. They have brought here and piled into the Commerce Committee room heaps of work until one bill lay upon another like Ossa upon Pelion. The committee said "All that work is piled upon us; we do not know what to do; we cannot stagger along under the burden unless we get help." "Help!" cries the Committee on Commerce, "Help!" and the Committee on Rules was appealed to and it gave to the Committee on Commerce four or five other members, until it is now one of the largest committees of the House. To do what? To perform these Herculean labors. To do that mighty work which at its desire and solicitation is confided to it. Now I say to my friends on the Commerce Committee send us what belongs to the Committee on Railways and Canals and we will divide that vast business with you, and, instead of your tottering along under your load, we will let you come along here with your harbor bill smiling, lively, and, as a friend beside me says, "happy and free." [Laughter.]

I can well understand how some of these gentlemen might say in reply: "Why do you want this when you could not get the bill through? We have our omnibus bill; we come here and hold it in terrorem over the House and say, you must pass it." We can simply reply: "Why cannot the Railways and Canals Committee, which is composed of men just as liberal, though not as able perhaps, as those on the Commerce Committee—why cannot we get up an omnibus bill too? [Laughter.] We can imitate your noble example. We may not have the sagacity to blaze out a path for ourselves; but we can follow the good example you have set, and put just as much money as you ever did in a bill for the improvement of the navigation of rivers." And when we come in with that omnibus bill we, too, in our turn, may be in the gay and happy and felicitous state in which we often find our friends of the Commerce Committee when they come in with their omnibus bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors. [Laughter.]

But I see, Mr. Chairman, I have but little time left, and I will take the chances hereafter under the five-minute rule of saying further what I desire. I have promised to some of my friends that I would give them part of the time which I had, and I will close my argument here upon this question by asking the careful and the prayerful attention of this House to the subject of my remarks, [laughter,] if, indeed, they can give or will give such consideration to a measure of this kind.

Mr. MCKENZIE. That is asking too much of us. [Laughter.]

Mr. CABELL. It is asking a good deal, I know; it is crowding the brethren more perhaps than I have any right to do, [laughter;] but at the same time I wish them to consider this matter carefully and at the proper time give us help, for I shall present an amendment which will give my committee no more than belongs to us under the present rules, and will ask for no more than we are entitled to have. I shall ask this House to restore that rule for the good of the country, for the interests of the House, for the facilitation of business, and for the doing of justice.

I now yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FISHER.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] has but ten minutes remaining.

Mr. CABELL. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the remaining five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.]

Mr. SCALES. If I am only to have five minutes I will not claim that time at present.

Mr. CABELL. Then I yield ten minutes to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FISHER. It is not my purpose to cast any reflection upon the Committee on Rules, who have brought in this new code for the consideration of the House. But, sir, as a member of the Committee on Railways and Canals, I desire to speak very briefly in regard to the new rule—clause 16 of Rule XI:

Subjects relating to railways and canals other than Pacific railroads: to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

This rule is substituted for Rule 94, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

94. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Roads and Canals to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things relating to roads and canals, and the improvement of the navigation of rivers, as shall be presented, or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient.

Mr. FISHER. Now, Mr. Chairman, in December, 1877, when this subject was under consideration in Congress, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] who is now the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, as he was then, made the point that matters pertaining to rivers may be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals or may be referred to the Committee on Commerce. Now, sir, I hold that under Rule 94 it is mandatory that these matters should be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals. The rule does not say "may be," but it says "shall be referred." The gentleman takes as authority for their jurisdiction, and quotes, section 8 of article I of the Constitution.

Section 8 of article I of the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress only the right to regulate commerce; it does not give that right to the Committee on Commerce. We of the Committee on Railways and Canals have just as much right to regulate commerce as has the Committee on Commerce. We are all equals here, all members of this body, and it is not for the Committee on Commerce to regulate commerce, but the Constitution says that Congress shall regulate commerce.

Now, I hold that if we have had these matters referred to the Committee on Commerce for twenty-five or thirty years, that does not necessarily give the jurisdiction of them to that committee. These rules are re-enacted by every Congress. The Forty-sixth Congress, when it convened in its first session, re-enacted these rules. I care not what has been the practice of the House in regard to the matter. If the Committee on Railways and Canals has the right to consider this subject, as I say it has under this rule, then I do not think it just or proper that the authority should be usurped by the Committee on Commerce.

When this revision of the rules first came up for consideration the Committee on Commerce was the first to cry out against it; and why? Because that committee objected to the Committee on Appropriations having supervisory action over its work. Yet that committee has not said that it was unwilling to appropriate to itself the work properly belonging to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

I hold that since 1795, when this Committee on Commerce was first called into being, the internal commerce of this country has increased a thousand per cent.; yes, more than a thousand per cent. The duty of the Committee on Commerce is not to appropriate $14.50 to remove some obstruction from Stump Creek. It is not the duty of the Committee on Commerce to appropriate a hundred dollars to remove a sand-bar from Squantum Run. I desire that the committee shall rise up to the dignity of its position. Its duty is to digest measures for millions and millions of internal and external commerce. Let those gentlemen consider the question of interstate commerce. Let them report measures for fostering our foreign commerce and building up the country, as they should do.

In our State constitution of Pennsylvania there is a provision which I desire to have read by the Clerk. It is section 3, article 3, of that constitution.

The Clerk read as follows:

No bills, except general appropriation bills, shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.

Mr. FISHER. Now, sir, this appropriation bill which comes from the Committee on Commerce is an omnibus bill. The objections to measures of similar character made it necessary for us in the State of Pennsylvania to put in our new constitution the section which has just been read by the Clerk. And I am very glad to know that my distinguished colleague from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] has introduced into this House a proposed constitutional amendment similar to that, and one which will obviate the difficulties which we have encountered in passing such appropriation bills, into which matters and items of appropriation are put for the purpose of obtaining votes for the support of the general bill and not for the good of any of our great commercial centers. Our great cities of Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Charleston, and other sea-coast cities, as well as our large inland cities, will always receive necessary support and proper appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Mr. Chairman, after according to the Committee on Rules great credit for the wisdom and labor they have bestowed upon our system of rules I shall advance a few remarks by way of giving notice of two amendments which I desire to offer. In regard to the discussion which has occupied so much of the time of this committee, in the contest between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Commerce, I shall have nothing to say.

There are two distinct propositions which I desire to offer, and which have not been commented upon by any one. Inasmuch as they are new I desire to call the attention of the committee to them at this time in order that members may have an opportunity to reflect upon them before we reach the five-minute debate.

In the history of every legislative body that I have ever read there is to be found some remedy for one of the evils which I now desire to point out. A member upon this floor may offer a public bill, and although a large majority of this House may be in favor of that bill, yet if the committee to which that bill is referred is opposed to it, there are no means afforded by our rules by which that member can ever bring that measure to a vote before this House.

I have talked with old parliamentarians, with men as thoroughly versed in parliamentary rules perhaps as any gentleman upon this floor. They all agree upon one point, that if a bill is referred to a committee which is opposed to it and that committee does not see proper to report that bill back to the House, they can hold it up, and the only remedy is for the member to offer a resolution of this House instructing that committee to report back that bill. Now, at first blush that would seem to be a proper remedy. But it amounts to nothing at all, because you can never offer such a resolution or make such a motion except upon a Monday after all the States and Territories have been called through for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, before the expiration of the hour, and when during the remainder of that hour a second call is made for individual resolutions. Such a call as that has not occurred more than once in ten years. I have been assured by members who have been upon this floor for the last twelve or fifteen years that they never knew an instance of such a call to occur except once, and then when a motion was made it was lost by the interposition of a motion to adjourn, because it had no place on the Calendar and no place provided for it under the rules of this House. I say this thing is all wrong, and that there ought to be some remedy for it in the rules of this House.

Surely when a man comes here under a pledge to his constituents that he will advocate a certain public measure which he believes for their good, and when the matter may have been an issue in the contest between him and his opponents, he ought to have some opportunity to secure a vote of the members of this House upon that question. It ought not to be smothered by a committee, and the member presenting the measure ought not to be prevented from obtaining an expression of the members of this House upon the proposition. It is his right as a Representative to have a vote of the House upon it. But under these new rules and under the old rules no opportunity is afforded him of asserting this high prerogative; a personal right it ought to be, and a privileged one.

I am not wedded to any particular plan in regard to this matter, because I confess that I am very inexperienced in regard to parliamentary law. It has seemed to me, as has been said by many members here, that the rules of this House have been constructed to prevent the progress of business and to keep it in the hands of a few individuals, rather than to promote its transaction. This has seemed so to me ever since I have had the honor of a seat on this floor. But, sir, I care nothing about the particular plan I have pointed out, provided some experienced parliamentarian will offer a better one. The rules as they now stand afford no remedy. It seems that the committee making this report did not have their attention directed to this point at all, or if they did they desired to afford no remedy for this evil. Hence, with the advice of some experienced parliamentarians, I have drawn up an amendment which I believe will afford a remedy and give to every member an opportunity of having an expression of the views of this House upon any public bill. I send it to the Clerk that it may be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to Rule XXIV the following:

When a public bill, resolution, or proposition shall have been referred to a standing or select committee of the House and no report has been made thereon for thirty days, it shall be in order for the member who introduced said bill, resolution, or proposition, on any Monday, after the call of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions, to offer a resolution or move to place said bill, resolution, or proposition on the proper calendar, which resolution shall then be considered, and, if decided in the affirmative, the bill, resolution, or proposition shall be placed on the Calendar, and the committee discharged from further consideration of the same.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. At the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I shall offer this amendment, the effect of which will be to give to any member introducing a proposition, after the committee has had possession of it for thirty days and failed to make any report upon it, an opportunity of having the committee discharged and the measure placed upon the Calendar, thereby enabling it to be taken up and the merits of the question voted upon by the House.

It may be urged as an objection to this proposition that it might take up too much of the time of the House. Why, sir, this proposition will not give the measure in question any precedence. It is merely provided that after it has been in the hands of the committee for thirty days the member on any Monday after the call of States may offer a resolution (and it will be for the House to say whether it will adopt it or not) providing that the measure shall be placed upon the Calendar, and afterward, if it is the will of the House, it can be taken up and considered. If the House should think there are more important measures demanding attention, it can pass by the proposition or bill on the Calendar—an every-day practice.

This proposed amendment simply puts it in the power of members to have an expression of the sentiment of this House. If we do not provide a rule of this kind, a bill of a public character may be stifled in a committee though an overwhelming majority may be in favor of it. Under the rules as now existing, or the new rules as now reported, there are no means which enable us to take a bill, proposition, or resolution away from a committee if they are opposed to it and will not report it. I say that a remedy ought to be afforded. I am not wedded to this particular plan. It is the best I can conceive of, but any amendment or substitute that may be offered, and is suitable to reach this evil, I will very cheerfully accept.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other amendment which I desire to offer about which there may be some contrariety of opinion. In regard to the other I think there will be none. Clause 3 of Rule XXIII, as embraced in this revision, provides that—

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

That is very good so far as it goes; but I would like to add, "and upon all such bills, motions, or propositions, the yeas and nays shall be taken in the House upon their final passage, and they must be voted for by a majority of all the members elected, and the vote entered on the Journal."

I am aware of the constitutional provisions to which I see the honorable chairman is referring; but I take it (and I have investigated this question) that my proposition does not interfere with the constitutional question. The Constitution provides that upon the demand of one-fifth of the members present the yeas and nays shall be taken upon any proposition. In view of that provision, we cannot of course adopt any rule which would require more than one-fifth for the taking of the yeas and nays. But we have the right to provide that the yeas and nays shall be taken upon the call of two members; and we have the right to make it the imperative duty of the Speaker to order the yeas and nays upon any particular class of legislation. That would not be in violation of the Constitution.

I will submit one further consideration on the constitutional view. These rules must now be adopted by a majority of the House, which, of course, is more than one-fifth; and if we adopt a fixed rule it will govern us in regard to the yeas and nays and will be entirely in accordance with the Constitution and will draw the attention of members to these important bills affecting the rights of the tax-payers and force them to vote upon the record. It is the right of the people to know how their representatives have voted.

Mr. Chairman, I know very well it may be said that the calling of the yeas and nays would not influence any member upon this floor, that we all have a sufficient degree of patriotism in this House to induce us to act for the public good without the responsibility of a yea-and-nay vote, but every day's experience teaches us exactly the reverse. How often upon a mere motion of adjournment have you seen in this House a rising vote carry the question, but when the yeas and nays were demanded, when the constituency of the honorable gentlemen were brought before them face to face, you found the motion for adjournment fail by a signal majority? It is a thing of every-day occurrence; and I am here to discuss that question on its true merits, and present the facts as they really are in practice in this House.

How is it in regard to these appropriations? Why, sir, the country is groaning under burdens of taxation. You remember as well, Mr. Chairman, as I do, and as well as every gentleman on this floor, especially those on this side of the Chamber, that we made the last presidential canvass upon the doctrine of retrenchment and reform. It was the battle-cry of every man in the canvass. Then, I say, it is our duty as the representatives of the people to do all we can to reduce the expenditures of this Government and bring about retrenchment and reform. I say the adoption of this amendment will do more toward it than any rule we could adopt; it will save millions of dollars every session of Congress. That all these important bills shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole is all very well in its place, to let them be considered by the Committee of the Whole, but when they come into the House on their final passage let the yeas and nays be called, and let the people know who has voted for them and who has voted against them; and I require a majority to vote instead of only a few members, as is frequently the case, upon bills appropriating millions of dollars collected from the masses by taxation—frequently unjust and discriminating against the agricultural class—in favor of monopolist and capital.

Why, sir, by turning to the constitutions of the different States in this Union it will be seen that the experiment has been actually tried. I will refer first to the constitution of the State of Virginia, the mother of States and of statesmen. She relied upon the patriotism, upon the frugality and honesty of her representatives, and required no yeas and nays until 1850. Then, sir, when the new constitution was adopted in that State—and I call the attention of the members of that State to the point, and I hope to have their aid—then it was they placed in their constitution the provision which I will send to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. On the passage of every act which imposes, continues, or revives a tax, or creates a duty or charge, or makes, continues, or revives any appropriation of public or trust money or property, or releases, discharges, or commutes any claim or demand of the State, the vote shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the same shall be entered on the journals of the respective houses, and a majority of the members elected to each house shall be necessary to give it the force of a law.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Now, the committee will see that, after a long experience, the State of Virginia was forced to incorporate that into her constitution. It has proved of vast benefit in controlling the expenditures of that State and in securing a proper system of economy. Not only the State of Virginia has adopted this provision in her constitution, but the Empire State of New York has also adopted a similar provision. In New York they tried the patriotism, they tried the frugality and economy of the members until they adopted their new constitution, when, in 1873, they were forced and compelled to incorporate that same amendment into their constitution, and it is to-day the fundamental law of that State. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the passage, in either house of the Legislature, of any act which imposes, continues, or revives a tax, or creates a debt or charge, or makes, continues, or revives any appropriation of public or trust money or property, or releases, discharges, or commutes any claim or demand of the State, the question shall be taken by yeas and nays, which shall be duly entered upon the journals; and three-fifths of the members elected to either house shall, in all such cases, be necessary to constitute a quorum therein.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. The committee will observe that the convention which framed that amendment was not willing to leave it simply to the question of yeas and nays, requiring a majority to vote for it, but required that three-fifths of the members of both Houses should be in their seats and constitute a quorum for the consideration of an appropriation bill. That is the safeguard which was thrown around the rights of the people, to protect them against taxation, in the great Empire State; and I hope that the members here from that State will aid in giving to the whole people of the United States a little of that same wholesome protection provided by that provision of their State constitution.

But, sir, we know that in this House the calling of the yeas and nays on an appropriation bill, instead of being the general rule, has been for years past the exception to the rule. They are hardly ever called, and the Journals show it. Appropriation bills for thirty or forty millions of money will pass through the House without the consideration or attention of many of the members, only a few voting, rarely a majority. There is no call for the yeas and nays, and the attention of the members is not drawn to the fact. Now I ask the Clerk to read from the constitution of the State of Wisconsin, on page 2038.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. On the passage in either house of the Legislature of any law which imposes, continues, or renews a tax, or creates a debt or charge, or makes, continues, or renews an appropriation of public or trust money, or releases, discharges, or commutes a claim on demand of the State, the question shall be taken by yeas and nays, which shall be duly entered on the journal, and three-fifths of all the members elected to such house shall in all such cases be required to constitute a quorum therein.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. The committee will see that it is almost identically the same provision that is to be found in the constitution of the State of New York, not only requiring the vote of a majority by yeas and nays, and then that they shall be entered upon the journal, but requiring the presence of three-fifths of the members to constitute a quorum for the consideration of appropriation bills or when disposing of the public money. I will now ask the Clerk to read from the constitution of Pennsylvania, on page 1573.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Every bill shall be read at length on three different days in each house. All amendments made thereto shall be printed for the use of the members before the final vote is taken on the bill, and no bill shall become a law unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and nays, the names of the persons voting for and against the same be entered on the journal, and a majority of the members elected to each house be recorded thereon as voting in its favor.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Mr. Chairman, it will be seen from this section of the law how far that great State has gone upon this question. That is under a recent amendment to the constitution. Experience had taught them, as it has taught us here, that they must resort to some expedient of this sort to fix the responsibility and to invite the attention of members to these appropriation bills. I will now ask the Clerk to read from the constitution of the State of Maryland, page 845.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. No bill shall become a law unless it be passed in each house by a majority of the whole number of members elected, and on its final passage the ayes and noes be recorded.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. The committee will see that the State of Maryland has gone a step beyond the others. In the case of New York, in the case of Virginia, and in the case of Wisconsin, it has been confined simply to appropriation bills, but in the State of Maryland this requirement applies to every bill. None can become the law unless the yeas and nays are called, a majority voting in favor of the bill, and the names recorded on the journal of the house. I think it is right and I should be willing to go that far.

It might be urged as an objection that we have such a vast amount of legislation that it would consume too much time to call the yeas and nays upon all. But surely we can take the time, when voting away the money of the people and voting to impose a tax upon them, to ask the yeas and nays on these appropriation bills and force a majority to vote or let the bills fail, and let the people see how we vote.

I will ask the Clerk now to read from the constitution of my own State, the State of Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40. The General Assembly shall have no power to pass any act or resolution for the appropriation of any money, or the creation of any debt exceeding the sum of $100, at any one time, unless the same, on its final passage, shall be voted for by a majority of all the members then elected to each branch of the General Assembly, and the yeas and nays thereon entered on the journal.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Now, gentlemen of the committee will observe that there is a difference here; still, the power is given to the Legislature to fix the responsibility. That constitution was adopted in 1850. There the Legislature was allowed without the yeas and nays to incur a debt not over $100.

It may be changed, however, and I will accept an amendment from any gentleman who may see proper to offer it, if the amount is not too large. But I want to test the sense of the House on the question that we fix a minimum sum, and beyond that the yeas and nays shall be demanded and recorded. In the constitution of Kentucky it is fixed at $100. My own inclinations would be to go beyond that and follow the example of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and all those other States that require yeas and nays on all bills of appropriations.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, how many States have been taught by sad experience that it was wise to adopt this provision, to fix this responsibility upon their representatives, because I have not had time to examine the constitution of every State in this Union. I have had read these provisions of the constitutions indicated simply because they fell under my observation, and I desire to invite the attention of this House to-day to them to show I am not erratic in what I propose—that it was no erratic idea of mine, but that on the contrary the difficulty is one that has been pointed out, and the remedy is one that has been adopted and found to act wisely and judiciously.

Well, sir, if it is right in those States to incorporate that provision in their constitutions, if they have been forced to it by many years of experience, I will ask the Representatives of the people upon this floor why it is not right we should have the same safeguards here? Why is it we should have the unlimited power of voting away millions of the money of the people, and yet on the public records of the country there should be nothing to show what gentlemen participated in it and who discharged their duty to the satisfaction of their constituents? If this provision is right in a State, if it is found to be a wise provision, then why would it not be a wise provision here? Why would it not exercise a wholesome influence, and why would it not be beneficial to guard the rights of the whole people from congressional burdens of taxation? They are as onerous as if imposed by a State Legislature, and more so, because they are counted by millions instead of hundreds of dollars.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this would be a step in the right direction; and when gentlemen say they are in favor of retrenchment and reform, I say let them come up and vote for this amendment, and show to the country that they are in earnest. Let us have the yeas and nays upon these appropriation bills, and then you will find that every member of this House will take a deep interest in these measures when they come up, simply because he will have to face the music when he goes home and stands before his constituents. Hence it is I propose to offer that amendment. I know that some gentlemen may argue the matter and may urge that perhaps the constitutional objection is in the way. But, sir, I have conversed with men learned in the Constitution and laws of this country, and upon that question I believe there is among them no difference of opinion, but they agree that it does not militate or conflict in any way with the Constitution if we make it a general rule that the yeas and nays shall be called in every case upon appropriation bills. Many of the States give the power to two members to call for the yeas and nays. I do not know but that may be a very good provision. But I simply want the constitutional provision of old Virginia. Experience drove them to the adoption of that clause in their constitution that the yeas and nays should be called upon all appropriation bills, and I hope I will have the aid of my friends from that State.

Mr. LAPHAM. What party is proposing in Virginia to scale their debt to-day?

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I did not rise for the purpose of entering into any partisan debate upon this question. I rose here to advocate amendments which I thought were for the public good and the interest of the people of all parties, and for which I expected the support of gentlemen on the other side of this House as well as upon this side, and not to indulge in criminations or recriminations of a partisan character.

Mr. HOUK. Is it a partisan measure to scale the debt?

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I hear it said by gentlemen around me that it is republicans who desire to scale the debt. How that is I do not know and do not care.

Mr. HOUK. I asked the question whether it is a partisan measure.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Well, I am informed it is the republicans who are urging it. I do not know whether that is true or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, when gentlemen ask me why, instead of offering this amendment to the rules, I do not offer a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, I desire to say this: the fact is, I have drawn an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which I hold in my hand, and which I shall offer at the proper time to the House, on this subject, embodying the provisions of the Virginia constitution. But, sir, even if it should be the sense of the House that this amendment, which I shall offer in the House as soon as the opportunity is presented, should be made to the Constitution of the United States, still in my judgment this wise provision should be incorporated in those rules. The amendment to the Constitution of the United States would be a long time in being matured. Even if adopted by the House and by the Senate it would be a long time before it would be acted upon by three-fourths of the States. In the mean time we would be going on with appropriations.

But if a provision be incorporated as an amendment into these rules that have been reported by this able committee, it would give vitality to the principle at once, throw around the people the necessary protection, fix the responsibility upon members who vote away the public money here, and enable their constituents to know who it was that voted away their money. It would have the effect of drawing our attention to these bills. In every respect it would be a wholesome provision, and I can see no reason why we should not adopt it as an amendment to the rules.

At the proper time I will offer the amendment to the Constitution, but in the meanwhile I do hope that I may have for this amendment to the rules the aid of the members from the different States which have adopted this provision. I have read here a list of States whose Representatives alone upon this floor could almost carry this amendment. The great State of Pennsylvania has incorporated it into her constitution. The States of Virginia, and of Maryland, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Kentucky, and Tennessee have done so, and doubtless many others. Let the Representatives of these States come to the rescue. Let them incorporate the same principle into these rules which wisdom has taught them to incorporate into the constitutions of their own States, and let us have the benefit of it here. Let us not wait for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, but let us give vitality to the principle while we can by the amendment to the rules that have been reported to this House.

Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to trespass upon the time of the committee, but as these two propositions were entirely novel in their character, and as no comment has been offered upon either proposition or amendment suggested by myself, and which I give notice I will offer, I have deemed it my duty to give notice of these two amendments and to invite the attention of the members of this body to those two questions, and especially to the last, hoping before this debate closes to have the voice upon them of other gentlemen who are far more experienced than myself. Having done this briefly, I now express my obligation to the Chairman and committee for the attention they have given to me in offering these crude and off-hand remarks. I believe I have fifteen minutes of my time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I do not desire to trespass further on the indulgence of the committee, as it is nearly five o'clock. If any gentleman desires what remains of my time I will give it to him.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER obtained the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] if he desires to take the floor in his own right, or to occupy the remainder of the time of my colleague from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER?]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I prefer to take it in my own right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then will the gentleman yield for a motion that the committee now rise?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will do so, retaining my right to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be entitled to the floor when the committee again resumes consideration of this subject.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, requested the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to correct an error in the "Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 212) for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William F. Shepard;

An act (S. No. 296) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum; and

An act (S. No. 815) to increase the pensions of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who are utterly helpless from injuries received or disease contracted while in the United States service.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 14, 1880.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

The SPEAKER. The uniform practice of the House has been to grant such requests of the Senate, and if there be no objection the Chair will direct that the bill be returned to the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LICENSED DEALERS IN TOBACCO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to licensed dealers in tobacco; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

STATUE TO ADMIRAL FARRAGUT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending an appropriation of $10,000 to enable him to fulfill his contract with Mrs. Vinnie Ream Hoxie for a statue of Admiral Farragut; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ARANSAS BAY, ETC., TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of Major C. W. Howell, Corps of Engineers, on Aransas Pass and Bay, up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Texas, and Corpus Christi Pass and Channel; also report on improvement of Aransas Pass and Pass Carvallo, and report on survey of Brazos Santiago, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CAPTAIN JOHN C. WHITE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the request of Captain John C. White, First Artillery, for relief from accountability for loss of public property by fire; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MILITARY STOREHOUSE AT OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the erection of a storehouse, &c., at Omaha, Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMANDER BUSHROD B. TAYLOR AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the report of the board appointed under authority of a joint resolution approved February 5, 1879, to examine into the case of Commander Bushrod B. Taylor and other officers of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

NAVY DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with law, a list of the civil employés of said Department; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Mr. SPARKS. In regard to the communication a few moments ago presented as coming from the War Department and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to direct attention in the way of inquiry as to whether or not those communications ought to be addressed to the Speaker and come through the House, or to the committee or member of the committee in response to whose inquiries they are addressed. If they are to be treated as executive documents, and come through the House, it will produce much confusion and delay of business in that committee, as it would in any other committee. I speak of this matter as affecting action in the Committee on Military Affairs because of my connection with that committee, but the principle involved applies of course to the other committees as well as to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read Rule 159.

The Clerk read as follows:

Estimates of appropriations, and all other communications from the Executive Departments intended for the consideration of any of the committees of the House, shall be addressed to the Speaker, and by him submitted to the House for reference.

Mr. SPARKS. Does not that rule apply only to what are known as executive documents, such as original communications of an Executive Department of the Government to Congress, or to answers to inquiries made by order of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that, under the rule which has been read, every communication coming from a Department of the Government relating to public business should come through its official channel, and not through an individual member of the House or of any committee of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. If the Chair decides the question in advance, of course that ends it.

The SPEAKER. It is very plain that a record of all such communications should be preserved, and the only way to preserve that record correctly is to make it on the Journal of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. My opinion is that the answer to any inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War, for example, by order of the House should necessarily come to the Speaker of the House, as should also any original communication which the Secretary of War or any head of Department should desire to submit to Congress. But if I as an individual member of the House, or as a member of a committee or sub-committee, deem it proper to address a letter for information to the Secretary of War, it seems to me that the answer to that inquiry certainly should come to me and not to the House. For example, a committee or sub-committee charged with the examination of some trivial matter pending before a committee or sub-committee addresses a letter to the head of one of the Executive Departments for such information as may be necessary to a proper understanding of the matter in hand, should the answer to such communication come to the Speaker and through the House in order to get into the hands of that sub-committee? or ought it not to come directly to the committee? It seems to me that adopting the former will produce confusion and delay the transaction of the business of our committees, and is entirely unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. Yet that is the rule.

Mr. SPARKS. The rule obviously relates to executive documents. To treat these communications as executive documents seems to me to be in conflict with the rule itself. My point is that these kinds of letters are not executive documents, and that the rule relates purely to executive documents.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask whether the result of the ruling of the Speaker would not be that no member of this House could communicate directly with any Department of the Government?

Mr. SPARKS. I think so; certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not make any ruling; he executes the rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that; but the question here is upon the construction of the rule. It has been the practice, I know, of the several committees to communicate directly with the Departments by letter or otherwise, and it seems to me there is much in the distinction made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] between communications made by the Departments to committees of the House for their information and communications made in response to a direct application of the House itself.

The SPEAKER. The advantage arising from this mode of getting information from the Departments is that when the information comes in it can be printed by order of the House. The printing cannot be done except by order of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. We are now speaking of communications which are not in any proper sense executive documents, which are generally printed. The communications of which we are speaking are those in response to inquiries made directly to the Department by a committee, or members of a committee, in reference to business before it. The Committee on Military Affairs, for instance, may have under consideration a bill restoring an officer to his former rank. We want to know what his record is. A sub-committee makes the inquiry of the War Department. What is desired is simply information touching the matter in hand. Any member might obtain this information for himself by going in person to the Department and making the necessary inquiry. Now, why may not a letter be addressed, and save going in person? The response to such inquiry is not an executive communication at all, and does not need to be printed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the point raised is an important one. Some days ago, on behalf of the committee I represent, I addressed a communication to the Secretary of War on this subject, and to-day had a personal interview with him in relation to it. I am quite sure that he desires to meet the view which I have here taken, yet he is confronted with this rule, a proper construction of which he of course would desire to have for his guidance.

My construction of the rule is that it relates alone to executive communications, such as original communications coming from the Departments to Congress and communications for which either House of Congress may call upon any of these Departments for information. These, as I understand it, must come to the Speaker. But if in the discharge of my routine business as a member of a committee I want to get information from a Department, I can go to the Department in person and get it, or I can address the head of that Department by letter and be answered directly on the subject without such answer coming through the House. This is my view of it, and I would like to have the question settled here and now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very loth to make any expression which may limit in any degree the facility of communication between members of this House and the several Executive Departments. But this discretion would seem to be left with the departmental officer; and if in reply to a question from a member of a committee or from a sub-committee he chooses to send his communication through the House, the Chair is at a loss to know how it can be prevented. The document now in question is a communication from the Secretary of the Navy as to certain officers of the Navy who were retired, as the Chair understands, by joint action of the two Houses——

Mr. SPARKS. Who addressed the inquiry to him?

The SPEAKER. It is the report of a board.

Mr. SPARKS. That is an executive communication.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not of course direct my remarks to any particular case. What I would like to have the Speaker rule—and I think it is the correct ruling, or I would not ask him to make it——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not like to rule incorrectly.

Mr. SPARKS. And I would not like for him to do so. What I ask the Chair to rule is, that only executive documents come within the rule just read, and I think such ruling would not be "incorrect."

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to rule upon except what comes into his possession officially. When a communication from an executive officer of the Government is addressed to the Speaker of the House, then only the Chair takes cognizance of it. The Chair supposes that communications passing between members of this House and executive officers of the Government are unlimited in number. He recollects that when chairman of the Committee on Appropriations endeavoring to cut down the expenses of the Government he sought information from every officer who was accessible.

Mr. SPARKS. I have been in the habit of doing that myself, and the replies did not come through the House; and the Chair, I presume, does not think they ought to have done so, which settles the question in my favor, if I understand him.

The SPEAKER. In regard to inquiries made by the present occupant of the chair as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, he did not ask that the answers should come through the Speaker of the House.

Mr. CLYMER. The Chair will recollect that we are now talking with the Departments by telephone almost every hour of the day, and if the Chair should now rule that replies from executive officers in regard to public business must come through the House, an officer questioned by telephone may say, "I cannot address anybody but the Speaker."

The SPEAKER. The Chair only rules upon papers addressed to him officially.

Mr. CLYMER. But this ruling might make Department officers think that they should not answer our inquiries except through the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge, of course, of communications passing between members of the House and the Executive Departments; but when papers are addressed to the Chair he must present them to the House.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. This communication of the Secretary of the Navy is properly and legally addressed to the Speaker of the House. In replying to inquiries of the Committee on Naval Affairs, or sub-committees of that committee, the Secretary of the Navy has always observed the rules of courtesy and propriety; and there has been no complaint upon the part of any member of the committee. This to which he has replied to-day is in response to an act of Congress.

Mr. SPARKS. Then, of course, it is an executive document.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. In response to what?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. In response to an act of Congress.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair thought. It is the report of a board created by an act of Congress.

Mr. SPARKS. I know nothing of this case referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee, and I am not speaking of that kind of cases. It is an executive document, it seems; if so it certainly ought to come to the Speaker. But I am speaking of letters addressed by committees or sub-committees to heads of Departments for information, &c. The answers to these, I insist, ought to be made directly to said committees, and not to the Speaker.

J. C. IRWIN.

On motion of Mr. HASKELL, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of J. C. Irwin, no adverse report having been made thereon.

F. G. BISHOP.

Mr. MITCHELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3526) granting additional compensation to F. G. Bishop, of the State of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

And then, on motion of Mr. CALKINS, (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 15, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, REV. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 194 of the Revised Statutes, a report of the names of clerks and other persons employed in the War Department, and offices thereof, from December 1, 1878, to November 30, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the chief clerk and superintendent of the War Department building, reporting that the sum of $500 will be required to meet a deficiency in the appropriation for contingent expenses of the office of the Adjutant-General for the remainder of the present fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of Captain William H. Penrose, Third Infantry, with indorsements thereon, relative to the reopening of the Mullan wagon-road from Fort Missoula to the summit of the Cœur d'Alene Mountains, Montana Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the petition of S. H. Cornell and others, of Vineland, Cumberland County, New Jersey, praying for an amendment to the Constitution providing that the right of suffrage in the United States shall be based on citizenship and shall be regulated by Congress, and that all citizens of the United States, native or naturalized, shall enjoy this right equally, without any distinction founded on sex; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Susan Port Leggett and others, citizens of Elizabeth, New Jersey, representing that they are real-estate owners and are annually taxed heavily for the support of pauperism and crime, while they have no power to suppress vice or regulate taxation, and praying for the removal of their political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLAN presented documentary evidence in support of the claim of certain Sioux Indians who served in the Army of the United States for relief from the operation of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1863, to be considered in connection with the bill (S. No. 566) to restore to certain scouts and soldiers of the United States Army of the Sioux Nation of Indians the money and annuities belonging to them confiscated and forfeited to the United States under an act for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians, approved February 16, 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of John and Julia A. Beeson, of Utica, La Salle County, Illinois, praying for the establishment of a system of international arbitration, instead of war, and for the appropriation of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for a board of arbitrators, to be composed of women as well as men, to be nominated by Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, founder of the Co-operative Aid Association of New York, and Alfred Love, president of the Universal Peace Union, of Philadelphia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of A. J. Hay and 50 other citizens of Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, praying for the amendment of the patent laws so as to protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the memorial of James J. Edmonds and 98 others, citizens of Pennsylvania and soldiers of the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of Pennsylvania, officially signed, representing one thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of C. A. Dean and 53 other citizens of Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of such laws as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Julia T. Foster, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the petition of Elizabeth A. Stockton Carson, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the petition of Catharine E. Saulsbury, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and the petition of Minerva J. Winton, of Steuben, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, praying for the removal of their political disabilities; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Emily K. Barber and others, citizens of Steuben, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BALDWIN presented the petition of B. F. Sweet and others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GROOME. I present the petition of the Hodges Brothers and 85 others, of the city of Baltimore, praying for the abolition and repeal of the compulsory legal-tender power now given by law to the Treasury notes of the United States. In presenting this petition I desire to say that the names signed to it embrace many of the leading business men and business houses of the city of Baltimore. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONAS presented the petition of the Auxiliary Sanitary Association of New Orleans, officially signed, praying for the passage of the bill now pending to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the construction of the necessary ships for the disinfection of vessels and cargoes; which was referred to the Select Committee to Investigate and Report the Best Means of Preventing the Introduction and Spread of Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of T. A. Pearson, S. S. Woodbury and others, citizens of Jefferson County, Colorado, praying for an amendment of the patent laws so as to make the manufacturer for sale or the vendor responsible for infringements and protect from penalty any person manufacturing patented articles for his own use; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of W. F. Reynolds and others, citizens of Jefferson County, Colorado, praying for the passage of a law to prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of John Ross, chief, and others of the Eastern Band of North Carolina Cherokees, praying for the passage of a law directing the President to execute the treaty of 1865–'66, according to article 12 of the same; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of P. C. Merryman and others, citizens of Brunswick, Maine, praying for the passage of a law for the distribution of the Geneva award fund; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the petition of T. Cornelius Cornell, an inmate of the Soldiers' National Home at Augusta, Maine, praying for the passage of a law granting him compensation for clothing lost by fire while in the military service of the United States during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Lewis Mayo and others, citizens of Leavenworth, Kansas, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Frederick Weller, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of H. H. Spaulding and others, soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of a law granting them the difference between greenbacks and gold at the time of payment; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of Charles Webb, administrator of the estate of Christopher C. Brand, of Norwich, Connecticut, praying for an extension of letters-patent for an improvement in fire-arms; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BRUCE presented the petition of Armstead Goodlow, late private Company E, Twenty-third Regiment United States Colored Troops, praying for arrearages of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of A. J. Fields and others, citizens of Rural, Rock Island County, Illinois, and the petition of Rebecca Haney and others, citizens of Arthur, Moultrie County, Illinois, praying for an amendment to the Constitution guaranteeing to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Jane Hamilton Wright and the petition of Hannah J. Coffee, citizens of Rural, Rock Island County, Illinois, praying for the removal of their political disabilities; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 843) providing for the delivery of dutiable articles in the mails, and for indemnity for lost registered articles, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2790) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Seaford, Sussex County, Delaware, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2785) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Lake Charles, Louisiana, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles J. E. Thompson, of Providence, Rhode Island, praying for the extension of his patent for a new and improved connecting link for chain cables, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 663) granting a pension to John J. Fritschy, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 609) granting a pension to James E. Hargrove, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph F. Thomasson, of Wayne County, Illinois, praying to be granted a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Menomonee Indians, praying for the passage of an act for the equalization of bounties; the petition of soldiers in the late war, of New Jersey, praying for the passage of what is known as the equalization bounty bill; and the petition of H. C. Osterhaus, J. R. Ratcliff, Dan Hopkins, and others, praying the passage of a law to equalize the bounties of soldiers, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

UNITED STATES NOTES AS A LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Finance direct me to report back the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States Treasury notes. The committee have made a verbal amendment to the joint resolution, changing the title so as to read: "A joint resolution relating to the legal-tender quality of the United States notes," unanimously agreeing to it; and with such amendment direct me to report the joint resolution adversely. I understand there is a minority report to be presented; otherwise I should ask for the indefinite postponement of the resolution. I ask that it be laid on the table for the present, and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I present from the same committee the views of the minority, accompanied by a resolution; and as the expression of the minority is very short, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, believing the industrial, commercial, and financial prosperity of a country, in order to be enduring and secure, must be based upon a money of actual and intrinsic value, and that our Government has no power and is incompetent to endow its paper obligations with such value, and the United States Treasury notes in existence and in circulation being now redeemable in gold and silver coin at the option of the holder, do therefore recommend the withdrawal of the present compulsory legal-tender power from such Treasury notes, by the passage of the subjoined joint resolution.

T. F. BAYARD.
FRANCIS KERNAN.

Admitting the principle of the resolution as to the power of the Government to make paper legal tender, I reserve my action upon the resolution as to the time of the withdrawal of the power given heretofore.

WM. A. WALLACE.

Reserving the right of amendment.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL.

Joint resolution in relation to United States notes.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this resolution all United States notes shall be receivable for all dues to the United States, excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender; and any of said notes hereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that the views of the minority and the joint resolution be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. My intention was to have both reports placed upon the Calendar, as I understand it is proposed to have some discussion upon the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Iowa to desire the report to be laid on the table, which will give it the same parliamentary effect as to have it placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. My associates think it had better go on the Calendar regularly, and therefore I ask that that course be taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McPHERSON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1031) for the relief of Edward T. Benton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been requested to introduce a bill approving the building of the Union Railroad of the District of Columbia. I do not know anything about its provisions and do not wish to be committed to it.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1037) approving the building of the Union Railroad of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1038) to increase the pension of Edward Howard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1039) to authorize the restoration of William McGee to the rank of second lieutenant in the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRUCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1040) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1041) for the relief of the heirs of Christopher C. Brand; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1042) to release the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company from such of the conditions of the several acts of Congress approved February 9, 1853, and July 28, 1866, as unjustly affect said corporation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1043) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to certify to the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company public lands to which said company is entitled under the several acts of Congress approved February 9, 1853, and July 28, 1866; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 64) extending the provisions of the first section of an act entitled "An act fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT TO BILL.

Mr. GARLAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, George T. Rogers, Benjamin P. Gaines, and Charles Ford; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Eliza S. Conklin and Joseph Stafford, with the accompanying papers, in reference to the patent of D. S. Stafford, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Ordered, That the petition and papers of William W. Ross be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the petitions and claims of J. M. Micon, Robert Stevenson, L. T. Green, R. W. Corbin, Mrs. M. I. Donahue, N. Boydon, Masonic Hall Company of Atlanta, Georgia, E. Rouff, H. Halfire, administrator, N. C. Boynton, and E. C. Clements, respectively, be taken from the files of the Senate (there having been no adverse report in either case) to be used in the House of Representatives, where bills are now pending for the relief of said claimants.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Thomas Worthington be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of John Taylor be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ALLOTMENT OF ROOMS IN THE CAPITOL.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas a difference of opinion exists between the officers of the Senate and

House of Representatives in regard to the allotment of the rooms in the Capitol lately occupied by the Court of Claims: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate be instructed to examine into the rights of the Senate as to said rooms, to confer with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, and to report by bill or otherwise.

COMPROMISE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the bill (S. No. 796) to amend section 3469 of the Revised Statutes, relative to offers of compromise of claims in favor of the United States, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 768) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments;

A bill (H. R. No. 2508) to regulate the compensation of night inspectors of customs;

A bill (H. R. No. 2524) in relation to the importation of classical antiquities;

A bill (H. R. No. 3058) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on an altar from Rome, Italy, for the Saint John's cathedral of Indianapolis, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 3518) to authorize the importation of articles for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition, to be held at Cincinnati in 1880, free of duty;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 153) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on a stained-glass window from Munich, Germany, for All Saints' church, in Saint Michael's parish, in Talbot County, Maryland; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

THE SURPLUS-REVENUE DEPOSITS.

Mr DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that Senate bill No. 877, relative to the deposits made with certain States, which I reported from the Committee on Appropriations yesterday, be taken up.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 877) to relieve the Treasurer of the United States from the amount now charged to him and deposited with the several States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is an amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which I ask shall be read and voted on.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to be considered a very old man, but the hearing of this bill takes my memory back to a time when there was great agitation in the country over the subject of what was called the distribution of the surplus money of the United States. We were in a very different condition then from what we are now. Instead of owing more than we could pay, we had some forty millions, or nearly so, of money in the Treasury that we did not know what to do with. So a bill was introduced to distribute that money among the States. The bill was opposed vehemently upon the ground that Congress had no right to raise money by Federal taxation to be distributed to the several States; that Congress had no such constitutional power; that the raising of revenue for State purposes belonged to the States, and the raising of revenue by Congress was simply for Federal purposes. To avoid that constitutional objection to the bill its supporters changed the measure, and instead of making it an outright gift to the States, passed an act to deposit the surplus revenue with the States in proportion to their representation in Congress.

The bill thus altered, having been changed into a mere deposit bill, became a law. Some of the States refused to receive the money for a while. The old Commonwealth of Virginia refused for a good while to receive it; but at last, when all her sisters had surrendered their virtue in the premises, she gave way too, and took her share; and so in time it came to pass that every State had a large slice of this money. My own State, if I recollect aright, got some $2,000,000, and then sent it to the county commissioners, to be loaned out to the people on good bond and security and real-estate mortgages. How much it cost the State to get it back never will be found out. Whether she ever did get it all back I do not know. The thing has gone on in this way until now, when we have a bill before us that proposes in effect to release all the claim of the United States upon the several States for this money.

I suppose as a matter of course the bill will pass. Everybody nearly will be willing to relieve his own State from the indebtedness to the General Government; but when you do that you affirm the principle which was yielded when the law originally passed, and, in effect, assert the principle that the Federal Government can raise money by taxation to be given as a gratuity to the States.

Mr. President, I cannot, for one, vote for this bill. I cannot vote for it, because I do not believe that Congress has any such power. It is not a case in which the Government of the United States releases a claim against an insolvent debtor; that it might do; but it is a case in which the Government, having deposited money with States that are solvent, and that could repay it, says: "We will release you from all payment; we will make this what the framers of the original act admitted could not be constitutionally done; we will make it a gift from the Federal Government to the States." I cannot vote for the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from West Virginia. I wish to get some information in regard to the item of $2,198,427.99, which appears to have been deposited with the State of Virginia. My impression is that the State of Virginia never received the money, but that during the war, when a State government was established at Wheeling which claimed to be the restored government of Virginia, this identical money was taken from the General Government and handed over to that State government of West Virginia. My understanding is that the old State of Virginia never got it. What is the fact in regard to that deposit?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I intended to make a statement in regard to the bill; but the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Virginia have anticipated me a little. In reply to the question of my friend from Virginia I will state that I have no knowledge on that particular point. I have made no inquiry in regard to that deposit. I have always been of the opinion that the State of Virginia, many years ago, received her portion of the money; but whether she did or not I am unable to say. I called upon the Register of the Treasury for information, and the assistant register answered that the States had received their equal proportion; but as to the circumstances under which any particular State received it I am not informed. My friend may be right in supposing that the proportion allotted to Virginia was paid during the war. I know not whether that was the case or not.

Mr. President, I will give a very brief history of the $28,000,000 which was deposited with the States. In 1836, under the lead of Mr. Calhoun, I believe, certainly with the indorsement of Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay, this amount of surplus revenue was deposited with the States. At that time there was a surplus of between forty and fifty million dollars in the Treasury. The Government owed no debt, and that amount was supposed to be entirely too much to have on hand. Therefore the act required that all of the surplus, less $5,000,000, should be deposited with the States, twenty-six in number at that time. Subsequently, in 1837, I think, a year or two afterward at any rate, there was an act passed providing that Congress should make a call upon the States before the money should be collected. From that time to this day there has been no action by Congress. No call has been made upon the States, although, as all know, we have passed through two or more wars, during one of which particularly money was very badly wanted.

This amount, $28,000,000 in round numbers, stands as a charge on the books of the Treasury Department against the different States as a deposit with them, and every statement made by the Treasury Department, where the amount of cash in the Treasury is involved, must be accompanied by a note stating whether the figures include or exclude the deposit with the States. I have here a pamphlet from the office of the Treasurer. I notice that on the first page this sum of $28,000,000 appears three times; and that is about the average all through the pamphlet. Whenever the Department speaks of the cash in the Treasury, this item of $28,000,000 comes up.

There is still another consideration. It confuses the accounts to a very great extent from the fact that one officer, perhaps the Treasurer, will report the cash in the Treasury less the $28,000,000, and the Register, or the Comptroller, or the Secretary will report that there is a certain other amount of cash in the Treasury because he considers this money as there, being treated as a deposit in a bank, for which the Treasurer is accountable. Thus this item has probably been a million times handled in the Treasury Department since the deposit was made, making constant work and rendering many explanations necessary.

I presume no one believes that this money will ever be collected. I doubt very much whether it could be collected. Nobody, I presume, at this day supposes that the Government will attempt to collect from the States what it deposited with them or gave to them in 1836. It is more a question of convenience to the Treasury Department in order to prevent work and complication than anything else that caused me to introduce the bill. The bill, I will say, was considered by the committee and unanimously reported.

Mr. MAXEY. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if there is a written report accompanying it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The only report, if it may be called a report, is a letter from the Assistant Register of the Treasury, giving a statement of the facts connected with the deposit.

Mr. MAXEY. I will ask the Senator if the States which received this money on deposit have ever asked to be relieved from their indebtedness?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The deposit was made a very long time ago, and I do not know whether any State has ever asked to be relieved from its indebtedness or not. I will answer the Senator from Texas frankly, however, by saying that, so far as I know, there has been no appeal made from any State to be relieved from its indebtedness to the General Government on account of this deposit.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask, twenty-six States having received this money, and as there are now thirty-eight States in the Union, and the indebtedness belongs to the United States, what equity there is in relieving the debtors from debts which they undoubtedly justly owe, after having had the use of the money for all these long years without interest? I wish to know upon what equity the bill is based?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am very well aware that the State of Texas was not included among those with whom the deposit was made.

Mr. MAXEY. No; it was not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Therefore the question comes from the Senator with very good grace.

Mr. MAXEY. I supposed that every Senator knew that Texas was not admitted into the Union until 1845, and the deposit was made in 1836.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In answer to the question propounded, I will state that this money was collected from the very States among whom it was distributed. There was a surplus in the Treasury. The Government owed no money. This surplus belonged to the people of the States just as much as the people belong to the Government, and it was for those people to say what should be done with their own money at that time. No one will question that the twenty-six States then in the Union had a right to dispose of the surplus revenue as they thought best. They thought best to distribute it among the States rather than to let the Government become extravagant by having an overflowing Treasury and wasting it.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the legislation to which he has referred shows that the States received this money to be returned on call, so that it was not a gift but a deposit.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is true of the original act, but the Senator will observe the act of 1837 required further action upon the part of Congress before the deposit could be called.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the proposition in 1836 first was to distribute the proceeds of the public lands among the several States. I am speaking now simply from recollection, but I do not think I am mistaken. I think it was a bill introduced by Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, to distribute the proceeds of the public lands among the several States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to the Senator that Mr. Clay supported it. The bill was introduced by Mr. Calhoun.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not particular about that. It is not material which one it was. I was referring to the original proposition. To that objection was made that a large portion of the public lands of the United States had been granted to the United States upon the express trust that their proceeds were to be employed to pay the debt of the revolutionary war. It was then, in answer to that, alleged that the proceeds had been applied as far as was necessary for that purpose; but an examination showed that, counting the expense of extinguishing Indian title, of surveys and the like, no such amount had been realized from these lands as was sufficient to pay the revolutionary debt and the other objects of the trust on which the State of Virginia, and some other States perhaps, ceded their lands to the Government.

The result of that discussion was that the bill was changed, and instead of being a bill to deposit the proceeds of the public lands it took the form of a bill to deposit all the money that should be in the Treasury after a certain day in January, with the exception of a reserve of $5,000,000, with the several States according to their representation in the Congress of the United States. It was, therefore, entirely cut loose from the proceeds of the public lands, and was just simply making the States the depositaries of the United States in respect of all surplus moneys that might be in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1837. The provision was "that the money which shall be in the Treasury on the 1st day of January, 1837," should be deposited with the States. It was simply making the States a depositary of that money—all the surplus which should be in the Treasury on that day, less five millions, which were to be retained in the Treasury. And to show how completely it was a mere deposit bill, certificates were to be given by the States for the return of this money, and it was provided:

> That when said money or any part thereof shall be wanted by the said Secretary to meet appropriations by law the same shall be called for, in ratable proportions, within one year, as nearly as conveniently may be, from the different States with which the same is deposited, and shall not be called for in sums exceeding $10,000 from any one State in any one month, without previous notice of thirty days, for every additional sum of $20,000, which may at any time be required.

That gave the Secretary of the Treasury a right to call on the States to repay this money. Afterward, in October, 1837, the transfer of the fourth installment was postponed, and that was all the legislation on the subject, I think.

Mr. KERNAN. It was also provided then that the money must be called for by Congress before its return should be required.

Mr. THURMAN. That the deposit already made should remain until otherwise directed by Congress. That left it still a mere deposit with the States.

Now, Mr. President, what is it that this bill before us proposes? It proposes to utterly release, as I take it, all claims of the United States to that money. Certainly that is the object of the bill, for the amendment reported by the committee is this:

> And all laws or parts of laws authorizing a call upon the States to repay said money be, and they are hereby, repealed.

There can be no doubt, then, about the object of this bill; and there could not be any doubt about it for another reason, because it is said—

> That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to credit the account of the Treasurer of the United States with the amount of money standing to his debit upon the books of the Treasury Department, now unavailable by reason of the deposit of surplus revenue with the States, authorized by section 13 of the act of June 23, 1836, chapter 115, as hereinafter stated, the amounts—

That is the amounts that are to be thus credited—

> To be charged to an appropriation which is hereby created for the purpose.

Well, that leaves no doubt about it. This is a release by the United States of all claim to that money thus deposited with the States; and therefore I repeat it brings up the naked question, Can the Congress of the United States raise money by taxation to divide up among the States? I say not, and I cannot vote for the bill. In thus antagonizing the bill I may be supposed to be somewhat brave, as my own State of Ohio is involved to the amount of over two million dollars. I think if I was a Senator from some of the Southern States on whom direct taxes were levied, or sought to be levied, under a law that was utterly impossible of execution at the time it was passed and when the taxes were assessed, but who are now to be called on to pay those taxes into the Treasury, I should stop and hesitate a little before I gave up this claim. But I do not put it on that ground at all. I say the Constitution does not authorize us to collect money by Federal taxation to divide up among the States, and I am compelled to vote against the bill.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the committee. I ask them whether the bill without the amendment reported would perforce release the States?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It was the intention of the bill to relieve the States entirely; I will be frank with the Senator. On reflection, to make it certain we proposed the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. I thought, on hastily reading the bill as introduced, merely authorizing the Treasurer to be credited with this deposit instead of having it standing on the books as though he was chargeable with it, it would not have that effect, and I could not see any objection to allowing it to be credited on the books to the Treasurer. I admit the amendment releases the States.

Mr. ALLISON. The original bill provided for an appropriation to cover these several amounts; and the object of the amendment was to make it perfectly clear and plain that it was the intention of this bill to release the several States from liability for these sums.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add:

> And all laws or parts of laws authorizing a call upon the States to repay said money be, and they are hereby, repealed.

The question being put on the amendment, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There is a quorum present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Evidently.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Chair takes another division, I think there will be a quorum.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask if the morning hour has not expired.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say to my friend from West Virginia that I should like to take the floor upon the resolution which I introduced on Tuesday.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. At present?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly. It is usual and proper that I should give way under the circumstances. I think the Senator gave notice yesterday that he desired to speak to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over until to-morrow.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. MORGAN presented the credentials of Luke Pryor, appointed by the governor of Alabama a Senator from that State to fill, until the next meeting of the Legislature thereof, the vacancy caused by the death of George S. Houston.

The credentials were read, and the oath prescribed by the act of July 11, 1868, having been administered to Mr. PRYOR, he took his seat in the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the President of the Senate be authorized to fill the vacancies on the standing committees occasioned by the death of the late Senator Houston.

The motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the reading of the resolution introduced by me.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MORRILL on the 13th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire as to the practicability of refunding any part of the outstanding national debt at a less rate than 4 per cent. interest; and also as to whether or not more effective provisions can be made by which bona fide subscriptions for sums in moderate amounts may be made available; and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the main question about the further refunding of that portion of the public debt which soon becomes due or redeemable is to determine the rate of interest the future loan shall bear. Of course the lowest rate at which the loan will float at par is the one that should be chosen. We cannot decently offer the terms of a bankrupt: the alternative of this or nothing. The difficulty seems to be that our present four percents have risen to a small percentage above par, but not so much as to make a three-and-a-half per cent. equivalent to par. What effect a large amount of bonds suddenly thrown upon the market at lower rates of interest would have upon their current price is somewhat doubtful, but an increased supply ordinarily brings some depression in the price of all commodities, and in this case a like result could hardly be avoided.

To dispose of a national loan at less than par and thus add to the aggregate of the public debt is not to be thought of; to offer a loan on terms that our own people may refuse would hardly seem more prudent. The value of a United States loan bearing a rate of interest less than 4 per cent. would appear to be sufficiently tested by that of the 3.65 per cent. loan, amounting to $13,500,000, and running fifty years, of the District of Columbia, where the United States Government has not only guaranteed the interest but has also pledged its faith to see that a sinking-fund is provided for the gradual payment of the principal. This has been done, which should make the loan practically as good as any loan of the General Government can be, and yet it is selling to-day at much less than par, or at 87½ cents on the dollar, with five months of accrued interest, or 1¼ per cent., leaving it at 85¾ cents net. A loan at 3.50 by the main responsible party would naturally bring less than a loan at 3.65 per cent. interest. The additional obligation of the District may not add much to the value of United States securites, but it should not diminish it much.

The question remains whether it would not be wiser at this time to refund with bonds which will bring a premium, by that much reducing the public debt, and thus obtain financially all the advantage possible in a lower rate of interest? The lowest rate of interest that can be expected to hold our public securities at par, year after year, it appears to me cannot be much less than 4 per cent. All the concessions now obtainable below that rate would be secured even though a higher rate were to be nominally provided.

In offering any proposition by which the refunding of that portion of the public debt bearing 5 or 6 per cent. interest is contemplated, it is proper to inquire as to whether or not our refunding acts have operated advantageously, and whether they may not be susceptible of improvement. Under the existing laws our bonds could not be sold for less than par, but ¼ of 1 per cent. has been appropriated for expenses and for commissions. The sales and exchanges lately effected, as will appear by the monthly report of the loan division* of the Treasury Department, have amounted to $740,845,950, and the half of 1 per cent. on this sum would be $3,704,229.75; but the amount expended was only $2,591,922.26; leaving unexpended $1,112,307.49. This, I believe, is the first instance where any considerable part of the 1 per cent. or of the ¼ of 1 per cent. appropriations have been unused and saved.

The whole of the 4 per cent. loan issued since January 1, 1878, was free for everybody who chose to take it. There has been since no syndicate monopoly, but subscriptions have been received at par and accrued interest, according to the terms announced in Treasury circulars, of any amount not less than $50, from any person or party who might deposit the same in depositary national banks. These banks, under statute provisions, were required to furnish security in United States bonds equal in amount to such deposits, being invited to become the financial agents of the Government, and public notice was given that the money received for subscriptions would remain on deposit, but subject to the order of the Treasurer of the United States, to meet calls for the redemption of the 5-20 and 10-40 bonds. The commissions offered January 1, 1879, were ½ of 1 per cent. on not exceeding $1,000,000; over that, and not above ten million, ¼ of 1 per cent., and on amounts in excess of ten million an additional $\frac{1}{16}$ of 1 per cent.

These terms were soon modified by the circular of April 16, 1879, inviting subscriptions at a premium of ½ of 1 per cent. above par and accrued interest, and limiting all commissions to ¼ of 1 per cent. Uncalled 10-40 bonds were to be allowed a premium of ½ of 1 per cent. and ¼ per cent. commission. Very few of this class, however, were received.

It will be seen that no banks were especially selected, except by subscribers to the loan, to receive deposits; but when so made they were allowed to remain until required for the payment of called bonds. The Government had to make sure of funds in advance to pay for bonds called, and in that way unavoidably lost three months' interest; but the time allowed was fixed by law, and, while it might have been a little less, it was much shorter than is usually fixed by other governments. It is very questionable whether refunding could have proceeded more rapidly without encountering serious difficulties. No other so large a loan of any country has been funded or refunded in shorter time.

It turned out, from a conjunction of fortunate circumstances, that the subscribers to the 4 per cent. loan made well by it, but the banks which negotiated the largest amounts made less than $\frac{8}{10}$ of 1 per cent. profit, though the bonds are now quoted in the market at 3 to 3¾ per cent. above par, or 2½ to 3¼ per cent. advance above what was realized by the Government. This rise is recent, and for a considerable time it was doubtful whether there would be a rise or fall. There are few other stocks of any description, good or bad, that have not advanced more. Once during the past year there was a fall of the four percents to 98 per cent., or 2 per cent. below par; and but for the recovery of the market the subscribers would have met with a loss. The Rothschilds, when the bonds fell, objected to taking some five millions they had bargained for, but were required to take them after a little delay. For the risk run, the actual gain would hardly be considered by business men as too much; and some credit may fairly be due to the subscribers for their aid both in advancing and maintaining the value of the loan in the market. The amount received by France for her 5 per cent. loan in 1872 was, for each $100 only $84.50, and that now sells at 114, or, what was disposed of at 15½ per cent. below par, now brings 14 per cent. above par. Frenchmen do not revile their government for this advance in the value of their securities, known to be due to the growing solidarity of their Republic, and Americans cannot greatly regret to see the credit of our Government 2 or 3 per cent. above par, so long as no more interest is to be paid, whatever the market price may be. But the higher the premium the higher of course will be the premium that will be insisted upon in the terms of the next issue.

The methods by which Great Britain obtained loans at 3 per cent., now forming the bulk of her public debt, were the most improvident feats of statesmanship in the history of that government. Take one example out of many similar transactions that might be cited: A loan of no less than £36,000,000 ($180,000,000) was bargained for in 1815, where it was stipulated that every subscriber of £100 ($500) should be entitled to £174 ($870) of 3 per cent. stock and £10 ($50) of 4 per cent. stock. Here was an artificial capital of £84 ($420) created and to be added to a perpetual debt for every £100 ($500) advanced. There is high British authority (McCulloch) for stating that this loan, without any doubt, might have been procured by an addition of ¼ or ½ per cent. to the interest without any increase of the principal. The amount of money raised by Great Britain from 1793 to 1816 on stock issued was $2,600,550,000, (reckoning $5 to the pound;) but the stock actually issued bearing 3 per cent. interest was 33 per cent. more, or $3,881,000,000, together with frequent long annuities. There was no way left open by which this great burden could be reduced except by payment of the principal, and that then was as much out of the question as it is now. Consols are below par, but the 3 per cent. interest must continue to be paid on the whole amount issued.

That is not the American policy, which is to issue no bonds without a full equivalent at par, and to make them redeemable at the option of the Government in less time than that at which they are made absolutely payable, so that the advantage can be gained of any lower rates of interest by refunding, if lower rates should be obtainable.

Assuming the interest-bearing debt of the United States of $1,786,686,850 to be invested in 4 per cent. bonds, and that an annual payment of thirty millions shall be paid and invested as a sinking fund, with a semi-annual reinvestment of interest at 4 per cent., and the whole debt would be extinguished in less than thirty-one years. A much smaller sum would extinguish the debt in less than fifty years. Mortgages which are never to be paid are millstones on the necks of the people.

It must be borne in mind that a loan of $800,000,000, to run fifty years at 3½ per cent. interest, would be far more expensive to the country than the same loan at 4 per cent. for thirty years. That is to say, we should be required to pay fourteen hundred millions of interest on the 3½ per cent. loan, instead of nine hundred and sixty millions on the 4 per cent. loan. A long fifty-year loan is thus soon stripped of all attractions.

It may be said that a measure of this sort places great power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is true that executory power must be lodged in his hands. Somebody, to that extent, must be trusted, and it is fairly inferable from the past that the trust will be discharged with fidelity and discretion. No blunders have been charged in the past, and that is some security for the future. Secretary Chase, more largely trusted than any other Secretary before or since, was never contented to execute any financial measure without being clothed with the very largest latitude of discretion, and he did not lose the confidence of the people by its exercise.

The immense loans authorized by Congress from 1861 to 1865 placed almost unlimited power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, except that the mere amount of each loan was fixed. He had placed at his disposal coupon and registered bonds, or Treasury notes bearing simple interest or compound, but never less than 6, often 7 or 7.3 per cent., and sometimes payable, as he chose to make it, annually or semi-annually, or at maturity. The term of time to run was often left to be fixed by him, longer or shorter, ten or twenty years, thirty or forty years, and the whole were to be disposed of, at the discretion of the Secretary, on the terms deemed most advisable. He was not restricted to sales at par, and 1 per cent. was appropriated for expenses and commissions.

The justification of this extreme latitude was existing war. Our later refunding laws follow the more cautious conditions of peace and abound with limitations. The power of the Secretary is reduced to the minimum; if he cannot do any good, he has little discretion left to do harm.

The operations of refunding are all exposed to the broadest light, and leave a record at every step. The recent funding operations have been accomplished in accordance with laws previously passed by Congress. The resumption of specie payments was also in accordance with the law passed in 1875. The Secretary of the Treasury is entitled to the credit of executing these laws with skill and good temper. I am not here to praise him, but I am willing to trust him with power to repeat his work.

What have we the right to expect from the discretion of the Secretary? Why, that he shall be skillful enough to get as much for a 4 per cent. bond as it will bring in the market. He cannot lawfully dispose of them at less than par, nor at more than 4 per cent. interest, but it may be feared that he will not get as large a premium as might be had, or less than Congress might secure. If Congress could make an offer with the omnipotence to enforce its acceptance, much less than 3½ per cent. might be offered; but the Secretary must exchange, or first sell and then buy bonds. If he cannot sell new bonds, he cannot buy old ones, and the old bonds are more difficult to be obtained than gold. He has, until the bonds become due, the hard task of exchanging bonds which will bear a low rate of interest for those bearing a higher rate, and yet, if he were to part with bonds at par that would fetch a premium, he would deserve impeachment. No Secretary of the Treasury is without ambition, and the reputation of any Secretary would be lost were he to dispose of United States securities at less than their market value at the time of the transaction. One hundred millions of the four-and-a-half percents were withdrawn when it was seen that the market would sustain the four percents.

It may be argued, as there are about $200,000,000 of the bonds redeemable in 1881 now held in the Treasury as security for the national banks, that the banks, at least, would be compelled to exchange that amount on whatever terms Congress pleases to prescribe. National banks are institutions for the public benefit, but the stockholders cannot be expected to manage them at a positive loss. From time to time a considerable number have surrendered their charters or their circulation for the reason that the latter, being 90 per cent. upon the amount of bonds deposited for security, and further subject to reduction on account of the reserve required and taxes imposed, was no longer serviceable. But a 3½ per cent. bond deposited with the United States Treasurer as security for the note-holders of national banks would be a heavy reduction of the security now required. The notes of the national banks should be kept secure beyond any contingency, and if bonds of less value are substituted a greater margin must be required.

The taxes, State and United States, paid by national banks in the States of New York, Ohio, Tennessee, Illinois, Wisconsin, Kansas, and Nebraska, in 1878, were 3½ per cent. or more—considerably more in New York; and in the cities of New York, Albany, Chicago, and Milwaukee they were 5 per cent. or over. Subject to these restrictions and these heavy taxes, if based upon bonds at 3½ per cent. interest, it is not improbable that a large surrender of banking privileges would be inevitable.

There is no doubt that at last the reputation won by the United States as a debt-paying Government assures to us loanable funds on better terms than are obtainable by any other first-class political power, save that which shares with us the representation of the Anglo-Saxon race. If Great Britain has a fractional advantage in the rate of interest paid, it arises—

First. From the capital accumulated in by-gone centuries, now confined to the old and narrow field of the sea-girt islands; and,

Second. To the idea of perpetual non-payment of the principal, coupled with a prompt payment of the interest forever. The traditions of the American people are strongly opposed to the bondage of a perpetual debt, and they mean to have what we owe paid off, as it has been done in times past, within a reasonable time. If we were to consent to issue a loan redeemable a century hence, or even a half century hence, possibly slightly better terms might be secured; but not enough better to compensate for the endurance, through such a protracted period, of an inflexible load of taxation. The United States propose to stop all interest—not by repudiation, but by an honest payment of the principal.

Nearly all of the numerous governments in South America have become defaulters. Beginning by promising high rates of interest, these republics end by paying absolutely nothing. The list of these dishonored debts is deplorable; and the contagion, not yet looked after by any board of health, has reached, I regret to see, our own southern borders. The outlook is not much better in Turkey, Greece, Egypt, and Spain; and the discontent hovering around the great powers of Europe, five of which, in time of peace, maintain over two millions of men in their regular armies in addition to navies, indicate very clearly that their national debts must increase and ought to be diminished.*

No loans have recently been negotiated by any government on the European continent on better terms than we have just obtained. To reach our present standing of credit, the task has been prolonged and difficult. To maintain it, will require perpetual vigilance. Our debt in 1866 was very large, or over $2,700,000,000. More than one-fourth part of this, within thirteen years, has been paid off and has disappeared—leaving the debt, less cash in the Treasury, January 1, 1880, at only $2,011,798,504—and the interest, reduced from $143,781,591.91 in 1867, will stand at $88,877,410 in 1880; or, if some refunding measure should pass, soon at some millions less. Through good report, and through evil, a revenue has been raised equal to payment of interest and to the large diminution of the principal. We have also, by steady reductions of all expenditures, save pensions, put ourselves in light-marching order, and support an army of less than twenty-five thousand men, or but six men where Germany or France, with less population, supports over one hundred. As a people we have been blessed with much more than the average prosperity among men, and our systems of taxation have proven to be no hinderance to that prosperity. Finally, by a resumption of specie payments, we have furnished additional evidence of our unyielding purpose to extinguish the public debt by full and honest payment, and not otherwise, and above all not to leave it forever as an incubus upon the thrift of future ages.

To do this in the least oppressive way the payments must be extended over a series of years and absorb only a limited share of the annual surplus accumulations of the people. If our credit is good enough to obtain a loan at not over 4 per cent. interest, or an exchange of bonds with a low rate of interest for debts bearing a higher rate, the earliest opportunity should be seized to accomplish the object, and thus make sure of promptly diminishing the public burdens. That opportunity, it is believed, is now presented. Some millions of our debt will be absolutely due in less than one year, and, with what will be redeemable in less than eighteen months, amounts to $772,761,700, upon which we pay $41,381,298.50 interest annually; but if funded at 4 per cent. the annual charge would be only $30,910,468, and the yearly saving effected would be $10,470,830.50. That portion of debt due within one year must be paid. The remainder, it is true, is at our option, and may be paid if we provide the means, or renewed and exchanged, provided the holders accept of the terms offered. They may feel that they can do better, or that we may do worse. The parties must be in accord to insure our success. There is no pressing exigency upon the Government that excites patriotic sympathy, and, while the security is ample, men will invest elsewhere if better terms are offered. We can pay our debts, but we can not pay them with 3½ per cent. bonds, unless the party of the second part will accept them.

Great differences in the fortunes of mankind often arise from doing or not doing the right thing at the right time. If it is practicable to refund that portion of our debt which now bears a high rate of interest at 4 per cent. or less it may be hazardous to postpone it. It is not certain that so large a sum can at once be so placed; but our recent experience strongly indicates that it can be. The time is short, but a popular example having been set is contagious. If it can be done, no considerable risk should be run by delay. The increased uses for money now springing up have rarely been more multiplied nor the supplies more abundant. The abounding profits of farming for 1879 will call out an immense outlay for land and stock the coming season. Manufacturing enterprises everywhere are slowly but surely reviving. Mines and mining perhaps never attracted wider ventures. Trade and commerce are buoyant. More miles of railroad, it has been determined, will be this year constructed than in any previous year, notwithstanding railroads involving $243,000,000 of debt and capital were wrecked and foreclosed within the year past. With all the renewed activity in businesss affairs the absorption of idle capital is proceeding so rapidly that other investments with larger returns are likely to command as much or more favor than even the most popular United States securities. Against so much powerful and varied competition the Government may not be able, though it should make the attempt, to dictate the terms upon which it will continue to be a borrower.

In youthful States the supply of capital is rarely equal to the demand, and the rate of interest is always greater than in older communities, or greater in America than in Europe. The rewards of labor and the profits of trade, as well as the rapidly increasing value of real estate, justify the extreme terms offered in new settlements by borrowers, who take the risk of blanks along with numerous and tempting prizes. Virgin soils barely "tickled with the hoe" of the farmer become pregnant with fruitful crops. Capital in the valley of the Hudson River, or of the Ohio, cannot be so profitably employed as in the valley of the Columbia River, or of the Upper Missouri. Mortgages on real estate can be negotiated on cheaper terms in Connecticut than in Kansas. Rates that would ruin a Connecticut farmer lead to fortune on lower-priced but more fertile soils. When California and Australia were pouring forth an inexhaustible flood of gold the rate of interest freely paid in the respective localities was most exorbitant. It is in Amsterdam and London that money is cheapest—not at Duluth or Leadville. In Cincinnati and Baltimore even ground rents—secure, unless the bottom of the world drops out—are never less than 6 per cent. interest. If we here seem to suffer the penalty of being young, we at least may claim all of its advantages; and those who as pioneers pay dearly for money seldom fail to work it hard enough to more than compensate for its cost. In fact, a low rate of interest is not an infallible test of prosperity, but often indicates that no profitable employment for capital can be found, and that all industries are dead. Long may it be before we reach that era of decadence when capital finds no more profitable employment in Cincinnati and Chicago than at Genoa and Venice.

But suppose that in the refunding process we put the limit of interest at 3½ per cent., to be paid on bonds issued in exchange for those bearing 5 or 6 per cent., it may happen that only a small fraction, or none at all, of our outstanding securities would be offered in exchange, not because the credit of the Government is not the best, but because our people have too little hoarded wealth to allow it to slumber on such meager returns, and because they can find more remunerative employment for their savings in other comparatively safe investments. The Treasury Department, with no further legislation, or with unavailable legislation, may be in the awkward position of having no funds to meet national obligations large in amount and possibly overdue. If a 3½ per cent. loan should be offered and mainly rejected, it would then be found that a rejected suitor is not a popular favorite, and even a 4 per cent. loan might drop on a reluctant market.

The task before us of paying or refunding $791,121,700, even with the financial tide all in our favor, is one of colossal proportions, requiring great tact and diligence on the part of the Treasury Department by which, not only to achieve success, but to avoid any disturbance of foreign exchange or stringency in the supply of money in financial centers. Any considerable delay may bring a change of circumstances, a dislocation of trade or of the money market, or of danger-signals of a war in Europe, which would interrupt the whole plan. All of our present surroundings urge us to act promptly. We now have the benefit of recent funding experience, and if we have steered clear of all practical difficulties in what has been done we may feel safe on the same track and by the same legal methods of repeating operations so beneficial and so creditable to the Government.

A Government loan even at 4 per cent. is most certainly lower than any other in our whole history since the Declaration of Independence. Have our people become so suddenly holders of such large masses of wealth that we may rely upon the absorption of whatever loans and at whatever price we may throw upon the market? So late as 1873 nobody would have ventured to suggest that a loan could be floated at anything less than 4 per cent. The fall in the rate of interest was because the industries of the world had little use for money. It has been a drug. Since that time it will not be seriously maintained that capital has made any large accretions. Almost the only savings which were made for five years must be credited to that strict economy which was brought home to every family of an almost universal curtailment of expenditures. Workingmen during many seasons had not full employment. Dividends, of railroads, banks, furnaces, and manufactories, were not earned, and if not earned they are not here to be permanently absorbed in a 4 per cent. loan. The year 1879 was a year of prosperity, but the assumption that we have made such prodigious strides in the accumulation of wealth as to be able to carry our public debt at less than two-thirds of the cost we have been paying I fear is wholly unwarranted, and if it should be listened to will be regarded as fatal to all present relief from the old rates of interest we must continue to pay on a large amount of the public debt.

The production and imports of gold, the restoration of specie payments, and the expansion of national banks has no doubt added more than $200,000,000 to the money of the country, but only a very small part of this will find its way into a Government loan. Until this is absorbed stock-brokers will be jubilant. Brief adverse exchanges, however, would demolish their castles in Spain.

Upon an examination of the national loans negotiated within the last twenty years by foreign governments, few, if any, will be found bearing a less rate of interest than 4 per cent., many are higher, and they have often been issued at less than par or facilitated by large and handsome commissions. Many 5 per cent. securities now sell in open market for less than par. Those of Italy bring only 79 cents on the dollar, but they are subject to the deduction of a tax. Those of Hungary sell at 80. Austrian 4 per cent. gold rentes sell at 70; Brazilian five per cents sell at 95; Massachusetts five percents, payable 1888, bring 103; French 5 per cent. rentes, in perpetuity, their most popular security, sell at 114, which would yield to investors, at that price, over 4⅜ per cent. interest, or nearly 4½ per cent.; Canadian six percents, payable 1884, sell at 108; and none of the Canadian four percents bring par unless guaranteed by the imperial government. Russia recently offered a 5 per cent. loan at 92 cents on the dollar, but it was not taken; and a previous 5 per cent. loan brings only 79 cents on the dollar, which would yield 6¼ per cent. interest to investors.

Of course, I regard the securities of the United States as far better than any among this long list; but foreigners would not concede so much, being filled with distrust as to whether a government controlled by universal suffrage will, or will not, for any lengthy period, steadily provide the means to pay debts; and from the fact that some States of the Union have failed to do this, an argument is drawn that the whole will in time, through the ascendency of popular demagogues, be no better than any of the parts. But for my part, I shall not reply to this, as I do not desire to build up a credit in order to run in debt abroad.

It is, however, very plain, if European investors prefer their own securities, that they will yield a larger nominal return than United States 4 per cents.

Even if it were certain that the remainder of our debt could be refunded abroad at a half per cent. less than at home, as it cannot be unless we take in payment something besides gold, the policy of accepting such terms is open to serious dispute. The drain upon the resources of the country for large sums of money to be annually sent and spent out of the country is surely far greater than it would be on the same amount disbursed at home. It is the old question presented by absentee landlords, it is the grievance of Ireland, and it will scarcely be denied that large expenditures of land rent abroad will impoverish any people. It not only deprives the land of the benefit of that fertility bestowed by some modified return of its productions, but it largely contributes to adverse exchanges, and constantly drains the country of its hard cash. Very obviously there is a considerable difference in favor of holding our national debt at home, and a difference, though not mathematically computable, quite worthy of the attention of Congress. Submit the question to our own people, and I do not doubt they would almost unanimously agree that we should better consult their interests to place our debt at home at 4 per cent. rather than at a half per cent. or even 1 per cent. less abroad.

These are the main points to which I wished to draw attention, and they are submitted for whatever they may be worth.

The only reason I have to offer for bringing this subject to the attention of the Senate at this time is, that in my judgment time is of great importance. Something can be done now, and it may be that by waiting less can be done. It is possible that a loan bearing interest at a rate between 3½ and 4 per cent. interest might find favor, but it would involve risk and delay, and at last nothing less than absolute success would vindicate its merits. Others may have better reasons to give for different conclusions, and, if they should have, they will receive careful consideration, as, more than anything else, my desire is to promote such measures only as will surely best serve the great interests of our country.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN OHIO.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, recalled at his instance from the House of Representatives, has been returned.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed and by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I move now to reconsider the vote by which the words "thirty-two," in the third section of the bill, line 4, were stricken out and the word "thirty" inserted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I move now, in line 5, section 3, to strike out the word "Tuscarawas."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I now move to insert in place of the word "thirty-two" the word "twenty-nine," which is the right number.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. No. 768) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments;

A bill (H. R. No. 2508) to regulate the compensation of night inspectors of customs;

A bill (H. R. No. 2524) in relation to the importation of classical antiquities;

A bill (H. R. No. 3058) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on an altar from Rome, Italy, for the Saint John's cathedral of Indianapolis, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 3518) to authorize the importation of articles for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition, to be held at Cincinnati in 1880, free of duty; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 153) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on a stained-glass window from Munich, Germany, for All Saints' church, in Saint Michael's parish, in Talbot County, Maryland.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DELAWARE BREAKWATER.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater, which was reported this morning.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe the bill I had in charge is before the Senate; but I have no objection to its being laid aside informally so that this bill can be taken up. I make no objection to the bill of the Senator from Delaware being taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill called for by the Senator from Delaware is not at the desk. It will be here in a few moments.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope that will not be done.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asked the Senate to consider at this time the bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to cause to be removed from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater and the entrance thereto, and in the main ship-channel of the Delaware Bay and River, several vessels which were sunk in the year 1877, and now forming obstructions endangering the safety of vessels entering the harbor, after reasonable notice to the owners of such vessels to remove the same; and appropriates $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask from what committee that bill comes?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It has passed the House, and has met the approval of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. I have a plat in my hand showing the location of the obstructions, and a list of the vessels that were sunk during a storm in the harbor of the Delaware breakwater in October, 1877. There are seven or eight of those vessels in that harbor which have been built by the Government, at an expense of between two and three million dollars, endangering the entire commerce of the coast, and all foreign commerce seeking refuge in that harbor. The matter has long been neglected. I have been for two years trying to get it attended to. The House of Representatives has now passed the bill which came here yesterday, and when the Committee on Commerce took it into consideration, I believe the vote was unanimous for passing the bill without further delay.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a matter that usually comes in the bill known as the river and harbor bill. Of course there are a great many such matters that require attention.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Department has had a survey made, and ascertained the location of these obstructions, but it had no money at its command to remove them.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the bill at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think there can be any objection to it.

Mr. FERRY. I hope, if the Senator from Delaware succeeds in getting his bill through the Senate and finally passed, that he will not lose his interest in the general river and harbor bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will vote for all proper appropriations in a bill of that kind, and I will oppose all that are improper. That is my position.

Mr. FERRY. What does the Senator say?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will vote to improve all harbors in which the general commerce of the country is interested, but if you ask me to vote appropriations for every creek throughout the country I say, as I have said before, that I shall not feel at liberty to do it.

Mr. FERRY. That was not particularly the point. What I should like to know from the Senator is whether this is an indication that appropriations for rivers and harbors are to take the specific form of special bills instead of a general bill at this session.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know what it indicates. I have put this in because it is a matter in which the general commerce of the country is interested. Sometimes in that harbor during the approach of a storm two hundred sail of vessels will take refuge in the course of twelve or fourteen hours. The whole commerce of the country, the coasting trade, and also our foreign commerce are interested in the preservation of that harbor by the removal of the wrecks that are now in it. The people of my own State have but very little interest in the matter. We have comparatively but very little interest in commerce. The city of Wilmington has some, but apart from the city of Wilmington our State has very little interest. The commerce of the country, however, is deeply interested. I went to the Department myself a year ago and obtained a plat of the harbor with the location of these wrecks, and I know that the Department, if they had had the means at command and felt at liberty, would have done the work. They told me they had not the money; and they also felt some hesitation for fear a claim might be made by insurers. That is obviated by this bill by requiring reasonable notice to be given to the owners to remove the wrecks that have been there now for over two years. I do not think there can be any possible objection to this bill.

Mr. FERRY. My suggestion was not in the nature of an objection to this bill; but it was only to note the special character of it, and to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there are other places of general interest to the country, and I was fearful that when the general bill came up the Senator from Delaware, having secured this bill with my help and that of others—I am disposed to support the bill—might lose sight of the general interest, and lose all interest in the passage of the general bill. I have accomplished all that I intended by calling the attention of the Senator to the subject.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I say to the Senator from Michigan that if he makes a proper bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, in which the general commerce of the country is involved, I will aid him, but I shall not pledge myself to support any bill in order to pass this. I shall support such bills as in my judgment are right, and I shall oppose such as in my judgment are wrong.

Mr. FERRY. I do not suppose the Senator from Delaware, any more than myself, would support a bill that was not right in his judgment, but passing special bills for special places is a new feature in legislation upon appropriations for rivers and harbors. I might cite cases of general interest on the inland lakes that are of nearly as much general importance as this case which the Senator presents from Delaware. I might also allude to the fact that property largely has been destroyed the last season at points that I might mention. My purpose was simply to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of my friend from Delaware, to the passage of this bill, and to emphasize the point, in order that when the general bill comes before the Senate I may have at least the co-operation of my friend from Delaware to help the inland lakes upon the principle of general interest, as well as the sea-coast.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

LAND DISTRICT IN DAKOTA.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1307, which will occupy but a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1307) to establish a land district in the Territory of Dakota, and locating the office at Grand Forks.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 15, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ELIZABETH PULLING.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3527) granting a pension to Elizabeth Pulling, of Big Rapids,

Mecosta County, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LIGHT-HOUSE, MANISTIQUE, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R No. 3528) to appropriate money for the construction of a light-house at Manistique, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

STEPHEN W. THOMPSON.

Mr. HUBBELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3529) granting a pension to Stephen W. Thompson, of Freeman, Lake County, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PURCHASE OF LAND, PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

On motion of Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, by unanimous consent, an act (S. No. 820) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to correct the RECORD. The RECORD of yesterday states that on the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to give some undue advantages to the female suffragists of the country Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, objected. Now, whether Mr. DAVIS or myself has the more reason to complain of this case of mistaken identity I cannot indicate. If there are any glories in the achievement I want them all, and if there are any responsibilities I take them all. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. STEELE] is the one who made objection. The Chair recollects that distinctly.

Mr. STEELE. There is no doubt about it.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made accordingly.

LOCATION OF MINERAL CLAIMS.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 2418) concerning the location of mineral claims, and the same was recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

WORTHINGTON AND SIOUX FALLS RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. WASHBURN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3530) to authorize the Worthington and Sioux Falls Railroad Company to extend its road from the village of Sioux Falls, in the Territory of Dakota, in a westerly direction, to the east bank of the Missouri River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. JOHN B. HALE AND OTHERS.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3531) for the relief of the widow of John B. Hale, Spencer D. Gray, Lemuel Griggs, Malachi J. Brumsy, J. Munden, Lewis White, and George W. Wilson; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

THOMAS G. CORBIN.

Mr. HARMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3532) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

TELEPHONE IN HOUSE LOBBY.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an expert laborer to take charge of the telephone which this House has directed to be placed in the lobby for the use of the members and committees, and that said laborer be paid out of the contingent fund until the regular appropriations are made.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask for the adoption of the resolution at this time, as there can be no objection to it. The House has already directed the erection of the telephone in the House lobby.

Mr. BUCKNER. I shall object unless the resolution goes to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. DUNNELL. I thought this telephone was to be erected and run without expense to the House.

Mr. ACKLEN. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

SILAS K. HAINES.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced bill (H. R. No. 3533) granting a pension to Silas K. Haines, of Preston County, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EXPEDITION TO ARCTIC SEAS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 1823, a bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, recommitted, and ordered to be printed.

UTE OUTBREAK.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to this House at an early day a copy of the testimony taken by Generals Hatch and Adams, special agents of that Department, touching the late outbreak of the Ute Indians in the State of Colorado.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGATION.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3535) to protect and promote the navigability of the navigable rivers of the United States, and to prevent the deposit of sawdust or other material in said rivers to the injury of navigation, and to punish persons guilty of depositing such material therein; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MEMPHIS AND LITTLE ROCK RAILROAD.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3536) to release the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company from such of the conditions of the several acts of Congress approved February 9, 1853, and July 28, 1866, as unjustly affect such corporation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LAND GRANT RAILROAD.

Mr. DUNN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3537) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to certify to the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company public lands to which said company is entitled under the several acts of Congress approved February 9, 1853, and July 28, 1866; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

BERLIN FISH EXHIBITION.

Mr. DEUSTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) concerning the international fish exhibition to be held in Berlin, Germany; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MEYER NEWMARK.

Mr. NICHOLLS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3538) for the relief of Meyer Newmark, and to reimburse him for hospital supplies furnished to the troops of General Sherman's army while in the occupation of Savannah, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

SITE FOR UNITED STATES NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, submitted a report, to accompany House bill No. 674, relating to a new site for the United States Naval Observatory; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

DEPOSITORS IN FREEDMAN'S BANK.

Mr. O'CONNOR, by unanimous consent, submitted resolutions adopted at a meeting of the colored people held in the city of Macon, in the State of Georgia, memorializing Congress to pass the bill to return to the freedmen of the South their savings deposited with the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

WILLIAM H. DODGE.

Mr. BRENTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3539) for the relief of William H. Dodge; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EDWARD HOWARD.

Mr. HOUK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3540) for the relief of Edward Howard, and to correct his pension certificate; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HEIRS OF ASBURY DICKINS.

Mr. HAWLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3541) for the relief of the heirs of Asbury Dickins; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

BINDING BILLS, ETC., IN DOCUMENT-ROOM.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the resolution which I send to the desk, for reference to the Committee of Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, instructed to arrange as many sets of bills and resolutions of the Senate and House of Representatives as the files in the document-room will furnish, providing that not exceeding ten sets shall be arranged for any session; and when so arranged the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to bind the same. Two sets shall be deposited in the document-room, and the balance in the library of the House of Representatives; but no person shall be allowed to take them therefrom. After executing this order, the Doorkeeper is authorized to dispose of, as waste paper, all surplus bills and resolutions prior to the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suggest that that resolution should go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STEPHENS. I desire to have it referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BRENTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3542) to confirm certain entries of the public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGER TO OFFICIAL REPORTERS OF DEBATES.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution providing for the payment of a messenger to the official reporters of debates; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

PUBLIC LAND COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the president of the public land commission, asking an appropriation of $20,000 to complete the work of said commission; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting the draught of a bill to increase the efficiency of the marine hospital service; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLARKSBURGH, WEST VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from Hon. Henry M. Matthew, governor, Hon. J. J. Jackson, judge of the United States district court, and other citizens of West Virginia, urging an appropriation for the erection of a public building at Clarksburgh, in said State.

Mr. WILSON. I move that that communication be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL-BANK RESERVES.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at thirty-one minutes past twelve o'clock; and the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2715) requiring the reserves of the national banks to be kept in gold and silver coins of the United States, reported by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and which, by unanimous consent, comes over from the morning hour of yesterday.

Mr. PRICE. This bill now under consideration, and to which much opposition appeared to manifest itself when it was last up, makes no change in the law as to the amount of reserves required to be kept by national banks. But it does provide that one-half of the reserves now required to be kept shall be kept in gold or silver coins of the United States. That is the first section of the bill. The second section of the bill is the law as it stands to-day, and as it has stood since 1864.

I suppose that if any objection could come to this bill at all it would come from gentlemen who are interested in the national banks, but if it accomplishes anything it accomplishes this thing, that it distributes the gold and silver coins of the Government of the country among the two thousand and odd national banks now spread all over this country. I am not aware, sir, that this is either approved or disapproved by the national banks. I have heard nothing from them on the subject. I do know, however, that since 1872 the national banks of this country have been doing a very good thing for the currency of the country, in this, that they have increased the coin of the reserve fund more than threefold.

In 1872, when the reserve required to be kept by law was $141,000,000—I give the round numbers without giving fractions—the one-half of it to be kept in coin if this bill had been a law would have been $70,500,000. They held at that time $10,200,000 only. That is eight years ago; if this bill had been a law then the national banks would have been short of coin $60,300,000.

In October of this year the amount of reserve required by law to be held by the banks under the present law was $159,000,000. One-half of that in coin would have been seventy-nine and a half millions. The national banks held on the 2d day of last October $42,000,000 of coin, having increased their coin reserve in eight years from $10,000,000 to $42,000,000, and that without any law requiring or compelling them so to do, showing a gain in the reserve fund of coin voluntarily made by the national banks of $22,800,000. I have given these figures, Mr. Speaker, in round numbers, leaving the fractions off, and I am not giving them without having the authority before me for doing so. I have a statement from the Comptroller of the Currency, dated the 6th of December, which gives me the amount of reserve required by law to be held by the national banks, and which gives the amount of reserve they do hold in coin and currency; so that I speak from the record when I make this statement.

Now, with this state of facts before this House and the country, the only question to be settled by us in the discussion of this bill and in the disposal of it is this: will it advance the confidence of the people in the national-banking system and will it add to the security and permanency of the institution by requiring this amount to be kept in coin, or will the country be just as well satisfied to let the banks pursue their own course in the future as they have done in the past, relying upon their business capacity and integrity for the kind of funds they shall keep as a reserve? That is the only question to be settled by this bill, whether it be voted up or voted down. I presume it is well known that I am not in favor of any change of law either as to the quantity or quality of paper we are using in this country as a circulating medium.

Mr. Speaker, on the second day of the present session I had the honor to present to this House the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas eleven months of trial has demonstrated conclusively that the resumption of specie payments, entered upon on the 1st day of January, 1879, has been a success equal to the hopes of the most sanguine friends of that measure; and

Whereas it has been equally well and fully established during the same period that, as a nation, we have the ability to keep in circulation at par with coin $350,000,000 of United States notes, commonly called greenbacks; and

Whereas, under the operation of these in connection with the coinage of the silver dollar, the financial and commercial interests of the country in the last eleven months have attained a degree of prosperity unequaled in any similar period in the last twenty years; and

Whereas any agitation of the financial question at this time would have a tendency to unsettle public confidence and produce unrest and distrust in the business affairs of the country: Therefore,

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, sound policy demands and safe legislation requires that no change be made at this session of Congress in reference to any of the measures referred to; but that, in view of the present prosperous condition of the country financially, we should "let well enough alone."

I offered this, Mr. Speaker, because I believed then, and believe now, that any agitation of this question at this time could not by possibility result in any good to the nation, and that the chances were largely in favor of doing much harm, and because I believed it to be very important that the country should be assured at the commencement of the session that there would be no tinkering with the currency. Every person who has given any thought to this subject, or has observed the working of our financial system, or I might say systems, for we have had many, cannot have failed to see that frequent changes, or even threatened changes in our financial policy causes unrest, uncertainty, and want of confidence, which have a tendency to check investments and to cause capital to be locked up, thus lessening the demand for labor, consequently checking production and producing stagnation to a greater or less extent in all branches of business. About these facts there can be no honest controversy. We have passed through this experience too often for any one to dispute them.

But we are told that the United States notes are a debt, and ought to be paid. I answer by admitting that they are a debt, and by asserting without fear of successful contradiction that any person holding them can and will be paid on demand. If the holder will not demand payment, that is no fault of the Government. If an individual holds my check or my due-bill, bearing no interest, and refuses to allow me to redeem it in coin, I am certainly not to blame. This is the position of the Government to-day. She says to every holder of one of her due-bills, come and take your pay in gold or silver, the constitutional money of the country and of the world, and the holders of the due-bills say "No; we prefer to hold these due-bills because you (the Government) have demonstrated your ability and willingness to pay them, and as long as that condition of things exists we prefer to hold the due-bills, because they are more convenient." This feature of the question being disposed of, the objectors say, "Well, let these United States notes remain then, but take away their legal-tender quality," and we are assured, with every show of earnestness and honesty, that these notes will be just as good without that quality as with it. Now, if these notes are to be just as good as to quantity and quality after the legal-tender feature is destroyed, can any one tell what has been gained? No one claims that taking away the legal-tender feature will make them any better, but thousands of people think they know that it would make them very much worse. If it be the intention to keep them in circulation after they are deprived of their legal-tender power, every person knows that they cannot by possibility be any better, and the chances are largely in favor of their being much worse. But if it be the intention to retire them, then why not have the courage to say so, and let the people know that Wall street and Beacon street have triumphed? If the legal-tender United States greenback, the child of the republican party, is to be buried, allow it at least a Christian funeral with all its well-earned honors. If it did not command our armies and carry the flag to victory, it fed and clothed those who did. It furnished the sinews of war, and held high office during the conflict for the life of the nation, and now, when victory perches upon our banners and white-winged peace spreads her pinions over the nation, prosperous financially beyond any period of our history, let us do no act and speak no word calculated to degrade to the ranks one who has held such high and honorable position.

Born of affliction and struggling for life and growth and development against a host of enemies who ought to have been its friends, it fought its way onward and upward until it gained its majority and was counted of full age at seventeen years. Entering the contest in its youth it took its seat low down on the thirty-fourth step from the bottom of the stairway, where it took one hundred steps to reach the platform upon which were seated its elder brothers of gold and silver; it worked its way steadily upward a step at a time, until to-day it stands side by side on the platform, confessedly the equal of either. I am the last man, sir, to advocate the issuing or circulating of paper that cannot be converted at the will of the holder into gold or silver, the constitutional money of the world, but no commercial nation ever did or ever can exist without a paper circulation, and now, having paper that we have demonstrated beyond a doubt is interchangeable with and convertible into coin, at par, wisdom speaks in thunder tones to us, saying "let well enough alone." It has been well said by another (and I adopt the language) that—

We are just emerging from a period of panics, popular alarms, and demagogic agitation in regard to the money question. The popular pulse is not entirely regular yet. There is a considerable amount of smoldering popular heresy which needs only to be fanned by opposition that it may again flame up into a blaze. There is a time for all things, and assuredly this is not the time for radical and stringent financial changes. Further than this there is no call for the change.

The question of how much paper promises (for there is no paper money, and under our Constitution never can be) a nation can safely carry is one about which many fair-minded men honestly differ. Before 1860 we never had over $215,000,000 of paper in circulation, and not one dollar of it was ever at par with coin in all parts of the United States. By the force of circumstances we were compelled to issue paper to be used in place of money, more than three times as much as we had ever had in circulation before; and that this paper might have credit, and that those who took it in payment for labor, material, or property of any kind might not be the losers, the Government said it should be a legal tender in the payment of debts, and pledged the faith of the Government to make it as good as gold or silver. That pledge was honestly made, but many good men had grave fears as to the ability of the Government to redeem the pledge thus made. Some men of all parties said it could not be done, and almost all the men of one political party said it could not and would not be done, and the republican party was arraigned in unmeasured terms for involving the nation in such a gigantic financial blunder.

But, Mr. Speaker, in all the days of all the years since the first United States note, commonly called greenback, was issued the republican party has labored in season and out of season to make good that promise, and when the sun rose on the morning of the 1st day of January, 1879, it saw the pledge redeemed and the promise fulfilled. Doubt had given place to certainty, the theory had crystallized into a fact, and to-day we have $600,000,000 of paper at par with coin on every foot of American soil over which the flag floats, a state of affairs which had never occurred since the birth of this nation, in view of all which, prudent men say, "Let well enough alone."

And now, in this connection, I wish to call the attention of the House and the country to another fact not generally understood.

The published reports of the officers of the Government tell us that we have $699,598,087 of paper currency in this country, which amount is made up of $346,742,366 of United States notes, $15,674,303 of fractional currency, and $337,181,418 of national-bank notes. I am not here to call in question the correctness of these reports as taken from the books. The books show that so much of the different descriptions of paper has been issued and so much retired, leaving the balance as the reports show. This is the only way that an officer can make his report. But while this is true, it is equally true that these reports do not show the facts. I am here to-day to assert most positively that there is no such amount of paper currency in existence in this country.

These reports show between fifteen and sixteen millions of fractional currency outstanding as a part of the paper currency of the country. For about four years the Government has been engaged in retiring and destroying this currency. From 1875 to 1876 eight millions were redeemed and canceled; from 1876 to 1877 fourteen millions; from 1877 to 1878 four millions, and from 1878 to 1879 less than three-quarters of one million. Why this falling off from fourteen millions from 1876 to 1877 to less than three-quarters of a million for the year ending June 30, 1879? There is but one answer to this question, and that is, that there was almost none of it in existence to be redeemed. But if we allow that there is still in circulation one million and a half of this fractional currency, which in my judgment is more than the fact justifies, still we have a balance of fourteen millions standing on the books and exhibited in the official reports as being part of our circulating medium, when in reality there is not one dollar of it in existence. Why, sir, about two millions of this fractional currency which we are counting as the money of the country is three and five cent notes, not one cent of which has been issued since 1866. Does any one pretend to say that there are $1,000 of these outside of the tomb of the Capulets? This same rate of loss on the United States notes and national-bank notes, all of which is a gain to the Government and a reduction of the paper currency, would amount to hundreds of millions; but this would not be a fair statement of the case, for notes of large denomination are more carefully guarded and the loss consequently less. But if the loss is one-fifth as much as on the fractional currency it would amount to about forty-three millions of dollars.

To this must be added whatever of loss there has been on the old demand notes, and the one and two years notes of 1863, about $150,000 of which are shown by the books to be still outstanding, and to all these must be added nearly $300,000 which have been deducted from new notes issued in place of old notes which were mutilated, making in all something over $57,000,000 less paper circulating as money in the country than the official statements show, and this is going on regularly and steadily every day of every week. This, sir, is a gradual retirement of the United States notes by natural causes and natural laws—so gradual, so imperceptible as to cause no shock to business, no cause of alarm, because the increase of the precious metals from foreign countries and from the products of our own mines is more than supplying the place of the paper thus deducted from its volume.

Mr. Speaker, among all the foolish and senseless things said in reference to the retirement of the United States notes, or depriving them of their legal-tender quality, the most foolish and the most senseless is the assertion made by some that the movement is made at the instance and in the interest of the national banks. Why, sir, the national banks could by possibility gain nothing by degrading or destroying the United States notes. Banking is free; it is not as it once was, a monopoly; anybody and everybody can be a banker under the national-bank act, provided they have any money to bank on. It has happened sometimes in the years of the past that men could bank under State laws without money, but as a rule somebody had to suffer; but under the national-bank act a bank cannot be started without money, and if a national bank breaks the notes of that bank are as good after as before the bank failed—a condition of affairs that never existed under any other system of banking in this country. Under this system the bill-holder is always safe.

The national banks have to-day over $330,000,000 of circulation scattered all over the States of this Union, and at par everywhere without any reference to the location of the bank whose name it bears. These notes of the national banks are all redeemable in United States legal-tender notes, and as a consequence are seldom or never presented for redemption, because ordinarily the one answers the purposes of trade and commerce as well as the other; but if the United States notes are either degraded or destroyed, then national-bank notes must be redeemed in coin, or not redeemed at all. Prudent bankers, in this condition of affairs, will take in sail; in other words, will call in their circulation. This causes contraction of an unhealthy character; and contraction of this kind in the past has produced stagnation in business, with all its attendant results; and so long as the same causes produce the same effects the future will be as the past. Bankers would be compelled, in order to insure safety to themselves, to furnish less accommodation to customers, and all branches of business would necessarily be curtailed in the same proportion. National banks most certainly have nothing to gain by making any change in the present status of the United States legal-tender notes, and therefore all national banks, unless it be some in New York, and possibly in some other of the large cities where the silver dollar has been tabooed, will unite in saying "let well enough alone."

I have said, Mr. Speaker, in the preamble which I offered, that the coinage of the silver dollar should be considered as a factor in estimating the present prosperous condition of the country. This silver dollar seems to trouble a great many of our would-be financiers. When the bill for its resurrection (for it had been dead and buried by its enemies for several years) was under consideration in this House many persons of all parties prophesied that if it became a law the premium on gold would be largely increased. The funding of the national debt in 4 per cent. bonds would cease, and resumption of specie payments would be very much embarrassed, and possibly entirely defeated. These were the arguments made and the reasons given why the bill should not become a law. I did not then, and I do not now, call in question the good motives or honest intentions of the men who took this ground. We who favored the passage of the bill contended that these things would not only not happen, but that the very reverse in every instance would be the result. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have passed the point where mere opinion, speculation, and theory were our guiding stars. We no longer grope in darkness, or even the twilight of uncertainty. The silver bill became a law. The silver dollars, that were said to contain more enemies than the Trojan horse, have been admitted within the gates of commerce, and yet no armed enemies have made their appearance to destroy the commerce of the country. On the contrary, all the business interests of the country are in a more flourishing condition since than before the passage of that law. The premium on gold instead of going up has gone down out of sight. The funding of the national debt in 4 per cent. bonds has been carried forward more rapidly and on better terms for the Government than ever before, and such is the credit of the Government since the silver dollar became a part of the circulating medium that there is serious talk of putting a 3½ per cent. bond on the market, and resumption that was to be so much embarrassed by the coinage of the silver dollar is an assured fact to-day beyond cavil or controversy. In short, sir, every prediction made by those who opposed the coinage of the silver dollar has been proven by the logic of events to be utterly without foundation. What they were pleased to call solid arguments have proven to be as "unsubstantial as the baseless fabric of a vision."

And yet, sir, notwithstanding all this formidable array of facts against them, the enemies of the silver dollar continue to carp about the short dollar, the light dollar, the clipped dollar, and the snide dollar. Some of these men now say, in order to cover their retreat and maintain a show of consistency, that if we will put enough silver in it to make what they are pleased to call an honest dollar they have no objection to the silver dollar. Well, suppose we undertake to find out just how many grains of silver at the bullion value is equal to the coined gold dollar, and suppose we succeed with the price of bullion to-day. To-morrow bullion goes up or down in price; then we must change again; and so on from week to week and month to month, until we should have as many kinds of dollars as there are months in the year. But we are told that unless we put more silver in the dollar it will be the cheaper dollar, and will drive out the gold, and we will be left with an exclusive silver coin, and other nations will have all the gold. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is mere theory, mere assertion, without one solitary fact to sustain it. But, on the contrary, all the facts of history and all the experience of nations are on the other side. I assert, and challenge contradiction, that our dollar has more silver in it, as compared with the gold dollar, than the dollar of any other nation on the globe, unless we count Mexico and Spain. We give 16 of silver to 1 of gold, and other nations do not.

France gives 15½ of silver to one of gold, which, of course, makes their silver dollar a cheaper dollar than ours, and yet with 15½ of silver to 1 of gold it has not driven the gold out of France, for I find from the last report of the Director of our Mint that France has $425,844,850 in silver, nearly all of which is an unlimited tender, and has also $733,400,000 of gold, and in the last few years the gold of France, as I find on examination of carefully prepared statistical tables, instead of being driven out by the cheap silver dollar, has been increasing. Now, sir, if this proves anything, it proves that instead of having too little we have too much silver in our dollar; and if these gentlemen who are clamoring for increasing the weight or stopping the coinage of the silver dollar will look at the volume of coin in our own country, they will find that we have more gold to-day than we had the day we commenced to coin the silver dollar.

As an evidence that gold has been increasing every hour since we commenced to coin the silver dollar, and to prove also that there is no surplus of paper with which to carry on the business of the country, I submit a carefully prepared statement taken from a recent publication on this subject, which says:

> The supply of United States notes in the Treasury is running very low. Only $29,973,454 are reported on hand December 1, and of this amount there ought to be in the fund for retirement of notes of national banks, $12,948,084, and in the fund for the redemption of bank-notes, $15,757,835; total, $28,705,919. Those who insist that the volume of United States notes should be immediately contracted ought to explain how it is that the balances in the Treasury and in the banks are so very low, while gold accumulates steadily in both stores, if there is no legitimate and permanent demand for as large a volume of notes in preference to coin as we now have in use. It seems to us, we must confess, that the people of this country have a right to ask that they shall be permitted to use good notes, redeemable on demand, in preference to the coin on deposit in the Treasury, if they find those notes convenient and really useful in their business.
> On the day of resumption the Treasury held over $69,582,505 in United States notes, and it has paid out nearly $40,000,000 of them during eleven months. This sum has not gone into any of the banks of which we have returns. The following shows the amounts of legal-tenders and of gold held by the Treasury and the banks of this city, Boston, and Philadelphia, except that a part of the "legal tender" now reported by the Philadelphia banks consist of gold; the specie not being separately reported, since January 1, by those banks:

	Legal-tenders.		Gold coin and bullion.
	Jan. 1.	Dec. 1.	Jan. 1.	Dec. 1.
United States Treasury	$69, 582, 505	$29, 973, 454	$135, 382, 639	$160, 443, 437
New York	41, 832, 600	16, 771, 700	20, 986, 200	52, 310, 700
Philadelphia	15, 873, 233	14, 958, 053	1, 057, 515	.....
Boston	6, 126, 800	3, 546, 700	3, 851, 900	3, 347, 200
Total	133, 415, 138	65, 249, 907	161, 278, 254	216, 101, 337

> Legal-tenders amounting to more than $68,165,231—for part of the amount now reported for Philadelphia consists of gold—have disappeared from these reserves since January 1. Where have they gone? Not to other banks, apparently, for the demand for notes in the interior continues very urgent. Gold amounting to more than $77,000,000 has come in from abroad, and only about $54,823,083 has been added to the stores here named, so that it is probable that a considerable sum has gone into circulation. But notwithstanding this, and notwithstanding an increase of $16,295,804 in the national-bank circulation since January 1, and a decrease of $5,446,310 in the amount of bank-notes held by the Treasury, the enormous amount of $68,000,000 in legal-tenders has been in some way absorbed in the circulation. Would it not be proper to explain these facts before meddling with the currency?

In adopting this statement of figures I am not to be understood as advocating any increase of the volume of United States notes, or of any other kind of paper not interchangeable with and convertible into coin at the will of the holder. My object is simply to prove that there is no danger to be apprehended from what we have, and that the history of the last eleven months demonstrates the fact beyond doubt or controversy that while we have been adding $2,000,000 of silver dollars to our circulating medium per month, gold instead of being driven from has been driven to us, at the rate of about $7,000,000 per month, and therefore I indorse the statement that it would be proper to explain "these facts before meddling with the currency."

If the political and financial life of this Government continues until it is terminated by a surfeit of silver dollars, it will be the oldest and most prosperous nation recorded in the annals of time. Why, sir, do gentlemen who oppose the coinage of the silver dollar under safe and wholesome restrictions know whereof they affirm when they ask for legislation unfriendly to it? Have they coolly and without prejudice tested their statements by the figures? I imagine they have not, because the figures if fairly treated would show them their mistake.

From the best and most carefully collected information on the subject, the silver production of the world is less than $100,000,000 annually. Of this amount, we are informed by the Director of our own Mint, after careful investigation, that India and China have taken on an average for the last twenty-five years $47,000,000 annually, and that $28,060,000 in gold and silver are annually consumed in the manufactures and for ornamentation. If one-half of this last amount, $14,000,000, is of silver, we have a total of $61,000,000, or more than six-tenths of the whole silver product of the world that does not enter into the money circulation of the civilized countries of the world combined. France, as I have already shown, has $425,844,850 of silver at par with gold. This is about $12 per capita of her population. The same rate or proportion would give us about $600,000,000 of silver. If therefore we continue to coin $2,000,000 per month, it would require about eighteen years to give us as much silver per capita as France has. And, sir, who can tell what the population of these United States will be in eighteen years? And who is prepared to say that we cannot use as much silver in the industries and commerce of our country as France can? We have a greater diversity of soil, climate, and productions than she has. The energy, enterprise, and industry of our people are certainly not inferior to theirs. Taking all these facts and figures into the account, it is certainly very safe to say that for many years to come we are in no danger from an oversupply of silver.

Before passing from this branch of the subject allow me to say that we have not only much less silver per capita than France, but we have also very much less silver as compared with gold. Of the coin of France about 60 per cent. is gold and 40 per cent. silver. Of the coin of the United States about 74 per cent. is gold and 26 per cent. silver.

During the discussion on the silver bill, and ever since, the enemies of the silver dollar have pointed with seeming triumph to the action of Germany and England in reference to silver, and have sought to give an importance and prominence to the action of these governments to which they never were entitled.

Sometimes Germany demonetizes gold and makes her money of account out of silver, and sometimes she demonetizes silver and favors gold as the better money. This I presume she has a perfect right to do, but I fail to see why our Government should follow her vascillating bourse on the money question. In the summer of 1878 we sent commissioners to Paris, to meet commissioners from the principal European nations, to fix upon some standard which should govern the value of gold and silver coin as between those nations, but that commission failed to accomplish anything mainly because Germany and England had not then learned that there was any wisdom on financial questions on the sundown side of the Atlantic. They had doubtless heard that somebody had said that "Westward the course of empire takes its way" but they did not believe it, and treated it merely as an outburst of poetic fancy. But we have brought the bread and meat question to bear upon them to such an extent that they find their gold leaving them and taking up its abode on this side of the ocean, in the land of silver and silver dollars, and now we hear the late governor of the Bank of England, who was one of the representatives of the English government at the conference in Paris, and who was at that time a violent monometallist, saying, "I am gone over to bimetallism and am going to attack the solid ramparts of monometallism." This is an indication of the change that has taken place and is progressing among the financiers of England. This same man has since written a pamphlet in which he acknowledges that the views held by him at the conference at Paris have undergone an entire change.

Germany, that demonetized silver only a few years since, and who it was said would, by throwing her hundreds of millions of silver upon the market, drive all the commercial nations of the world to a single gold standard, is beginning to see her folly and has suspended the further sale of silver, and the fact is beginning to dawn on some of her statesmen that they committed an egregious blunder when they demonetized silver. The Imperial Bank of Germany held on the 15th of November, 1879, $81,250,000 of silver, and I find, from an article taken from the board of trade returns from London, that England imported in the month of October last $2,818,645 of silver. So that it is pretty evident that England and Germany, the two leading nations favoring the single gold standard, are taking the back track in good earnest and at a rapid pace.

Mr. Speaker, experience is said to be a dear school, but that a certain class of people will learn in no other. Germany has taken some lessons in that school recently which, according to the testimony of her own officers, have cost her, since she demonetized silver and has been endeavoring to establish a single gold standard, about $18,000,000. In contrast with this our Government has made, by remonetizing silver and coining it, a clear profit, in the year ending June 30, 1879, of $2,983,682.05, which is just about the rate per annum that Germany has lost. Or, to state the matter more plainly, Germany demonetizes silver and loses about $3,000,000 annually; the United States restores silver to the coinage and uses it as money and makes a clear profit of about the same amount per annum. Twenty years of this sort of business would make us $60,000,000 richer and Germany $60,000,000 poorer, and yet the anti-silver men are not happy.

I am here to-day to assert with a confidence that admits of no shadow of doubt, that in no country and in no age of the world has there been so great a change and such rapid strides in the direction of permanent prosperity as has taken place in our own country since we commenced to coin the silver dollar and to resume specie payments.

Gentlemen may, if they please, attribute this to other causes than those to which I have referred, but the fact that coinage resumption and prosperity go hand in hand, that they are coexistent and coextensive, cannot and will not be denied. This fact being admitted, be the causes what they may, the streams of prosperity sing and the breezes of increased and increasing hope and confidence whisper in all the departments of business and in all the marts of commerce "let well enough alone." It is only a few years, Mr. Speaker, since the land was covered with an army of tramps. They were as numerous and as destructive as the locusts of ancient Egypt. Legislative bodies of the different States spent hours in solemn council to devise ways and means to abate the nuisance; and not long since my venerable friend from the twelfth Pennsylvania district crossed the continent with a chosen band to discover, if possible, the cause and the cure for this affliction. But, sir, where are all the tramps to-day? You find no mention of them. They have not silently folded their tents and stolen away to some more favored clime; no, sir, they are in the workshops or the pork-packing establishments of the country, or constructing new railroads, or in the factories, or in the iron mines, or in the hundreds of other places of industry, making good wages, and testifying to the good times which we now have, and they all say "let well enough alone."

Yesterday our iron furnaces all over the land were idle. Their blackened walls spoke of bankruptcy and ruin. The men whose business it was to operate them saw their families suffering for food and clothing. To-day these same furnaces are all aglow with life and activity. The fires, long since extinguished, have been rekindled; the operatives are working full time at good wages, and are unable to supply the demand for their products. Distress and desolation have had to flee before the onward march and resistless force of prosperity. Ships that lay rotting at our wharves have weighed their anchors, and the sails of commerce have again spread their white wings on lake and ocean. Where a short time ago silence reigned supreme, and distress and desolation seemed to hold sway, is now heard the busy hum of industry. Cheerfulness and hope have taken the place of gloom and despondency, and from all these different avocations and interests the cry comes up, "Let well enough alone."

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. BRIGHT. Before the gentleman proceeds, I desire to inquire of the Chair whether he takes the floor in his own right or under the control of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, [Mr. BUCKNER?]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. MILLS.) The Chair holds that the gentleman takes the floor in his own right.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to consume but a few minutes of the time of this House, to remove what I consider to be some grave misapprehensions concerning the true merits of this bill. The only change it proposes to make in the existing law is to require the national banks to make one-half of their reserves of specie, of coin. As the law now exists, if it should be to the interest of the national banks and against the interests of the people, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] urged yesterday, to have their reserves entirely in specie, the law now permits it. All that the present law requires is that the banks shall have lawful money for their reserves. Gold coin and the standard silver dollar are lawful money. As the law now is it is within the power of the national banks to have every dollar of their reserves in specie, if they so choose.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Right here will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Not now. You certainly do not deny that that is the law; if you do, you will have an opportunity to make your statement.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am afraid I will not have the opportunity.

Mr. LEWIS. Now if that is not a correct view of the law, and if the term "lawful money" does not include gold and silver coin, (and I do not think any man on this floor will stultify himself by so asserting,) then I consider it eminently wise that at least a part of the reserves of the banks should be made up of the money of the world.

What is the object of a bank reserve? Why does the law provide, and why does every sound treatise on the law of banking say, that there should always be an ample reserve sustained by the banks? It is in order that a fund may be provided to pay certain liabilities of the banks at once and upon any emergency. The fundamental principle of all sound banking is that such reserves should exist.

In 1825, when there was a heavy strain upon the money market of London, so soon as it was discovered that the reserves of the Bank of England were reduced to less than two millions of pounds, that strain was precipitated into a panic and a financial crisis followed.

In 1857, when a similar strain was made upon the market and upon the Bank of England, and it became apparent to the public that the reserves of that bank had become largely reduced, another panic was the result.

In 1866, when there was a heavy strain upon the markets of London, which is the great center of exchange for the world, and that strain was precipitated into a panic by the failure of Overend, Gurney & Co., what saved England, what saved this country, what saved the world from being precipitated into a disastrous money convulsion? It was alone the fact that the Bank of England had taken a lesson from the experience of the past, and had kept its reserve up at large figures, and so was able to meet the demand. That dispersed the panic in less than three months, and confidence was fully restored.

So I say that a wise principle of banking demands that there should be a proper reserve kept in the banks. The wisdom or the unwisdom, if I may be allowed the expression, of the national-banking system has nothing to do with this question. The speech of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] as I consider, has nothing to do with this question.

There is but one question to be considered, and that is how shall the reserves of the banks of this country be made up? If those banks should exist until the expiration of their charters, then it is to the best interests of the people of this country that their system of banking should be wisely conducted. So far as the immediate and the material interests of the people are concerned, it is as much our duty to see that these banks are carried on upon a wise system of finance as it is that we should carry on any other system of legislation which affects their interests.

Gentlemen may say, What is the objection, then, for these reserves to be continued wholly in legal-tender paper money? There are several objections to it. If another panic is precipitated upon this country how is it to come? I suppose it is the part of statesmen to attempt to foresee an evil and to provide against it. If a panic in this country is to come it will be when the balance of trade is reversed against us, and a heavy drain of specie from this country ensues, and a consequent heavy strain shall come upon our money markets and upon our banks. When that strain shall come the only protection for the people against a panic will be a specie reserve, or such a reserve as is acknowledged to be money throughout the world.

Now, while the national banks are permitted to have their reserve in legal-tender paper money alone, if a demand should come upon them for specie they would be induced to part with their specie, because of the profits that the demand for foreign shipment would enable them to make, and because they would still have their legal reserve in paper money with which to meet their own liabilities. Thus, by reason of the large issue of paper money which, since the revival of business, is being circulated among our people by the national banks, our people would find themselves in possession of a mass of paper for which they could not command specie, and there might be entailed upon them irreparable loss.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I cannot allow myself to be interrupted. If my thoughts are worth anything on this question, I wish to present them connectedly.

Now, in order to provide against a panic and against this drain of specie if a panic should come again in this country, we ought to require these banks by law to have at least one-half of their reserves in specie, instead of allowing them, according to the present law, to have the whole of their reserve in paper money, which is not the money of the world. In this way we shall help to create that sense of security which is always the antidote, and the only antidote, of panic. It is the publication through the world of the bank accounts showing a healthy reserve that always produces this sense of security. It can be produced in no other way. It is based on confidence among business men derived from the publication of the bank accounts, showing a healthy reserve, consisting of the money of the world.

There is another contingency which we should take into consideration. The Supreme Court of the United States is not constituted now as it was when the legal-tender cases were decided; and besides we do not know but that some of the judges who then pronounced opinions in that case have since seen reason to change their views upon this great question of the legal-tender qualities of paper money. Now, if the banks are allowed by law to retain this paper money as their only reserve and paper should be declared by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States no longer a legal tender in payment of debts, what would be the condition of the people? What is a reserve worth unless it be a reserve of legal-tender money. A reserve of anything else is mockery and nonsense. The money constituting the reserve must be a legal tender. Now, if a decision should be precipitated upon this country declaring the greenback currency no longer a legal tender, we should, with this vast quantity of paper money afloat without a sufficient coin reserve, be remanded again to a condition in which our currency would be inconvertible, irredeemable—a condition which I do not believe is desired by the great mass of the American people, however much it may be a pet theory of certain wild financial doctrinâires who have written and spoken on this subject.

I submit that these considerations ought to be sufficient to induce this House to require that at least one-half of the reserve of the banks should consist of silver and gold, the money of the world. There is, it seems to me, no force in the argument with reference to contraction. How can you possibly contract when you let out into circulation money in place of that which you require shall be held as a reserve? The law would not operate in that way, even if the argument were sound, because we know that the banks, as shown by their reports, have more than enough specie to constitute one-half of their reserves. Nor is there anything in the argument that this measure would be dangerous to the business interests of the country by creating a great and unusual demand upon the part of the banks for specie. This bill would not require them to draw in their paper in order to furnish themselves with specie; and the debtors of the banks would not be pressed in any way, because, as I have said, there is already specie enough in the vaults of the banks to meet the requirements of this bill.

Now, with all due deference to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] I say that his argument yesterday that the convertibility of the paper money into specie should be carried on alone at the Treasury of the United States is incomprehensible to me. I thought it was the interest of the people to have easy access to points of redemption. That certainly was the object of the national banking law in establishing eighteen of the larger cities of the Union as redemption cities and requiring the banks in those cities to have a larger reserve than the country banks. How can it possibly play into the hands of "the Shylocks, the bankers and brokers," (using the expression of the gentleman from Tennessee,) if we require the banks to pay specie at their own counters upon the demand of the bill-holder or depositor? It is the interest of the people that these banks should be required to pay specie, if desired, upon their bills or deposits at their own counters; and such a requirement cannot possibly play into the hands of "the Shylocks, the bankers and brokers." These are very convenient terms to be used in this House to excite the prejudices of the people, yet we know that this class must exist so long as the love of gain remains the controlling passion among men. We ought to restrain them, but we can never destroy them so long as human nature continues as we now find it, and as it has been found in all ages. And we must look to the protection of the people. I say, so far as sound banking is concerned, the enlightened self-interest of the banks and the great material interests of the people are mutual, if not identical, in the maintenance of a wholesome, sufficient reserve; and so long as these banks exist we should see that they are carried on upon wise and sound financial principles. Nothing which I have said was intended to discriminate against our present greenback money. I am the firm friend of this currency, and the unyielding opponent of all who wish to abate one jot or tittle from its present volume and efficiency. Nor is there anything in this bill to excite the apprehensions of the friends of the greenbacks.

Mr. KNOTT. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BUCKNER. Very well, let this subject go over until the next morning hour.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2701, a bill (H. R. No. 3543) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed and recommitted.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now demand the regular order of business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to resume the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the revision of the rules reported from the Committee on Rules, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the revision of the rules proposed by the Committee on Rules, and I desire to echo the strongest language I have heard on this floor in indorsement of the labors of the committee. In clearness and conciseness of statement and arrangement I think they must commend themselves to the intelligent judgment of every member upon this floor, and I should regret extremely if any words of mine to-day should have a tendency in the slightest degree to prejudice the rules as a whole.

I shall not discuss them in general. I shall confine myself simply to Rule XI as reported by the Committee on Rules. I did not expect we should have the opportunity of general debate. It was my impression that we should be confined in the discussion to a particular rule as it came up, and that nothing whatever could be said on Rule XI until we came to it in regular order. Believing, as I did, that I had amendments to that rule which might commend themselves to the judgment of the House after due consideration, and not expecting that I should be able to get them before the members of the House in regular order until the rule had been reached, I gave to the printer a few days before this discussion commenced, on the 7th of this month, an indication of my purpose and the scope of the proposed amendments. The result shows that Rule XI has been, in the minds of many members as well as in my own, the objective point in the discussion.

I now ask the Clerk to read Rule XI as reported by the committee, to include the last clause which I propose to amend, and then read the amendments which I propose, so that they may go into the RECORD and be fairly considered.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XI.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF COMMITTEES.

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

1. To the election of members: to the Committee on Elections;
2. To the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means;
3. To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government: to the Committee on Appropriations;
4. To judicial proceedings, civil and criminal law: to the Committee on the Judiciary;
5. To banking and currency: to the Committee on Banking and Currency;
6. To coinage, weights, and measures: to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures;
7. To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce, [but they shall report the bill known as the river and harbor bill, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;]
8. To agriculture: to the Committee on Agriculture;
9. To the relations of the United States with foreign nations: to the Committee on Foreign Affairs;
10. To the military establishment and the public defense, other than the appropriations for its support: to the Committee on Military Affairs;
11. To the naval establishment, other than the appropriations for its support: to the Committee on Naval Affairs;
12. To the Post-Office and post-roads, other than appropriations for their support: to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads;
13. To the lands of the United States: to the Committee on the Public Lands;
14. To the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes: to the Committee on Indian Affairs;
15. To territorial legislation, the revision thereof, and affecting Territories or the admission of States: to the Committee on the Territories;
16. To railways and canals other than Pacific railroads: to the Committee on Railways and Canals;
17. To the manufacturing industries: to the Committee on Manufactures;
18. To the mining interests: to the Committee on Mines and Mining;
19. To the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds;
20. To the railroads and telegraphic lines between the Mississippi River and the Pacific coast: to the Committee on Pacific Railroads; 21.
to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River;
22. To education and labor: to the Committee on Education and Labor;
23. To the militia of the several States: to the Committee on the Militia;
24. To patents: to the Committee on Patents;
25. To the pensions of the civil war: to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;
26. To the pensions of all the wars of the United States other than the civil war: to the Committee on Pensions;
27. To private and domestic claims and demands whatsoever, other than war-claims, against the United States: to the Committee on Claims;
28. To claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged: to the Committee on War Claims;
29. To private claims to lands: to the Committee on Private Land Claims;
30. To the District of Columbia: to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I now ask the Clerk to read the amendments which I propose.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XI.

Clause 3.—Amend clause 3 by adding the words "And the several appropriation bills, when reported to the House by the committees in which they originate, shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be reported back to the House after due consideration, with such recommendations as the general expenditures of the Government require them to make, and the committee in which the bill originated shall thereupon have charge of it and upon its passage."

Clause 7.—Amend clause 7 so as to read: "To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce; and this committee shall receive the estimates and report the annual appropriation bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Clause 9.—Amend clause 9 by adding the words "And this committee shall report the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Clause 10.—Amend clause 10 by striking out the words "other than appropriations for its support," and adding to the clause the words "and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bills for the support of the Army and the Military Academy at West Point, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Clause 11.—Amend clause 11 by striking out the words "other than appropriations for its support," and adding to the clause the words "and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bill for the support of the Navy, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Clause 12.—Amend clause 12 by striking out the words "other than appropriations for its support," and adding the words "and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bills for the service of the Post-Office Department, and for mail transportation by ocean steamers, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Clause 14.—Amend clause 14 by adding the words "and this committee shall report the annual appropriations for expenses of the Indian Department, and for carrying out the treaties and obligations of the Government with the Indian tribes, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Clause 19.—Amend clause 19 by striking out the words "other than appropriations therefor," and adding the words "and this committee shall report all appropriations therefor, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Clause 25.—Amend clause 25 by adding the words "and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bill for the payment of invalid and other pensions, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Clause 30.—Amend clause 30 by adding the words "and this committee shall report all appropriations therefor, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It will be observed by these amendments, Mr. Chairman, that I propose to leave with the Committee on Appropriations all independent subjects relating to appropriations. I propose to leave with them and under their entire control as heretofore the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, the sundry civil bill, the fortifications bill, and all deficiency bills.

In addition to the work that will be required of the Appropriations Committee in originating and reporting these several bills, I propose that they shall take the bills as reported by the several committees and referred to them by the House, not for the purpose of tearing them to pieces as has been suggested would be the fate of the river and harbor bill, by several gentlemen on this floor, notably by the honorable gentleman from Texas, the gentleman from Minnesota, and the gentleman from West Virginia. I do not ask that the Appropriations Committee shall take the bill of the Committee on Commerce, most carefully prepared after months of exhaustive investigation and labor, and wholly destroy the integrity of their work and report a new bill and have control of it on the floor of the House.

It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that my proposition sends to the Committee on Appropriations a perfected bill for the rivers and harbors. It directs the Committee on Appropriations to report back that bill with such recommendations as the general expenditures of the Government in their judgment require them to make, and that thereupon the committee in which that bill originated shall have charge of it upon its passage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I protest against the assumption that no bill should be sent to any committee, any second committee of this House, unless that bill can receive at the hands of that second committee as full and as exhaustive an examination as was bestowed upon it by the committee originally having charge of it. Such objection literally enforced would deny to the Committee of the Whole supervision of a bill. It is not for the purpose of receiving a critical examination and consideration as to its details, but rather as to its general character and scope and aggregate amount, together with the probable claims of other appropriation bills yet to be reported, that I would have the Appropriations Committee advise the House whether that bill, as a whole, can safely be passed; whether the general expenditures of the Government will justify it; whether the revenues of the next fiscal year will permit it?

This was the plan substantially followed in the Fortieth Congress, as appears from the report accompanying the present revision, from which I quote:

> In the Fortieth Congress, as appears from the statement of Mr. DAWES, on the 8th of February, 1873, (third session, Forty-second Congress,) the Committee on Appropriations, being busily engaged with other matters, permitted the Committee on Commerce to originate and report the river and harbor appropriation bill, and, by an arrangement made in a conference between Mr. DAWES, representing the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Commerce, the latter committee was permitted to prepare and report the said bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations, which committee agreed, after consideration, to report it back to the House with such recommendations as they believed the general expenditures of the country required them to make, and that course has several times been pursued since that agreement, although it is true that during the preceding two Congresses (Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth) the Committee on Commerce has exclusively had control and charge of the river and harbor bill.

Now, it will be observed that the Committee on Rules do not object to that action. They have tacitly approved it.

Again, Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] one of the members of this Committee on Rules, in a speech made in this House on January 8, says:

> Let me state the practice which prevailed during the four years I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. That committee went over the field, and looking at all the estimates as they came from the Departments, making all the examinations we could make, we said: "There should be appropriated for the coming year, say, $290,000,000; we think we can cut the expenditures of the Government down to that figure; but to do this the Army must have so much, the Navy so much, and rivers and harbors so much." Thereupon the Committee on Appropriations informed the Committee on Commerce that the Government could afford to pay, say, $5,000,000 for rivers and harbors; and the Committee on Commerce, having that great and complex subject in hand, were asked to tell how the money ought to be distributed. The Committee on Commerce drafted the bill distributing the amount. That bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and if it did not exceed the total amount which the Committee on Appropriations believed could be spared, the Committee on Appropriations reported it back and requested the Committee on Commerce to take charge of it and carry it through the House. This is the way the work was done during the four years of my chairmanship of the Committee on Appropriations.

It will thus be seen that my amendments are not in conflict with the former practice of this House. They are not even in antagonism to the report of this Committee on Rules as relating to one committee. They propose to treat several important committees, with slight modification, just as the Committee on Rules advise in relation to the Committee on Commerce, and as the distinguished gentleman from Ohio fully indorsed when chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now I ask, if the river and harbor bill was considerately treated then, why can it not be considerately treated now? And why cannot several of the general appropriation bills be considerately treated in the same way?

I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to go quite to the extent that my distinguished friend from Ohio did. I do not think it needful that we should instruct the Committee on Appropriations that they should divide up the expenditures of the Government and insist that each of these several committees shall restrict itself to that sum; because if we admit that, then we presume that the Committee on Appropriations know in advance of any investigation just what each Department of the Government may need for the next fiscal year. I think they do not. I think the growing necessities of this country may present themselves so forcibly to my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that he might report a very discreet bill of a much larger amount than he did last year. And I think again my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs may see in the legislation of last year, or in the legislation recently enacted, something which increases the expenses of the Army.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations cannot possibly be expected to have special knowledge of those facts, hence they should not arbitrarily limit the expenditures in that way. But I would have this, Mr. Chairman, I would have it understood that these several committees, charged with the same responsibility before the House and the country that the Committee on Appropriations has been and still will be, to examine all the estimates of expenditures as well as probable revenues of the Government, should compare notes with the Committee of Ways and Means, should compare notes with the Committee on Appropriations, should ask for all the information they can get from the Departments of this Government, and by any and every means in their power as intelligent legislators ascertain about what share of the public expenditure they might claim. Then I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that when this bill should have been so reported back to the House by the Committee on Appropriations it would be found that there had been close consultation between the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Commerce and the Army Committee and the Naval Committee and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, on which I have the honor to serve, and other committees.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the effect of these amendments which I propose will be, first, to expedite the appropriation bills by reason of simultaneous action on the part of committees.

Secondly, I imagine in the preparation of these bills we will enlist members of the House who are intimately acquainted with every law under which the appropriation is made.

Third, the effect will be to insure a more thorough and critical examination of the estimates sent by the different Departments. How many members on this floor, Mr. Chairman, know what the estimates of the Departments are which were made to this House at the present session of Congress? How can the Committee on Appropriations assure the country that they honestly believe just such a sum, and no more, is needed to execute in its multiform details a law which the Military Committee spent months in maturing; say, for instance, an increase of the Army, together with a readjustment of the pay of soldiers and of officers of the Army? They must depend absolutely upon the representations and calculations of the bureau officers. These officers are doubtless both honest and intelligent; but then they are not held responsible to the country, as are the members of this House, for an intelligent and economic disbursement of the public money.

Here again, Mr. Chairman, I am sustained both in logic and in illustration by a former distinguished member of this House, a member of the Military Committee—General Schenck—who when this Appropriations Committee was formed March 2, 1865, made some brief but very effective remarks precisely in the line I am now following, and illustrated them by reference to some legislation which the Military Committee had been perfecting for months, looking to the increase of the pay of officers and soldiers of the Army. They had spent days and weeks of anxious toil upon it. It passed the House and went to the Senate. The Senate had a bill before it of somewhat similar import. The Senate examined the House bill and proposed not to take it up, but they ingrafted upon the appropriation bill in the Senate their own bill, and it came to the House. It went to a committee of conference, and passed the House, and all the labor of months, spent so industriously and so intelligently by this Military Committee of the House, I apprehend, was wasted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are told that the Committee on Commerce differs very widely from other committees of the House in this: that it is a law unto itself, that it makes report for appropriations not specially authorized by law, and that all other appropriations are strictly and clearly limited and defined by law. Hence, what might be proper for the river and harbor appropriation bill would be wholly unnecessary for other appropriation bills. Now, let us examine this. I admit it to be true that the river and harbor appropriation bill does both legislate and appropriate. In that respect that committee differs widely from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which is now confined, in the discretion of the House, strictly to legislation. But I fail to see why the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should not have the same consideration in the House, under the rules, as the Committee on Commerce; why it may not legislate and appropriate independently of other committees, and why it should not, by a similar method, report and pass a general bill. If it is proper for one committee it is proper for both. Under the conditions I suggest it is proper for all.

I want first to examine the question whether it be true, as asserted on this floor by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and reiterated by so many others, that other appropriation bills simply estimate for that which is strictly and clearly defined by law. I say they do not. And in this connection I desire to call attention to section 169 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

> Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employés, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Now, does that strictly limit the Committee on Appropriations either as to the number of employés or their salaries? I take it it does not. That committee has the unquestioned right to come to this House and propose any additional number of clerks which they choose, at any compensation they may see proper. And they have done it; done it discreetly, done it wisely, perhaps.

Now, will you undertake to say, or will my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. ATKINS,] undertake to say that he knows more about the Post-Office Department, its increase of business, its need of additional employés, its need of additional money for the star-route service, or for any other service, than does the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, or than do the members of the Post-Office Committee, who are in daily contact with that Department, daily considering and maturing the legislation which is made absolutely necessary by the growing wants of the Department?

To illustrate, I will refer to a circumstance which occurred during the last Congress, and my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] took a leading part in it, and will remember it. The Committee on Appropriations considered an estimate for a certain force of additional employés needed in the General Land Office, and their salaries, and reported a trifling increase. It came to the attention of myself and of Mr. DUNNELL that this was wholly inadequate to bring up the business of that office, which had been hanging back for years and years on account of vastly increased demands upon the office, so that titles to land could not be given, though absolutely demanded by the business interests of the far West.

That subject was presented to the Committee on Appropriations clearly and succinctly by the gentleman to whom I have referred, and by myself and others. That committee at once saw the justice of it, they accepted the amendment, and it was passed.

Now, I say that what occurred then will occur and must occur in every one of the Departments of this Government and in every branch of the public service. There is a large discretion to be vested originally in some one committee of this House in preparing a specific appropriation bill. Which committee shall have it? The committee that knows all about it or the committee that can know but little about it, comparatively, for lack of time?

I will quote another section of the Revised Statutes, section 3664:

> Whenever the head of a Department, being about to submit to Congress the annual estimates of expenditures required for the coming year, finds that the usual items of such estimates vary materially in amount from the appropriation ordinarily asked for the object named, and especially from the appropriation granted for the same objects for the preceding year, and whenever new items not theretofore usual are introduced into such estimates for any year, he shall accompany the estimates by minute and full explanations of all such variations and new items, showing the reasons and grounds upon which the amounts are required, and the different items added.

I take it that the statutes presume that when these bureau officials, these Department officers, so careful, so correct, so conscientious, so intelligent as they generally are, send their estimates to Congress, it is expected and required of us as custodians of the public money that we shall critically examine those estimates, cut them down or increase them. Now, how can we do that if as a committee intrusted with the duty we know little about the inner workings of that branch of the service? In this same connection I desire to refer to one of the old rules which has been left in this revised code. I refer to clause 3 of Rule XXI, which reads:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, do you not see that when the limitation fixed by law for the cost of a public building as reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been reached, the Committee on Appropriations can and do proceed indefinitely to continue appropriations? Why should they not consult, at least, the committee which authorized the building and ask it to name the amount for their consideration?

Here again it is not true that the Committee on Appropriations will only appropriate for that which is definitely fixed by law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations does not as a matter of fact know the cause and the cure of these large deficiency bills which are introduced at every session of this House upon the report of some Departments of the Government unless they choose to make a special investigation. That investigation is perfectly proper, but consumes the time of the Appropriations Committee, already inadequate, and might be avoided if each committee would give more attention to the preparation of the bills originally passed. They ought to be able to foresee whether a deficiency would be probable under the bill they are about to report; and, if so, they can correct it so that this House shall not appropriate for deficiencies year after year.

But I will not dwell on these points. I now pass to a statement of the reasons why I insist upon the final review of the work of all these committees by the Committee on Appropriations without destroying the original bill and without taking charge of it upon its passage. In doing so I propose no degradation of any committee of this House; nor do I think the Committee on Rules have purposed any degradation of any committee; but I do propose that each bill shall be reported not to another committee but to this House, the bill to be in charge of the House just as the most important messages from the Chief Executive of this nation are in charge of the House, to be referred by the House for specific information and report touching certain questions which the Committee of the Whole House should understand before it can intelligently vote upon these bills. The Committee of the Whole must know, for instance, what other bills which are in progress and to come before it are likely to demand and require. It must know what the aggregate revenues of the Government will be for the next fiscal year and the estimated expenditures as they shall be ascertained. It must, in a word, know whether any excessive importance or unsafe enlargement is given to any special bill. Now, the Committee of the Whole must delegate this inquiry to somebody or some committee.

And, Mr. Chairman, can you name a committee of the House more likely to be in possession of the facts, more likely to deal impartially, intelligently, and justly with all these bills, than the Committee on Appropriations? I think that the committee should have charge of precisely this duty, to give to the Committee of the Whole when it shall come to discuss any particular bill a general review of all the bills, showing the relative importance of the particular measure then presented and the probable effect its passage will have upon other great demands to which the Government may be subjected. This is all that I propose for the Committee on Appropriations; nothing more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I might say that I am not ashamed to act as clerk of a committee. I do it in a certain sense when as a sub-committee of one I report to a sub-committee. That sub-committee reports to the full committee, and that full committee reports to the House. I do not see anything necessarily degrading in the fact that one committee, officially as well as severally and personally, should report to another committee; yet we do not ask this in the amendments I propose. We ask that a committee of this House, standing upon terms of equality with every other committee of the House, shall report to the House, and the House shall simply submit its bill for comparison and report to a committee which may impartially consider all bills.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word as to the so-called "unity" which the proposed revision of the rules gives to all the bills of this House, which was dwelt upon so eloquently by my distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] Look, for instance, at my own committee, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We have before us now, and have had before us for some time, a bill providing for a public building in the city of Pittsburgh. We have given exhaustive examination to the needs of the Government in that city. We have taken into consideration the size of the city, its immense business, the increasing demand for accommodations for public business. We have made this examination not only in relation to the city of Pittsburgh, but we have considered the requirements of that city in connection with the requirements of every large city in this broad land. For we do not propose to be local in the distribution of public moneys. We propose to consider so fully, so exhaustively the demands of the several cities of this country (just as the Committee on Commerce are doing with reference to the various rivers and harbors) as to be able to say to the House that we believe that this city ought to have a public building not to exceed in cost a specified sum of money. We propose when the time comes to report other bills equally meritorious.

And I will add that we hope before this Congress shall adjourn to report with a favorable recommendation every meritorious bill properly sustained by evidence of public need that is now before us. Why? Simply because we rely upon what the Secretary of the Treasury has told us the needs of public buildings already in progress will be. He states to us at our request how much money will be needed to continue the public buildings already in progress. He states to us in addition to that, as doubtless he states to the Committee on Appropriations, about what aggregate amount in his judgment can reasonably be allowed for all appropriations for buildings and grounds during the next fiscal year. Now, taking the difference between the total and that which he estimates as needful to continue the present buildings, we have arrived at the conclusion that we can safely report in favor of the construction of a public building in the city of Pittsburgh not to exceed in cost $750,000, and that the available funds this year will justify us in reporting an expenditure of $150,000 which will provide the foundations for that building fully protected for the next winter, the ground having been purchased and donated years ago.

Now, having done this, having carefully gone over all this ground, how can there be unity in the action of the several committees when we cease to have any control whatever of appropriations for that public work the moment the building is authorized by law? Next year the estimate comes from the Secretary of the Treasury for money to continue that work. We see it not; know nothing of it. It goes to the Committee on Appropriations and is passed. The next year another estimate comes and it goes to the Committee on Appropriations and is passed. The next year and the next year and so on when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds wake up perchance they find a million and a half has been appropriated to the city of Pittsburgh instead of $750,000. Law for it—where? Unity of purpose between the committees in comparing the claims and needs of the country and in discreet and judicious action? It cannot be. I do not undertake to say that the committee on Public Buildings and Grounds might not or would not have done the same thing. However, if there is any one thing I have resolved to do in my official relations to this committee it is to recommend so far as I can all appropriations which I think to be right and to take all responsibility before this House for the aggregate as well as the initial sum recommended. If the Committee on Appropriations chooses to exceed or diminish the appropriations our committee might recommend, then the responsibility rests with them, and the House would decide the question more intelligently.

I am giving a supposable case, of course, Mr. Chairman—a supposable case under our present rules—nay, an actual illustration of more than one public building which now stands in the way of legitimate appropriations for greatly needed buildings elsewhere because of incongruous legislation and appropriations heretofore. I hold there can be no conceivable reason why the Committee on Commerce should carefully consider the needs of the Ohio River at Pittsburgh and recommend appropriations therefor year after year while the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with one of the safest and most intelligent chairmen upon this floor, shall be required to exhaustively consider the needs of the public service present and prospective for public buildings in the city of Pittsburgh, involving much larger expenditures of the public money perhaps, and then be refused absolutely any supervision or control over the appropriations therefor. It is utterly unfair and inconsistent; my amendments will correct it. I blame no one but the rules for this condition of affairs. The architect is bound to employ to the best advantage whatever money the Committee on Appropriations desire him to have. I do not blame the Appropriations Committee, because they invariably hold in check the appealing Representative from the district interested and seek by ascertaining in the moment of time available, but which is wholly inadequate, the actual necessities of the case. I blame no one, as I have said, but the rules. But I plead for this change which will place these several committees in charge of these several branches of the public service upon an equality.

I cannot accept the statement that the guarded distribution of labor among the committees, which I suggest, will necessarily increase expenditures. Two committees endanger an appropriation of doubtful propriety more than one; one committee, more than a sub-committee or a conference committee like that one referred to by General Schenck.

It is worth a trial, Mr. Chairman. Now is the time and the only time within the past fifteen years when this wholesome practice could well be inaugurated, advocated by General Schenck so warmly at the time the Appropriations Committee was formed, tested and approved for four years by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] in connection with one committee, and finally recommended, with slight variation by the present Committee on Rules, to be applied to the Commerce Committee. A most commendable feature of this revised code of rules is that it places the committees of the House upon something like an equality in the presentation of business. Now let that equality extend to the preparation of business and then we shall have less trouble in forming our committees, less jealousy between our committees, less conflict upon the floor and consequent waste of time in perpetually seeking to obtain, in violation of rule, that equitable distribution of responsibilities and labor which a national House of Representatives thoroughly democratic in its instincts will ever insist upon.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to find fault with the report of the Committee on Rules. I think they have discharged their duties well. They have made the first step in advance in the simplification of the mode and manner of transacting intelligently the business of this House. I have been a member of this House for many years, commencing a great way back, and, with all the attention I was able to bestow on the subject of understanding the rules as they now are, I must confess my utter inability to be able to comprehend them.

I remember a conversation I had many years ago with Mr. Calhoun on the subject of the rules. I made the inquiry of him whether they could not be simplified, and his reply to me was that the rules of the House were mostly shaped in the way in which they are to prevent bad legislation and to protect the rights of the minority. Now, that is a very good reason. The rights of the minority of the House of Representatives of the United States ought to be fully protected against any improper or hasty legislation. But I submit, sir, it takes a man with more brains than I have, more perseverance than I have, and more discrimination than I have to comprehend the one hundred and sixty-six rules which we have now and under which we are legislating.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. And more time.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, and more time, as my friend from North Carolina suggests to me, than one can bestow, and discharge his other duties. I do not want, therefore, to find any fault with the committee which has had this subject under consideration. They have had a work of immense labor. The men composing that committee are men of large experience on the question of parliamentary law. They have made report with marked ability, and, while there may be some amendments which ought to be incorporated in the report, I would be the last one who would stand in the way of defeating the report of that committee by amendments which might be offered to-day, even if, in my judgment, they may be superior to portions of it.

I was always of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Appropriations had more power than it ought to have. I was a member of this House when the Committee on Appropriations was created. It was done, I think, in 1861, and it was whispered around—how true it was, I will not pretend to say—that it was mostly inaugurated for the purpose of accommodating a very distinguished man from Pennsylvania. That was Mr. Thaddeus Stevens—a great man beyond all doubt. He had his prejudices, he had peculiar opinions, but he had a noble and generous heart, and there are few men whom I have met in the long political experience I have had who had my respect more fully than Mr. Thaddeus Stevens.

It was said at the time that this was done to preserve for him a permanent place, but I apprehend that that is a slander upon the man. It was deemed proper at that time when such vast sums of money were to be expended by the Government, that the Committee of Ways and Means should be relieved of a portion of its burdens. Now, in looking over the report of the committee there is nothing in it that I can take exception to, or that I deem exception can be taken to on the part of any member of this House, except that part which refers to the river and harbor bills. That is a subject that touches all parts of the country, and this is a matter in my judgment which should come under a more thorough discussion by the Committee of the Whole. That is the popular throne after all that is said and done, and where discussion should not be trammeled, the more appropriate place to deposit the power that disposes of seven or eight millions of dollars of the money of the people than the Committee on Appropriations, eminent as they may be and selected of the very best material in the House. Therefore I agree with the remarks of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. OSCAR TURNER] yesterday with regard to a full discussion and opportunity, where large sums of money are appropriated, of affording to every member of the House an opportunity to record his vote in regard to the expenditure of these vast sums. That is the true doctrine.

After all that is said and done, Mr. Chairman, what are we to understand by the rules of the House as we may rightly conceive what the rules ought to be, that is to expedite legislation and to deal in a proper manner with the rights of the minority as well as of the majority? Therefore, that system which gives opportunity for full debate ought to be had. That is the system of rules that this House ought to adopt. And I venture to say from my place, as an old member of this House, that the forty-six rules offered to us by this Committee on Rules as a substitute for the one hundred and sixty-six rules under which we are and have been legislating is a wonderful improvement, and there ought to be no small reason intervening between the adoption of the report of that committee as a substitute for the rules we now have and have been acting under.

Now I can readily conceive why the Committee on Appropriations should have charge, and very properly, too, wherever the report of the expenditure of money comes through one of the public Departments of the Government. I say at once that that is proper, either to go before the Committee of Ways and Means or the Committee on Appropriations—perhaps the Committee on Appropriations would be the best designation for it. Wherever a report for an expenditure comes from a Department it is right and proper that the Committee on Appropriations should have the control, the exclusive control, of that subject. But where the appropriation comes from any other committee of the House, where the sum required is not designated by any of the Departments whatever, in my judgment the Committee of the Whole ought to have the exclusive control of the subject, and that it ought not to go to the Committee on Appropriations. But what most engages the attention of the House is the river and harbor bills.

There is no Department of the Government which makes an estimate for an expenditure of money to be appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors. That question goes legitimately to the Committee on Commerce, and in my judgment they should have exclusive control of it, and whenever it passes from the hands of that committee it ought not to go to the Committee on Appropriations, but to the Committee of the Whole House, where every member can have an opportunity of expressing his opinions with regard to appropriations recommended by the committee. And now, with that single exception, or with an amendment of that kind—and, if I understand the temper of this House, I think it is manifest that it is the wish of members that the river and harbor bill should not go to the Committee on Appropriations—I say with that single exception I am willing to take the report of the committee, because I believe that there are merits in it of the very highest order and character; that it is the work of men of superior intelligence and long practical experience in this House, and that is one strong argument at least why the House should adopt it.

But there is another reason that is beyond, a strong and powerful reason: that the Committee of the Whole have full opportunity, when coming to vote an appropriation of seven or eight millions of dollars, of having it fully and particularly discussed. There should be a full and fair opportunity for debate, as my friend contended yesterday, on this subject.

Now we have this report before us, do not let us be so divided as to defeat the object that the committee had in reporting these rules, because it is a great improvement upon the system that we have adopted here and under which this House has been governed for years and years. They cannot be understood by the great majority of the House. They are too complicated. They are a mystery.

I do not know but what I possess about as much intelligence as would come up to the ordinary standard of a member of Congress.

[Laughter.] But I confess to you frankly that I am but a child here. I go to the Speaker for information. I cannot comprehend the language he gives me, and yet it is parliamentary. [Laughter.] Everything that appears in the book of rules is parliamentary; but it is a parliamentary language, Mr. Chairman, that is Greek to me. It is Greek to every man unless he devotes weeks and months and years to comprehend this matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. And a stumbling-block to many.

Mr. WRIGHT. And a stumbling-block to nine-tenths of the members of this House, and particularly so to me.

We meet here to pass laws. Ought we not to have a system of rules we can comprehend so that we may know when to make a motion? Ought we not to have a regular line of proceeding with regard to matters that are upon our Calendar? When anything goes to the Committee of the Whole you might as well, as a general thing, consider it in its legislative grave; you cannot exhume it. When you desire to do something that long, bony finger is outstretched with the words, "I object;" and those words, "I object," issuing from the tongue that belongs to the body which owns the bony finger, can hold two hundred and ninety-two men at bay. Is that civilization? [Laughter.] Is that equality in this Chamber? The other day a single objection was made to a small matter I had in charge and it went to the Committee of the Whole because there was a small appropriation in it. It was a question which had not been raised here for the last ten years, but there happened to be a laboring-man in the case and therefore the objection comes. The committee of which I have the honor to be chairman desired to report certain testimony, but objection was made and it had to go to the Committee of the Whole. For twenty years no such report had ever gone to the Committee of the Whole. But labor and the rights of laboring-men never had and I am afraid never will have much of a standing in this Chamber. We shall see.

Now, what I want to get at is this, that no man under the rules of the House shall have the power to stop the wheels of legislation. I would like to have the majority of the Chamber govern, and I would like to have the opportunity of so presenting a question to the Chamber that the majority of the House would have an opportunity to decide it. It is a mere matter of accident that you get up a bill under the rules as they now are. Under the rules as they are now reported to us the order of business is properly arranged; one class of business is put upon one calendar; another class is put upon another calendar, and there is a way and a method of reaching legislation—a great innovation upon bad customs; the dawn of better days, I hope.

But, sir, let it remain as it is, and at best the whole system of parliamentary law, as provided by the rules of this House and as carried out, is a stumbling-block to the members who compose the body. I have been somewhat amused at some of my colleagues, who I know have had much less time and experience in legislative life than I have, who know fifty times as much about the rules as I do. Why? Because they have abandoned all other things that required their attention in the House and gone into the study of the rules. [Laughter.] This book of rules is the Sanscrit of American parliamentary literature. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, the system, as I understand this report, is simplified, and common men like myself can understand it. Any member of the House, under the new rules, will be able to understand what he is about. Therefore, I say, do not let the opportunity slide of amending a bad system and adopting the report of the committee. If the committee find a majority of the House not disposed to let this question of rivers and harbors go to the Committee on Appropriations, but preferring it should be submitted to the Committee of the Whole House, I believe if the Committee on Rules will yield that much we can have almost entire unanimity upon the subject.

Having been here some eight or nine years, and having been during that period of time endeavoring to know how to do things, I find myself but a child three years old. [Laughter.] I can go to the Chair and can whisper in his ear, "How is this thing to be done?" I can go to the Clerk, in front of the Speaker's desk, and ask him, "How is this thing to be done? What finesse is to be resorted to to accomplish it? What principle of tactics shall I pursue?" He proceeds to explain it, and when he is through I know just as little about it as when I asked the question. [Laughter.] That is not the correct thing, I submit, with regard to the system of carrying on American legislation.

I apprehend there are two main points that ought to engage our attention seriously. One is that our rules must be so shaped that upon voting upon large sums of money the yeas and nays should be recorded upon the Journal. That cannot be accomplished unless, perhaps, the chairman of the Committee of the Whole gives his assent. That cannot be done, it is said, because there are only one or two ways in which it can be reached, and you are too late; you did not apply in time, or some other excuse. Therefore it is very seldom in our legislation here that you have an opportunity to have the votes recorded upon some of the most important measures that engage our attention. Why, I have known $30,000,000 at the present session to be appropriated out of the Treasury without a division even, or the power to call the yeas and nays. Now, even were it possible that there might be entire unanimity with regard to such a vast appropriation, still the yeas and nays should be recorded. The people of the country are entitled to this information.

Does any gentleman say that there is no necessity for recording them? If any man desires to vote "ay" let it be seen; and if he has a disposition to vote "no" let his name stand out, even if alone, like Lot's wife upon the borders of the Dead Sea when she started for the plain. Even such a one should have an opportunity to put his name on the record. [Laughter.]

I believe I have said about as much as I ought to say. I am not one of those, Mr. Chairman, who when they obtain the floor do not know when to stop. When I have said what I want to say then I stop; and I do not need to have the clock run against me. It is a wise man who knows when to stop. Having made these few remarks upon this question let me in conclusion say, as the oldest member in point of years in this House, as I believe I am——

Mr. WILLIS. The ladies will not believe it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WRIGHT. No, the ladies will not believe it; but that don't change the fact. Let me say, as the oldest member in point of years in this House, and also as a member who has had some years of experience here, that it is my judgment the report of this Committee on Rules gives us an opportunity to begin a reform. I will vote for the adoption of this report, even if this House shall refuse to strike out that part of it relating to harbors and rivers, which under these rules will of necessity go to the Committee on Appropriations, but trust to an opportunity hereafter to make the amendment.

Here is the report of a system of rules, which is in the line of progress and of advance. Let us adopt the report of the committee. It does not meet every objection that may be raised to it, but it has so many good things in it that we can well close our eyes to the small matters contained in it to which there may be some objection.

Now, my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] may have ten minutes of my time if he promises to keep in order and behave himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCALES. I will promise to do so. With the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] for ten minutes, and take my ten minutes afterward.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HORR. Will the Chair inform me how much time I have under this arrangement?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman will have ten minutes.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that in looking over the report of this Committee on Rules I have come to conclusions which differ so widely from those expressed in the speeches which have been already made that I have felt it to be my bounden duty before this debate shall close to present to this House some of my objections to the wild report of the Committee on Rules.

I propose to speak, Mr. Chairman, as other members have done in behalf of the committee of which I am a member. [Laughter.] I represent the great Committee on Manufactures. Upon a careful examnation of these new rules I find that they, like the old rules, almost entirely ignore that very important committee. Why, sir, in looking over the history of the committees of this House I find that the Committee on Manufactures is one that comes down to us from the fathers. It was created away back in 1819, while your Committee on Appropriations was not born until 1865. [Laughter.] What do you think of that?

And yet it is proposed that your Committee on Appropriations shall run this House and leave this great Committee on Manufactures nothing to do. Why, sir, the House the other day took the only bill which our committee has had for eighteen years and referred it to the Committee on the Judiciary. [Laughter.]

Now upon examining the different committees of this House and their duties, I wish to say that I am satisfied that a large number of them should first report to the Committee on Manufactures before they report to the House at all. [Renewed laughter.] I have a list here of the different committees. There is the Committee of Elections. Now one would naturally think that that committee should never report to or have anything to do with the Committee on Manufactures. But if gentlemen will only reflect a minute upon the great amount of manufactured evidence which is brought before that committee [laughter] they will see at once that it should first report to the Committee on Manufactures in order that we may revise their work. Should they not? Certainly they should.

Next, there is the great Committee of Ways and Means, that towers so above all the rest and that stands "back to back" with the Committee on Appropriations. Well, I have got a couple of committees that I am going to back up together before I get through. [Great laughter.] There is the question of the tariff. That question affects every manufacturing interest in this whole land; and, consequently, before the Committee of Ways and Means undertakes to strike down any of the manufacturing interests of this country it should have the benefit of the wisdom of a committee that devotes itself to the study of manufactures. [Laughter.]

I see I shall have to hurry, because my time is limited [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"] There is the Committee on Appropriations. I confess it staggered me at first to see in what manner the action of that committee should be made contingent upon the action of the Committee on Manufactures. But upon looking back over the work of that committee in the past, I find that they have devoted much time to the making and the manufacturing of Presidents, by means of riders upon their appropriation bills, &c. [Laughter.] Now, all political action and manufactures of that sort should first have the revision of our old committee, and not be permitted to be decided by this new bantling that was born only in 1865. [Renewed laughter.]

Again, there is the Committee on Banking and Currency; and here I am very clear about it. [Laughter.] I want to appeal to the center of this House, to the great phalanx of my greenback friends.

Why, sir, if we should pass the bill to issue $450,000,000 of paper money for the benefit of the soldiers who had to take greenbacks during the war instead of gold, and if we should add thereto the $573,000,000,000 provided for by bills already introduced into this House, the question will cease to be a question of finance, and will reduce itself to a simple question of manufacturing capacity. [Laughter.] Thus it comes clearly within the duties of the great committee to which I belong. Hence I think the Committee on Banking and Currency should be compelled to report to us for advice in regard to making machinery, &c., to supply the great want of this nation as to a proper circulating medium.

But I must hasten on. I come next to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads. The road-bed and the building of the track of these railroads should certainly have the care and attention of our honorable chairman. Again, there is the Committee on Commerce. Now, I believe that they should report to the Committee on Appropriations, but to our committee first. [Laughter.] I hope they will not be sensitive about it, because after they once get to reporting to the Committee on Manufactures they will get, as it were, used to it, and it will not go so hard with them after that. [Laughter.] Look at the great interests represented by the Committee on Commerce—the jetties, the levees, the light-houses, the docks and piers that are building in this age of commerce, every one of which calls into power this business or manufacturing element of our committee. That is clear, certainly. If the Committee on Rules, with our honorable Speaker at its head, had thought of it, undoubtedly they would have provided that the Committee on Commerce should report to us.

Then comes the Committee on the Judiciary. I have some malice against them, because they stole the only bill we ever had. [Laughter.] It might appear that the effort to find some work of theirs which should properly be referred to us would be almost fruitless; but I do find that they are in the habit of "manufacturing" replies to veto messages. Now, that is clearly a matter in which they should have the supervising care of the Committee on Manufactures.

The Committee on Agriculture, I am satisfied, should be abolished and combined with our committee. I do not want to take up any time on that. [Laughter.]

Then comes the great Committee on Military Affairs. In regard to them I submit the same argument as in regard to the Committee on Commerce. It is well enough for them to report matters pertaining to expenditures of moneys directly to the Committee on Appropriations; but, sir, those great interests which tend to the building of forts, the erection of breastworks and arsenals, the manufacturing of shot and shell, concern deeply the manufacturing elements of this country, and should have the guardian care of this committee which has been so long ignored in this House. [Laughter.]

Now I come to the Committee on the Militia. That is a committee of which I am proud. I think they should stand pre-eminent, side by side with the Committee on Manufactures. You know, sir, that in the early part of this debate a distinguished gentleman in a very eloquent manner put the Appropriations Committee "back to back" with the great Committee of Ways and Means. Now, I should think that we should stand these two boys, the Committee on the Militia and the Committee on Manufactures, together in the same way. [Laughter.] It will be seen that the business of the Committee on the Militia pertains to war, to destruction, to tearing down. The business of the Committee on Manufactures is to build up, to repair the waste-places. The Committee on the Militia has to do with glistening sabers, fixed bayonets, columbiads, field-guns, and all the implements of war. The Committee on Manufactures has its arms full of implements of peace, including the implements of agriculture, if we can abolish the useless Committee on Agriculture. Thus we hold in our hands the implements that pertain to peaceful civilization. These two committees naturally stand facing in opposite directions, one looking toward war and blood, the other turning toward peace and industry. Is it not clear? [Laughter.]

I need not say that the remarks I have made in reference to the great Military Committee of the House apply equally to the Committee on Naval Affairs. My distinguished friend [Mr. WHITTHORNE] must see this, and I have no doubt that he will yield without any argument on the subject.

I now come to a rather difficult committee to deal with, the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have sought everywhere for something which this committee does which should enable us to claim some rights for our committee. It has troubled me a good deal. I consulted the chairman of the committee himself for aid, but he would not assist me. As near as I can make out the facts by my reading the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the last two years has been largely engaged in enabling the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to "manufacture" witticisms. Look, if you please, at his speech on green corn, which I read with so much interest, when delivered in a former Congress. I have a long acquaintance with that gentleman, through books only.

I came here with the highest respect for him, because I had followed him through Rome and Naples and Malta and Venice and Athens and Smyrna and Constantinople and Geneva, and the awful majesty of the Alps, when reading his book entitled The Buckeye Abroad. I had also followed him through Corsica, Algiers, and Spain, in that matchless work, Winter Sunbeams, and consequently I came here full of high hopes that the gentleman would give me great entertainment. When my seat was drawn I was unlucky; I got a seat over there under the green baize, and when the distinguished gentleman used to get up to speak I could not hear a syllable he said. This leads me to suggest another rule which ought to be adopted, one whereby members when they speak can get the ear of the House.

Mr. Chairman, if you knew how I have suffered, if you knew the good things in the speeches of the gentleman from New York which I lost when I first came here, you would know how to sympathize with me. [Laughter.] Finally I managed to overcome the difficulty. I learned to know by the expression of the gentleman's countenance when he was going to say a good thing, so I laughed and cheered, and the next morning I looked up the RECORD to find out whether I had laughed in the right place, and came to be astonished at the accuracy with which I had hit it. [Great laughter.]

I have one or two things more to say, and then I shall have done with this important question. I now come to deal directly with the Committee on Rules themselves. I desire to state to the Committee on Rules that if they had in the first place submitted their work to the Committee on Manufactures we should not have been in the tangle we are in to-day. The Committee on Rules undoubtedly have capacity for originating, they are men of keen intellect, but when they come to build up the structure, there is where it seems to me they lack; we have only to look at the way their work has been handled for the last four or five days to see where they failed. Why, sir, it has become perfectly appalling, and I do think, but I may be mistaken about this, that if they had availed themselves of the building capacity of our Committee on Manufactures this trouble might have been avoided. [Laughter.]

There is one other special committee which I must touch on and then I am done, and that is the one headed by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WRIGHT,] a committee which went in search of general depression last summer. [Laughter.] I had an impression when that committee was organized that it was for the purpose of humiliating the committee of which I am a member, [laughter,] and therefore if they come to any bad end it is no more than I had expected, [laughter,] for, sir, men when they seize upon something which does not by right belong to them are rather apt to fail.

I have studied the history of that search after general depression which was made by that committee. I followed them during the summer to Chicago. Well, Chicago was an unfortunate city to look for the "general," because every industry in Chicago was on the boom, every single enterprise in the State of Illinois was looking up. I believe they did take the testimony of a few individuals and then wended their ways gently to Salt Lake City. [Laughter.] They thought perhaps among the Mormons they should find the manufacturing element at its lowest ebb. [Great laughter and applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, they even scaled the Sierras and brought up on the slopes of the beautiful Pacific, and there they irrigated the sand-lots. [Laughter.] One convention had the impudence to nominate our revered friend for President of the United States—not according to his wishes, but in spite of them. [Laughter.] There have been candidates before him in this country who have been nominated for that office when they did not desire to be.

But the committee came back without finding anything. If they had referred at the start to the Committee on Manufactures we should have helped them out. If they wanted to find general depression they should have gone into Ohio and looked among our democratic brethren there just after the election. [Laughter.] The depression would have been discovered there with well-defined symptoms. Why, sir, the gentleman could have found the same thing among his democratic brethren in Pennsylvania. And just after the election there—but I am not going to trace his wanderings further.

All I have to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, is that this is a serious subject, and I do hope when we get through with the investigation of the report of this Committee on Rules justice at least may be done this old time-honored committee which I have the honor to represent. [Laughter and applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and the transfer of certain counties from the northern to the southern district of said State, with an amendment, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater, without amendment.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. WRIGHT. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. WRIGHT. I yield it all to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.]

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that this debate has assumed the shape it has. I regret that any issue has been made with the Committee on Commerce. I regret that committee seems to entertain the idea that any attack was made upon it by anybody. I do not understand the report of the Committee on Rules in that way, and I do not believe it can be tortured to mean any such thing. I take pleasure in saying that anything I shall say is not meant, even to the slightest extent, in derogation of the Committee on Commerce. I know many of those gentlemen, and there is not a committee in the House which I believe deserves and has more the confidence of the House than the Committee on Commerce. That that committee has labored faithfully, honestly, and conscientiously to discharge their whole duty I have never entertained a doubt, and if I considered this report in any way as an attack upon that committee, I would be one of the first to come to its defense, and especially to the defense of my old friend, the chairman of that committee, whom I have so long and so favorably known. But I do not so consider it; and I do not think it can be fairly so considered or interpreted by anybody.

If, then, sir, it is not an attack on that committee, let us next inquire what is the question that this House is called upon to decide so far as that committee is concerned. I understand it to be simply this, and I hope I may have for a moment the attention of the chairman of that committee, to see if we cannot find some common ground upon which we can both stand; I am anxious, Mr. Chairman, whenever different views are entertained on any subject and a discussion is had, first to find out the points, if any, of agreement between us, and invoke their aid in coming to a conclusion.

I understood my friend to say the other day—and it was what I expected of him, and what I thought he ought to say, and what I am convinced he will repeat now—that, as an individual member of this House, any bill, from any committee, appropriating a large amount of money for any purpose, ought to have its consideration in Committee of the Whole House, where it may be discussed and amended. I understood that to be the position that my friend occupied, and I was gratified with it, but not surprised. Any gentleman of this House who has observed his course, and all must have done so, heretofore, on all subjects, and has witnessed how often and how long, like a great rock, he has stood up and dashed back the waves of extravagance which so often threaten to overthrow us, will not be surprised at his admission.

Then, if I am not mistaken in this, the gentleman from Texas, the gentleman from West Virginia, and all of the other gentlemen on the Committe on Commerce agree that it is desirable that no appropriation reported to this House shall be passed without full consideration in Committee of the Whole. Now, sir, is this right or wrong? If that is right, and we agree, we have taken an important step in reaching a just conclusion.

Now, sir, the history of these bills for the last four or five years will prove, and the developments of this extended debate will prove that under the rules as they exist no bill will ever be reported by that committee except upon a suspension of the rules, and it will become a law without debate or amendment, or even an opportunity for either. Will any gentleman on that committee dare now say that he expects to pass a bill at this session or at any future time, except by a suspension of the rules, which smothers all debate, all amendments, and all investigation by the House? This is a great wrong.

Then, sir, if I am correct in this, here is the position we are in: No bill from the Committee on Commerce will ever pass this House unless by a suspension of the rules, and yet we all agree that it ought not to be done. Now, sir, is there no remedy for this? Is it not possible to frame a rule which will remedy it? Is it not to be expected that this House will consider that question maturely, and so frame its rules that they shall understand what they are doing, and yet do what the great interests of this country require for the rivers and harbors? I think so. All agree that something ought to be done, and surely it can and will be done.

I beg for a moment to read what my friend from Texas said the other day. He says: "I will premise what I have to say on this subject by stating that there is no bill which comes before Congress that requires so much labor." I grant it. "So much time." I grant it. "And so much constant application on the part of the committee preparing the bill appropriating the money for rivers and harbors." I grant all of that, sir. It is a laborious committee; it is an honored committee; it is a committee that I am willing to trust, but I ask that committee if they will tell the House and the country that the bill which has taken them, by their own admission, three months or four months or six months to consider and prepare should be passed in this House under a suspension of the rules in less than half an hour? Will my friend go to his constituents, will he go to the people of this great country, and say that a bill so important, requiring so much time and so much labor from one of the most intelligent committees of this House, should pass the House in less time than half an hour? A bill, too, which scatters $8,000,000 all over the country.

What do we know about it? What opportunity have the members for being informed as to the bill which they present? Just think of this, and let us pause that we may consider it. The fact cannot be denied, and no gentleman will dare do it. If it takes them three months, surely we cannot understand it or act intelligently on it in half an hour. It is impossible.

I think we have agreed that something ought to be done on all hands. The Committee on Rules have offered a remedy, and if there is no better we will take that. I am willing myself to take this report from the Committee on Rules, with some slight amendments, just as it is. I commend them for it, and I say, in my judgment, that it is the best thing for economy that can be done—economy of time and economy of money.

And I trust that when we come to decide this question we will decide it outside of what our particular districts may want in the way of commerce, that we will decide with a view of having legislation brought into this House under that old honored rule which ought never to be abolished and ought never to be ignored: that every appropriation shall be considered in Committee of the Whole. It is an old rule. I trust it will be a perpetual one.

I hold in my hand a bill reported by the Committee on Commerce. I have not a word to say about the appropriations in it. I know there was no corruption. I know it was well considered by that committee. But I appeal to every member who hears me—I appeal to every gentleman who voted for it, and I ask him to tell the country honestly and truly, did he know one thing about anything in this bill except the appropriation for his own particular district? Not one; and yet it passed the House by a two-thirds majority. Why, Mr. Chairman? I ask the House why? I ask the country why it was done? It was done because every State was provided for; and a two-thirds vote was gotten because every State was provided for, and that, too, when the member in most cases who voted for it knew nothing of the merits of the works in any other State than his own. That is the truth. I speak it because it is the truth, and I mean no reflection upon anybody. Of course I do not allude to the members of the Committee on Commerce. I believe they do know. But I speak of those gentlemen who are not on that committee. Some gentleman says I am mistaken. Tell me how it is that a bill that has required the attention for three long months of the Committee on Commerce shall be mastered in this House by any man, I care not how great his intellect, in half an hour, and then you may show I am mistaken, and not till then. It is no mistake.

Mr. KENNA. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to make a suggestion in connection with his present line of remark.

Mr. SCALES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KENNA. It has been, so long as I have been here, the uniform practice in reference to the river and harbor bill after its preparation has been completed by the Committee on Commerce, to have it printed and recommitted and the printed bill distributed so as to put it at the disposal of every member of the House. The reports of the engineers are already printed, so that they are at the disposal of every member of the House. And I submit in connection with the observation of the gentleman from North Carolina that there is no reason, under the system under which that bill has heretofore been passed, why every member of this House who desires and will take the pains cannot inform himself about every single item in that bill. I know how difficult it is for members with the various duties which press upon them to do that. But there is no reason why any member cannot do that if he desires.

Mr. MILLS. May I say in addition to my friend from North Carolina, he knows very well and all of us know the great body of our legislation is on the reports of committees. There is very little discussion in the House on any question. We have mostly to take the reports of committees. My friend saw in the last Congress, and so did I, a bill from the Committee of Ways and Means fixing a debt of seven or eight hundred millions of dollars upon the people of the United States, and which was put through the House under the gag law, and no man was permitted to offer an amendment. What is the difference between that and suspending the rules and passing the river and harbor bill by a two-thirds majority?

Mr. SCALES. My friend asks me what is the difference between passing the river and harbor bill under suspension of the rules and passing such a bill as that he refers to under the operation of the gag law. Ordinarily there is no justification for doing either, and I am against both. That is my answer. One wrong is not made right by another.

Mr. MILLS. That is the practice.

Mr. SCALES. If it is the practice it is a bad practice, and the sooner my friend from Texas joins me in condemning it and putting an end to it the better it will be for his constituents and the country.

Mr. MILLS. I have always contended for the largest debate on all of these questions.

Mr. SCALES. I am glad the gentleman is a convert; and I ask him to bring his distinguished abilities to support and aid the passing of this rule, which I am sure will be of vast service to the country.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman will join me I will make an effort to repeal the rule that permits any bill to pass by a two-thirds vote under suspension of the rules. But I am not disposed to discriminate especially against the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SCALES. If I cannot repeal the thing entirely I will go to the utmost extent of my ability in endeavoring to limit it.

Mr. MILLS. But I will not repeal that part of the system which benefits my constituents and leave that portion that is against their interests.

Mr. SCALES. Neither should I. Any limitation is better than nothing for all our constituents. I find I have spoken longer than I intended. I will make just one further remark.

My friend from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] says the reports of the engineers and the reports of the committee are in the possession of the House some time before action. Now, my friend knows very well that so much time is occupied in the preparation of the river and harbor bill that the Committee on Commerce is at work on it until just before, and never more than four or five days before, it comes before this House. Members, therefore, have not the opportunity of reading carefully the bill, much less the reports of the engineers, under the pressure of other duties. But if my friend will join me in reporting this to the House, then when I get up and ask why this or that appropriation is recommended in Michigan, or any other State, he will answer, as I know he will be able to do, because he is always posted in the duties intrusted to his committee, and then I can vote intelligently and this House can vote intelligently. But without it my friend condemns me to darkness, and forces me to vote without any opportunity of knowing what I am voting for.

Mr. KENNA. I know how thoroughly sincere my friend is in his opposition to this measure, and partly on that account I would like, if it will not annoy him, to make one further suggestion.

Mr. SCALES. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. Under the rules of the House as they now stand the Committee on Commerce may report a river and harbor appropriation bill, as the Committee on Appropriations may report any regular appropriation bill, at any time for reference to the Committee of the Whole for consideration. But under the proposed change of the rules, as embodied in the report of the Committee on Rules, they cannot do that. They must bring their bill in here in one of two ways, either for reference to the Committee on Appropriations for revision by that committee——

Mr. SCALES. I cannot permit my friend to make an argument to sustain his side of the question; I have yielded only for a question.

Mr. KENNA. I was about to state that under the proposed change of the rules the Committee on Commerce could bring in the river and harbor appropriation bill in only one of two ways: either for reference to the Committee on Appropriations for revision by that committee, or under a suspension of the rules. Now, that is the point to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman. The Committee on Commerce, if this proposed amendment to the rules be adopted, can never get their bill into the Committee of the Whole House except through the Committee on Appropriations. And I submit to the gentleman now that it never will go there through that channel.

Mr. SCALES. I do not understand my friend to be willing to submit that appropriation bill for debate in Committee of the Whole. If he should be, I think it likely that he can have a provision of the rules to that effect passed by the House. If he is willing to do that, I think his object can be accomplished. But my friend from West Virginia said the other day that there was a power in this House that was determined to make these appropriations. I was sorry to hear him say that; I was sorry to hear that there was a power in this House always to pass such a bill without light or without information and without the power of objection.

Mr. KENNA. Oh, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SCALES. And then I could not but remember how that power was obtained. Sir, there is nothing from which we ought to guard ourselves so much in this Hall as against ourselves.

> When self the wavering balance shakes,
> 'Tis rarely right adjusted.

Mr. KENNA. I am sure the gentleman does not desire to do me injustice.

Mr. SCALES. I cannot yield further.

Mr. KENNA. Allow me to state that what I said was that there was a power in this country demanding these appropriations, and that there was a power in this House that would respond to that demand in the passage of these bills. I did not say that they would be passed in this way or in any other way, but upon the merits of the question, for the improvement of the commercial highways of the country.

Mr. SCALES. If I have done my friend any injustice, I will withdraw my remarks. I understood him to say that there was a power in this House that could and would respond to that demand, and I show that that was the only way in which that power can be created in this House.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question affecting the practical working of the rule as proposed by the committee?

Mr. SCALES. I am not on that question now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCALES. I am sorry for it.

Mr. KENNA. If I can take the floor in my own right, I will be glad to do so for the purpose of yielding to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.] I have taken up some of his time by interruptions, and do not want to shorten the time he may need for presenting his argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can take the floor in his own right, no other gentleman claiming it.

Mr. KENNA. I do so only for the purpose of yielding further time to the gentleman, if he desires it.

Mr. SCALES. I am very much obliged to my friend; I shall want only a few minutes.

I wish to call the attention of this House to one other consideration. We were told the other day, and it has not been controverted, that these appropriations have been increasing year by year until they have gone up from one million to nearly ten millions of dollars. I believe that is not controverted.

Mr. REAGAN. Between seven and eight millions, I believe, is the highest figure.

Mr. SCALES. Very well, from one million to seven or eight millions. That has been done in a very short series of years. How has it been done? Has it been done by enlightened legislation? It has been, I admit, so far as that honorable committee is concerned. But has it been done by enlightened legislation of this House? Have you, my friend, who have so long and efficiently served the country, [Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois,] done your duty in that regard? Yes, just as far as you could do it. The rules of the House denied you an opportunity to call for the necessary information; you have not looked into this matter, because you were shackled by the rules of the House and could not shake them off.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me a word in reference to the amount?

Mr. SCALES. That is not material. There has been an increase, and I am not particular about the amount.

In view of this increase which has been going on, I ask the House and the country whether it is not time to reverse these rules.

These expenditures are but a rivulet now, and the committee may now be trusted to look after and govern it. But another day is coming. This country is enlarging. Extravagance is growing every year. Extravagance is getting almost to be the virtue and economy the vice in the legislation of this country. The day will come when this rivulet will become a torrent, sweeping everything before it, when my friend from Texas and my friend from West Virginia will be on another field of action. The day will come when your precedent will be repeated here and have all the sanction of law. The day will come when a bill will be offered in this House that will appropriate two hundred million, yea, five hundred million, dollars, and no man will have the power to raise his voice against it. You are setting the example now, and you may repent it in sackcloth and ashes. You are making that precedent, and you know not to what it will come. I know this, that in the course of six or eight years these bills have increased in amount from $1,000,000 to $8,000,000. I know that the same process which appropriates $8,000,000 can appropriate $50,000,000; and the same process which appropriates $50,000,000 can appropriate $500,000,000. I call upon gentlemen to pause. I ask the House to avail itself of the present opportunity.

The Committee on Rules has done a noble and good work, and I ask gentlemen from all parts of the country to assist in it—in no hostility to river and harbor bills, in no hostility to every proper national work of internal improvement, but with the single view of protecting this country against irresponsible and reckless legislation.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from North Carolina, before he takes his seat, allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SCALES. Certainly.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Does the gentleman know of any rule by which the will of two-thirds of the members of this House can be or ought to be defeated?

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any rule by which the will of two-thirds of this House ought to be defeated. But I am asking this House now to so amend its rules as not to allow even two-thirds to act without debate and amendment.

I am submitting that even two-thirds of the House ought not to pass an appropriation bill of this kind without giving the Representatives of the people the opportunity of discussing it and showing that it is right.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman one other question?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. When two-thirds of the members of this House have combined, as is charged, for a particular purpose, such as the passage of a river and harbor bill, what is the use of discussing a foregone conclusion? The gentleman speaks of a combination for that particular purpose. Now, does he propose to take up the time of the House discussing for weeks and months a proposition that must pass under this combination which he charges against the friends of river and harbor improvements?

Mr. SCALES. I most assuredly do. If men will sin, let them sin against light and knowledge. I propose that we consider the measure in Committee of the Whole and give gentlemen every opportunity to know what they are doing, and if they fail they must answer to their constituents.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I think it probable that two-thirds of the House have as much light as one-third.

Mr. SCALES. But the two-thirds have not the light, and they deliberately determine that they will not have it nor permit the one-third who want it to have it. When a man knows his own district is provided for he is, I fear, little concerned about the light which should fall upon the balance.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose in taking the floor to do anything more than yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] in order to enable him to finish his remarks, as I had interrupted him during his own time. Having the opportunity, however, I will say a word in reply to what the gentleman has said in his comments on remarks of mine on this subject. Nothing could have been further from my intention in making the statement that there was a power in this country demanding, and a power in this House which would co-operate with that demand for appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors than to intimate that there was any combination or understanding existing on the subject, or that there was any purpose either in the House or out of it to aid appropriations other than those which are wise, expedient, and just. If I was so understood, I was very grossly and unfortunately misunderstood.

In reference to the effect of the proposed amendment which has been discussed by the gentleman from North Carolina, I have said to him, and I repeat, that under the rules as they now exist the Committee on Commerce may bring the river and harbor bill into the House for reference to the Committee of the Whole for consideration at any time. They can do this, and I have no doubt that upon any proper occasion they will be glad to do it. But under this proposed amendment to the rules they cannot do it, no matter if every member of the committee desires such a course to be taken.

Mr. SCALES. Would the gentleman be willing to amend the rules so that the Committee on Commerce, instead of sending their bill before the Committee on Appropriations, shall be compelled to bring it before the House and have it discussed in Committee of the Whole? I would join him in advocating such a rule.

Mr. KENNA. That depends, Mr. Chairman, upon what the gentleman means by the word "compelled." If he means to suggest the adoption of any rule which would prevent the House, by a two-thirds majority, from doing what they pleased within the limits of the Constitution, I am opposed to it in reference to the river and harbor bill or any other bill. I see no reason why a majority embracing two-thirds of the members of the House should not have control of any subject coming here at any time to dispose of it in their own manner; and I see no reason why, under their responsibility to the country, their judgment and conviction of right should not better be consulted than the judgment and conviction of a mere minority of one-third of the members on this floor.

Mr. SCALES. I do not want to do my friend injustice, but if what he states now is in accordance with what he stated the other day, then I did him injustice. I understood him to say that it was a matter which was desirable that all these appropriation bills should go before the Committee of the Whole; that that rule was a good one in itself. Does he think so now?

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman did not misunderstand me. I think the rule which requires the consideration of appropriation bills first in the Committee of the Whole is a good one. I have no desire to change it. I have no objection to its standing as the rule in reference to the river and harbor bill, as well as to the other bills; but I do say, at the same time, and with perfect consistency with the idea that the rule shall exist, that it should be in the power of two-thirds of this House to suspend that rule and pass the river and harbor bill or any other bill on any proper occasion, when such motion to suspend shall command the support of such a majority.

Mr. SCALES. One other question, and I will not interrupt the gentleman any further. If the gentleman should become satisfied as I am that no river and harbor bill can be presented to the House in the future except by a suspension of the rules, would he then be in favor of any rule or any means by which it could be forced to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENNA. Ah! Mr. Chairman, that changes the phase of this entire discussion. If it be meant by this proposition to adopt a rule which shall require that bill to be disposed of in the anomalous way proposed, for the purpose of defeating it—and I have already called the attention of the House to that object—then I can well understand why a minority of one-third of this House, and even less, should struggle, in opposition to this bill, for a control which would lead to its suppression and its death. We would then have the spectacle of a bill commanding the support of over two-thirds of the members on this floor and yet failing because one-third, and a mere faction, desired its defeat. There are those, I am aware, who are anxious to say practically by these rules that no river and harbor bill shall pass. But I do not occupy that position in reference to the improvement of the commercial highways of this country.

I will say further to the gentleman that the very object which he desires to accomplish, as I understand him, the consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole, can best be accomplished by the rule as it now stands. It cannot be accomplished at all as the rule is proposed to be amended. As one member of the Committee on Commerce and one member of other committees on this floor, I now say to him and I say to this House I shall never consent to devote my time and whatever of energy and ability I may possess to the preparation of any bill and then report it for revision by another committee which I know cannot in the nature of things have the same opportunity to investigate and understand its merits which I myself enjoyed. I will not do it; and I believe on that subject I represent the sentiments of every member on that committee, and I believe, sir, I may safely say the sentiments of every member of every other committee. I do not believe any intelligent committee of this House, and they are all so, will ever allow itself willingly to be put in that position.

Mr. SPARKS. If that were made the rule, would you not observe the rule?

Mr. KENNA. I would either obey the rule or invoke the power, namely, a two-third majority of this House, to suspend it. In this particular case I should move such suspension if I got the floor to do it, and if I could not command the floor, I should do all I could to induce some other member to take the floor for that purpose. That rule as you propose to amend it I should never fail to move to suspend.

Mr. SPARKS. You say you would not now do it for reference to any other committee, but that you would do it if it were the rule?

Mr. KENNA. No; I would not do it if it were the rule.

Mr. SPARKS. Then you would be revolutionary.

Mr. KENNA. No, sir; I would not be revolutionary. It would not be revolutionary to suspend that rule any more than to suspend any other, and I would not be anything more than in the line of propriety; because I should have the right, and could enjoy it as far as my vote and influence would extend, to offer a bill under a suspension of the rules, instead of having it smothered by reference to a committee that would never have time to give it the consideration it deserved.

Mr. Chairman, there are some other things which have been said on this subject of which I think some notice should be taken. One is an undercurrent of insinuation running through this whole debate insofar as it has been indulged in by gentlemen who are hostile to the river and harbor bill, to the effect that there is a purpose in the preparation of that bill and a purpose in offering it under a suspension of the rules to prevent any intelligent investigation of it on the part of members on this floor and to avoid the opportunity by the House in Committee of the Whole to look into every item embraced in it.

If I can have the attention of the House for a few moments longer I think I can satisfy the House how erroneous such an impression is, and how great injustice it does to the members of the committee engaged in the preparation of that bill. It has been fully stated here that the intelligent preparation of the river and harbor bill involves the examination of a vast amount of printed and manuscript matter in the reports of the engineers. It has been correctly stated that the preparation involves so much time and so much labor that it is impossible to report the bill at an early day in the session. Now, take the rules as they have existed heretofore until the amendment made in the last session of the last Congress. Take, for illustration, the short session of Congress, embracing three months. The Committee on Commerce was unable in the last short session to prepare the bill for presentation to the House until about the middle of February. Under the rules they were unable to report it at any time even for reference to the Committee of the Whole for consideration. They were unable to report it except when the Committee on Commerce was regularly called for reports, and the condition of the Calendar was then such that there was no prospect of the committee being called, and as a matter of fact it was not again called during that session.

Now, sir, under the rules of the House and the very necessities of the case, what was to be done with that bill? It had either to be brought here under a motion to suspend the rules and pass it or it had to die in the committee of its creation. It has not within my own experience and observation been always the choice of the Committee on Commerce to bring the bill into the House in that manner, but they have been obliged to do it from necessity. They have been obliged to do it under the condition of the rules in order to have it considered; and I warn gentlemen who are opposed to that system that if we adopt this proposed amendment to the rule it will not better the situation. It will place that committee where at least in every short session of Congress that bill must of necessity be offered here and passed in that way or be allowed to die in committee.

And I say further, Mr. Chairman, that in the interest of investigation by this House, and in the interest of those who desire that this bill shall go to the Committee of the Whole for consideration, it is far better to vote down this proposed amendment and leave it within the power of the Commerce Committee, as they now enjoy it under the rule, to bring that bill in at any time for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Under that system they may, and I doubt not on all proper occasions when there is time enough to do it and the House desires it they will, have an opportunity to consider the bill in that way; but under the rule proposed for our adoption that committee, so far as I believe or desire, never will report the bill for reference to another committee. The only course left open to the bill under this amendment will be its passage under a suspension of the rules.

I have desired the House to understand that the passage of the bill in the manner described has been oftentimes the result of necessity, a necessity enforced by a condition of the rules secured by members entertaining a hostile spirit toward that bill, thus forcing the very issue they themselves desired to avert and avoid. And I predict that the extreme antagonism manifested here toward the river and harbor bill will again fail to be productive of good results.

Mr. McLANE. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question?

Mr. KENNA. Certainly.

Mr. McLANE. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia to the point that the Committee on Commerce, and the amendments proposed by the chairman of that committee for the consideration of this House, not only have no reference to the mode of passing the bill, but he disclaims all purpose of asking a suspension of the rules; that he distinctly stated to this House that the rules, the old and the new rules, permit this House to pass the bill under a suspension of the rules or not, as the House pleases, but for himself he did not propose to pass the bill under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. KENNA. I understand it to be a fact that the chairman of the committee has indicated a desire in that direction, but on that subject I must say, so far as I am concerned individually, I desire to make no committal whatever. I prefer to adapt my action to the occasion that may confront me.

Mr. McLANE. That is all right. I wish the gentleman from West Virginia to speak for himself in reference to this subject of suspending the rules.

Mr. KENNA. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have not undertaken to speak for anybody else.

I shall be as willing as any member on this floor, at any time when I believe the time of the House and the circumstances surrounding the subject will justify it, to bring that bill here as any other bill is brought here for consideration in the Committee of the Whole. From my observation in connection with the preparation of the bill, it can as well stand that test as any bill which is passed by Congress.

But if the period of the session shall be advanced, and the time necessary for the preparation of the bill and the condition of the Calendar shall make it necessary for the bill to be brought here and offered under a motion to suspend the rules and passed in that way or not at all, I am unwilling to say that I shall not support its passage, as it has been done heretofore. I should unhesitatingly do so if the bill itself commended itself to my support. I can see no reason, for the life of me, why it is not as proper and right that I shall vote for a bill that I want passed under a suspension of the rules as readily as in any other way. If I am for it, I am for it, and I will vote accordingly. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has forty minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. KENNA. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. One would think, Mr. Chairman, from hearing the remarks of my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] and perhaps of other gentlemen on this floor, that it was the rule of this House only to pass upon measures after mature deliberation and free discussion. I imagine that that is a grave mistake. The legislation in this House is carried through under the operation of the previous question, saving alone appropriation bills. Every gentleman knows very well how foolish it is to attempt to withstand the chairman of a committee when he comes into the House and says he is ordered by his committee to call the previous question on a measure. The thumb-screws are put on, and every one of us has to vote with the best light he can, but without any discussion.

What is the difference between that sort of legislation and permitting a gentleman, on his own responsibility, to answer to his constituents to vote for suspending the rules? My objection to suspending the rules arises from the fact that a gentleman has not the opportunity to inform himself how he should vote on a question. We see how it is on "wash-day," as it is called, when, on every Monday, political party questions are submitted, when party lines are to be defined, when party traps are to be set, one party trying to catch another, we are compelled to vote under the rule on measures without knowing anything about the measures we are called to vote upon. On a matter of appropriation, and that alone, as it has to go generally to the Committee of the Whole, we have the exalted privilege of a five-minute debate, and then we must vote. But what happens if we offer an amendment? Let any man endeavor to antagonize his party and offer an amendment; let him have the temerity to suppose a committee of this House is even fallible on a question it has reported, and soon he hears the crack of the party whip, soon he sees the chairman and other members of the committee going around and calling the party to whip down the revolutionary spirit that has arisen in the ranks. If he dares to question the infallibility of the committee that has made the report, what is the result? He is voted down. His party all sustain the report of the committee. What, then, is the use of the discussion? What is the use, under such circumstances, of mocking a man with the right to offer an amendment when it is impracticable for him to have it ingrafted on a bill, no matter how much it may be required by the interests of his constituents.

We are told about the great error of passing improvident legislation. Some gentlemen appear to arrogate to themselves the right to call a two-thirds majority of the House to its bar and to lecture them about improprieties in legislation. I beg gentlemen to remember that so far as I am concerned I recognize but one tribunal in this country as having jurisdiction to call me to account for any improprieties I may commit on this floor. I answer to my constituents, and to them alone, and no gentleman, I care not what may be his influence, has a right to charge me with being guilty of improvident legislation. If he is disposed to do so he arrogates to himself a power that does not belong to him.

Mr. KENNA. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. REAGAN. I sympathize very much in the view of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] when he expresses the wish that this House may be enabled to consider the river and harbor bill, and any other bill appropriating large sums of money, in Committee of the Whole, where it would be subject to free debate and amendment. I expressed as much in the opening remarks I made on this subject, and I understand why it is that gentlemen should urge a special exception to the general rule on the subject and insist that this particular bill should be acted upon in the Committee of the Whole. That no doubt results from the practice of the House for a number of years past in suspending the rules and passing this bill.

That practice has called attention to this matter; the large amount of money involved in these appropriations has called attention to it; the various interests affected by it have called attention to it. Hence I am not surprised that gentlemen have their minds especially directed to something that will compel the placing of this particular bill in the Committee of the Whole. But, while I repeat that I sympathize with that feeling and think that good may result from the bill being required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, I must now express myself, as I did in my opening remarks upon this subject, that I had rather an express rule was not made discriminating against the Committee on Commerce in reporting this particular bill, but that the rule may stand as to reports from this committee as it stands in regard to reports from the Committee on Appropriations and the other committees; that the rules may be suspended if two-thirds have demanded it; or, if one-third of the House thinks it proper, the bill shall be carried into the Committee of the Whole.

I think, as I have already said, that at least good may come from the consideration of a bill like this in Committee of the Whole; good may come in more ways than one. In the first place, that will give this House an opportunity to understand the principles upon which such a bill is made up. In the second place, it will give the House an opportunity to correct errors in the bill itself, and to make it a more perfect bill. And in the next place, it will protect the Committee on Commerce itself. When eleven men, or, as it is now, fifteen men, are charged with the duty of preparing such a bill as this, I recognize the fact that there is much human nature lodged in every breast, and that partiality to local interests can hardly be excluded from human consideration. Therefore it has seemed to me, and I say it so seems to me now, that this bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

I am perfectly willing to say now that if it be the judgment of this House, should we of the Committee on Commerce be charged this session with the duty of reporting such a bill, I would be glad to see it go before the Committee of the Whole for free discussion and amendment. Besides, the committee may by an error of judgment, by accident, or otherwise, be induced to make appropriations which may not be clearly warranted by the spirit of the Constitution. When we get such a bill before the Committee of the Whole members will have an opportunity to consider all such questions, and if we have fallen into the error of attempting to extend our work too far, then this House will correct those errors.

I say this because many gentlemen have expressed their anxiety that there be a special rule requiring that to be done. Now, while I do not desire such a special rule, because it would seem to be invidious, and also, it seems to me, it would be unnecessary, I supplement that statement with the statement that, so far as I as an individual am concerned, I desire to see the river and harbor appropriation bill go before the Committee of the Whole for consideration, and I desire it for many reasons which seem to me to be good.

Mr. KENNA. I now yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] after which I will yield the remainder of my hour to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

Mr. SPARKS. I had not thought of troubling the House with any remarks of mine upon this subject. My conviction has been that all of these appropriation bills ought to come from one general committee, namely, the Committee on Appropriations. But the Committee on Commerce, for some inscrutable reason, has arrogated to itself the making up and presenting to this House of what is known as the river and harbor appropriation bill. Why it is that that special subject belongs to the Committee on Commerce more than the naval appropriation bill does to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or the Army appropriation bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, or why, in fact, there is as good reason for that appropriation bill to go to that committee as there is that the other bills which I have named should go to those respective committees, I certainly am unable to see. It seems to me that the Committee on Agriculture would have as much right to take charge of the river and harbor bill as the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. If my friend will allow me, and I do not interrupt him too much——

Mr. SPARKS. I have only ten minutes' time.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state one reason which the gentleman will recognize, and it is a reason which I have already stated. It is that the consideration of this bill and the making it up would be a practical impossibility to the Committee on Appropriations, charged with all their other duties. It is nearly impossible for that committee to do that work and at the same time perform the other duties assigned to it.

Mr. SPARKS. I have had a little experience, Mr. Chairman, in the making up of appropriation bills. I cannot see why the Committee on Appropriations cannot just as well make up a bill containing appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as it can any other appropriation bill, and in fact it was originally intended that all of these bills should be prepared and reported by that committee, including the river and harbor. Now, sir, to prepare bills making appropriations for the Army and for the Navy, or any of the other bills, requires much labor and diligent research to obtain necessary information touching the subject to be appropriated for, and I do not see any difference in the method by which information can be obtained with respect to the river and harbor bill. The heads of the Departments supply most of the information necessary for all of these different subjects. It is the business of the Committee on Appropriations to look over not only the estimates sent to them by the Departments, but to satisfy themselves upon the subjects in hand, and from any and all sources to get all the attainable information needed to thoroughly understand the subject, and not rely upon estimates, which are known to be very imperfect. Why not, therefore, get this information with respect to the river and harbor bill as well as any other subject?

I do not think there is anything in that argument. I do not see any reason for this discrimination, unless, indeed, the Committee on Commerce has something in its composition that makes it peculiarly qualified to perform this business better than any other equal number of gentlemen. Those gentlemen seem to be sensitive about preparing a bill which shall go to the Committee on Appropriations. Sir, the river and harbor bill belongs to the Committee on Appropriations under your rules and under the practice of this House. Why not, therefore, (unless it is deemed best to reform this whole subject,) let it remain in that committee? It is insisted that the character of the work necessary to get up this bill is not adapted to the Appropriations but is peculiarly adapted to the Commerce Committee. I cannot understand that. Why, sir, the Committee on Appropriations will simply have to investigate the subject, prepare and report the bill, and the Committee on Commerce can do no more. Why take it away from the committee and give it in charge of another committee, without you do the same thing with the other bills I have mentioned? I can see no reason in this.

But, sir, I do not care to discuss that matter further. I have thought that some general provision might possibly be advantageously made which would allow all appropriation bills to be matured by the committees charged with the respective subjects committed to them, namely: the naval appropriation bill by the Committee on Naval Affairs; the Army appropriation bill by the Committee on Military Affairs; the Indian bill by the Indian Committee; the postal bill by the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee, &c., and, if you please, the Committee on Commerce prepare the river and harbor appropriation bill, and then have all those bills referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which committee, having the estimated aggregate expenditures and the estimated aggregate receipts before them, can cut their garment according to their cloth. I have thought that such a rule as this might be really beneficial in our legislation. But I care little about it, for the present rule on that subject has been tried, and has worked reasonably well, while a change would necessarily involve an experiment.

But this discussion has gone beyond all that; and it was of this I wanted to speak a moment. I have sat here and heard gentlemen insinuate that members who have opposed these river and harbor bills have been demagoging. I have seen these bills go through this House and become laws when, in my judgment, three-quarters of the money appropriated by them might just as well have been sunk in the bottom of the sea. That is "my opinion," as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] stated the other day. Bills of this kind making appropriations of over $8,000,000 have been passed through this House, under suspension of the rules, without discussion and without the privilege of amending them.

Now, sir, I would like by some amendment of the rules to change this wild, reckless manner of legislating on a subject that involves so much of interest to the people, and from whom such large sums of money are thus extravagantly taken.

I do not charge these honorable gentlemen with combination; but I want to state a fact that is patent to every member of this House, and that is that "combinations" are easily formed upon a bill of this kind. You get [turning to Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois] $50,000 for Duck Creek in your region, and you vote for the whole bill. Another member gets $100,000 for Elk Creek, and he votes for the whole bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. If I live on Duck Creek am I not a better judge of the wants of that stream than men who live in a remote part of the country?

Mr. SPARKS. But if Duck Creek properly requires an appropriation of $50,000, it does not follow that Elk Creek should have $100,000; and yet under the combination you must and do vote for the whole bill. I am not charging any gentleman with wrong. I am simply stating a fact within the knowledge of every member of the House—that bills have gone through this House appropriating millions of dollars upon that principle.

Here is my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. ROBERTSON.] He wants to improve the Mississippi River. I believe that $25,000,000 could be appropriated for that purpose at this hour with benefit to the whole country. I am willing to vote such an appropriation, but I do not want to appropriate money for the Kiskiminetas, or the Wicomico, or Conemaugh, or Acquia Creek, and every other little stream or moist piece of ground extending from some man's house down to the river adjacent.

Under this system a bill is presented here, to be voted upon under a suspension of the rules, embracing appropriations differing vastly in merit—some which ought to be made and some which clearly ought not; and the bill not being subject to amendment nor even discussion, members are called upon to vote for or against it as a whole. Now, I may be desirous to vote millions of money for improvements which I think ought to be made—such as improvements of the great arteries of commerce; but if I vote for these appropriations, I must also vote to spend millions uselessly on these little creeks. Now, sir, I will not do this and ought not to be called upon to do it. These measures ought to be presented in such shape that a member can put himself on record against those things which he conceives to be great wrongs, and at the same time have a chance to vote for appropriations which he believes to be right.

Yet when we oppose these measures after they come from the Committee of Commerce, who arrogate to themselves the reporting of these bills, we are charged with demagoging. I beg members to scrutinize a list which will be presented of the vast sums appropriated in this way in these bills. So much is appropriated for this creek and so much for the other, and you will find that the larger portion of this money is for these minor streams. The State of West Virginia has received one million and a quarter of dollars in the way of appropriations for little streams. The great State of Illinois has not received one-tenth of that sum, yet we pay a much larger amount in the way of taxes than West Virginia does.

Mr. KENNA. Allow me to ask the gentleman what is his familiarity with West Virginia streams?

Mr. SPARKS. I stated the amount appropriated for streams in West Virginia to be about $1,250,000.

Mr. KENNA. I am not talking about the amount, but as to the gentleman's knowledge of what he is pleased to call the "little streams of West Virginia."

Mr. SPARKS. I thought the gentleman was asking as to the amount; and I stated that $1,250,000 had been appropriated for streams in West Virginia.

Mr. KENNA. As to the amount, I think the gentleman is correct; but as to the character of the streams, I believe he is incorrect.

Mr. SPARKS. At any rate, then, I have stated the amount correctly. Now, the gentleman thinks that we ought to appropriate millions of the people's money for those streams. I am one of those old-fashioned democrats who do not believe in that doctrine. I do not think we ought to improve the road to every man's house and the creek that passes by his door. I think, in other words, Mr. Chairman, [Mr. CARLISLE,] as you expressed it here once, that we ought not to macadamize the beds of these little creeks. I do not think we ought to have appropriated $1,250,000 for the streams of West Virginia.

I think it is a great injustice that we should be called upon either to vote for such appropriations or to vote against the improvement of our great inland sea, the Mississippi River. I want to vote a proper appropriation for this object. I know that improvements on this great river ought to be made; that the people demand it. But when I am called upon to vote for it, I find it incorporated in a bill with other appropriations aggregating a vast amount, three-quarters of which, in my opinion, ought not to be appropriated, and I cannot vote for it.

And I must therefore be placed on the record in voting against the improvement of what has been properly denominated the great "inland sea" of the continent. Gentlemen say we must take the bitter with the sweet in these combinations. They are formed for that very purpose. One man is to get his share and another his, and so on through all those who are interested in the bill. I do not want my share. I do not think it is right to get it by that kind of bargain and sale. I do not think it is right to pass these bills in that way, but do think we should bring them in and have them fully considered in Committee of the Whole, so we might vote for such as we want to vote for and against those we ought to vote against.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to occupy any time of the committee in discussing the rules, but I rose a few moments ago to ask my friend from North Carolina a question affecting the practical working of the rule in question as reported by the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Commerce, we will suppose, has had under consideration the matter of rivers and harbors and has decided on an appropriation of $7,000,000, to be distributed among two hundred different works. They have spent weeks, and perhaps months, in investigating these several works, in ascertaining what will be required to finish certain works and to carry on others, as recommended by engineers in charge. They report their bill to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee says there ought to be only five millions appropriated. Now, how will the Appropriations Committee distribute their five millions? Will it go to work and spend weeks and months, perhaps, as the Commerce Committee has, to determine how it ought to be appropriated or how it ought to be distributed, or will it simply cut the appropriations down pro rata 30 per cent. If so, then works that were intended to be completed under the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce would be only two-thirds or three-quarters completed under the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, and would be required to go over another year, adding expense and incurring, perhaps, loss, if not endangering the whole work.

While on the floor, Mr. Chairman, I will add that in the discussion of this question the objections raised have all seemed to turn upon the idea that some impediment, some obstruction other than the will of this House, is necessary in order to prevent extravagant appropriations for our rivers and harbors. I desire to ask attention for a moment to this point. We were informed by the gentleman from Texas at the outset of this debate that we have appropriated from the foundation of our Government down to this time about $75,000,000 for all our rivers and harbors. Now, we have some thousands of miles of sea-coast line, thousands of miles of lake and river boundaries, and tens of thousands of miles of rivers navigated by steam; and there have been appropriated from the discovery of the continent until now $75,000,000 for the improvement of this vast extent of coast-line and rivers; and gentlemen call that extravagance!

Why, Mr. Chairman, there is one building in this District which, when it is completed, will cost almost one-fifth of that entire sum. The construction of such a building is an expenditure. It may be a beautiful structure, an ornament and all that, and it may serve to shelter grandly a thousand or two clerks, but it does not in turn create any new wealth. On the other hand, the people of this country have appropriated in a single generation between four thousand and five thousand millions of dollars to construct iron highways, and they spend every year from one to two hundred millions to improve them. What has been the result of that kind of improvement—of that sort of expenditure? Why, it has enabled us to produce and distribute within the United States $7,000,000,000 of products annually. Could we do this without the railroad system, created at so great a cost? Surely not. We could hardly produce and distribute five thousand millions. This expenditure, then, enables us, the people of this country, to increase the products of the United States by not less than two thousand millions' worth of products per annum, more than would be possible without this expenditure and these improvements. In other words, new powers, new economic forces have been created which add to the national wealth not less than two thousand millions a year.

Ten millions of dollars, Mr. Chairman, would make the Ohio River, I believe, navigable for ten months in the year, from Pittsburgh to Louisville. Ten millions thus expended to make that great river navigable ten months in the year would cheapen transportation probably 25 per cent. or more. That again would be equivalent to adding two or three millions per annum, if not more than that, to our national wealth. The expenditure of money, then, in a way to create new forces, which in turn go to work to re-create wealth, is quite different from the appropriation and expenditure of money for purposes which are mere outlays, like the erection of costly buildings for instance.

Therefore I think we should rather reproach ourselves with having followed a policy penny wise and pound foolish in having spent but $75,000,000 in a century on our thousands of miles of water highways and our coast lines than complain of extravagance. To spend ten millions in the improvement of thousands of miles of river highways is not extravagant when twenty times that is required and expended to improve our railway system. Railways are owned, it is true, by private corporations. Rivers are not so owned, and, I am glad, cannot be, and we must look to Congress for a wise expenditure for their improvement. The highest interests of the country demand it, and it will pay. If, therefore, it is the object of those who oppose the independent action of the committee having this work in charge to defeat appropriations for such internal improvements, then I am opposed to the proposed change in the rules which gives supervisory power to the Appropriations Committee. I am in favor of such judicious expenditure in this way as will tend to increase production and cheapen the distribution of wealth.

On one other point permit me to say a word. I am in favor of full and free discussion of all appropriation bills in this House, and I am not in favor of stifling debate on any matter of importance. I am in favor of discussing these appropriation bills when they come to us from the Committee on Commerce or from any other committee; but I do not see the necessity of a reference of bills matured by arduous labor and much time in the Committee on Commerce to the Committee on Appropriations before they can be reported to this House; and because that plan is intended to obstruct legislation, and, as I believe, discussion too, I oppose it.

I move that the committee rise.

Mr. ACKLEN obtained the floor, and yielded to Mr. BLACKBURN, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules revising the rules of the House, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JANE FISHER.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3544) granting a pension to Jane Fisher, guardian of the infant heirs of William Dakin, deceased, late private Company G, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE.

Mr. WILSON also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 2,000 additional copies of the United States Official Postal Guide be printed, 500 for the use of the Senate and 1,500 for the use of the House.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3545) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MONTGOMERY HOWARD.

Mr. WILLIS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3546) for the relief of Montgomery Howard, late colonel Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MARY HOWARD.

Mr. WILLIS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3547) granting a pension to Mary Howard; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARY A. LAND.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3548) granting a pension to Mary A. Land, widow of Reason M. Land, late private in Sixth Illinois Heavy Artillery; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ROSA VERTNER JEFFREYS.

On motion of Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 103, for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

JAMES HALL.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution for reference to the Committee on Appropriations:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid to James Hall out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives the sum of $474, for services rendered as laborer under the Doorkeeper from November 3, 1877, to June 30, 1878.

The SPEAKER. This resolution should go to the Committee of Accounts if it provides for payment for services rendered during the present Congress. If for services during the preceding Congress it should go to the Committee of Claims, but the Chair will refer it to whatever committee the gentleman desires.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was requested to have the resolution offered and to ask that it go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TITLES IN HOT SPRINGS.

Mr. CONVERSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill H. R. No. 3549) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT S. MURPHY.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3550) for the relief of Robert S. Murphy, of Antwerp, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to correct an error in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MULLAN WAGON-ROAD, MONTANA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report relative to the reopening of the Mullan wagon-road, Montana Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OLD NAVY DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting deficiency estimate for heating, &c., of the old Navy Department building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BRIGHAM until Monday next, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 16, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PAY, ETC., OF ARMY OFFICERS ON RETIRED LIST.

Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House the number, rank, names, and annual pay of each officer of the Army of the United States on the retired list of said Army, the total amount which has been paid to each retired officer as aforesaid, and the aggregate amount paid to retired officers since said retired Army list was created.

GRAND LODGE OF ODD FELLOWS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KLOTZ. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee for the District of Columbia, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3108) amending the charter of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia. I desire the present consideration of the bill, and also ask unanimous consent to be permitted to make a statement, not to occupy more than one minute.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to negotiate a loan or loans not to exceed the sum of $50,000, at a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, and to secure the payment thereof by a mortgage or deed of trust on certain grounds in the city of Washington, designated on the plat of said city as lot No. 11, and part of lot No. 10, in square No. 457, together with the buildings thereon, known as Odd Fellows' Hall, the proceeds to be applied to the liquidation of an existing debt on said property, in accordance with regulations heretofore prescribed by the said Grand Lodge for the management thereof: Provided, That the mortgagee or beneficiary under the mortgage or deed of trust authorized by this act shall not be held accountable for the due application or non-application of the proceeds of said loan.

Mr. KLOTZ. I merely wish to say to the House that the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia owe $50,000, for which they are now paying 8 per cent. interest. They have made an arrangement to fund the debt at 6 per cent., and they simply ask permission to make a mortgage to secure the payment of the interest. There is no objection to the bill. It has passed the Committee on the District of Columbia unanimously, and I ask its passage.

Mr. ACKLEN. What lots are these which they propose to mortgage?

Mr. KLOTZ. They are the property of the Grand Lodge.

Mr. ACKLEN. Why do they come to Congress for this authority?

Mr. KLOTZ. They are required to have the power from Congress to issue bonds.

Mr. ACKLEN. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KLOTZ moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HORATIO D. NELSON.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3551) granting a pension to Horatio D. Nelson, of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ELI M. RAGER.

Mr. COWGILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3552) for the relief of Eli M. Rager, late first lieutenant of Company D, Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THOMAS FAGAN.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3553) granting a pension to Thomas Fagan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

STEPHEN GARDNER.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3554) granting a pension to Stephen Gardner, of Davisville, Sanilac County, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3555) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at seventeen minutes past twelve o'clock. This being Friday, the first business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a private nature. The call rests with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) to construe the pension laws in certain cases, with an amendment to the title.

Mr. CONGER. Let that joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the provisions of the pension laws shall be construed to include civil engineers in the naval service, as commissioned officers of the Navy, according to their relative rank, to be defined by the President, which shall be commensurate with the duties and responsibilities of their office and length of service, and named in their commissions; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Georgie E. Stratton, widow of Civil Engineer Franklin A. Stratton, late of the United States Navy, and allow and pay her the pension provided by law for widows of staff officers ranking with commanders, from and after July 17, 1879, the date of her said husband's death from disease contracted while in the naval service of the United States and in the line of duty.

Mr. CONGER. That seems to be a mixture of public bill and private bill.

The SPEAKER. At the beginning of the reading it seemed to the Chair to be a public bill; but at the end it seems to be a private bill.

Mr. CONGER. It is a double bill; one portion public and the other private.

The SPEAKER. The Chair concurs with the gentleman. The first part of the bill seems to be of a public nature, but the real object of the bill, as is apparent by the amendment to the title reported by the committee, is for the benefit of an individual.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have the bill go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COFFROTH. I am willing to have it go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. It should go on the public calendar.

Mr. COFFROTH. It is really for the benefit of an individual.

Mr. CONGER. The public part of the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole on the Public Calendar.

Mr. COFFROTH. Very well, let it go to the Committee of the Whole on the Public Calendar.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Public Calendar.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH also, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1463) granting a pension to Edward H. Leib;

A bill (H. R. No. 3017) granting a pension to William Bryant;

A bill (H. R. No. 2548) granting a pension to Martha Neil;

A bill (H. R. No. 3487) granting a pension to James Forsyth Harrison;

A bill (H. R. No. 3544) granting a pension to John Fisher, guardian of the infant heirs of William Dakin, deceased, late private Company G, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Infantry; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1470) granting a pension to Francis H. Bird.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 624) granting a pension to Robert S. Goodall;

A bill (H. R. No. 660) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Seaborn;

A bill (H. R. No. 2608) granting a pension to Anna M. Wehe, of Newport, Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Eliza K. Ashley, widow of John P. Ashley, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 1569) granting a pension to William H. Walker;

A bill (H. R. No. 2301) granting a pension to James Kitchen; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1938) granting a pension to John H. McBrayer.

Mr. CALDWELL also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3556) to place upon the pension-roll the name of P. S. Rush, captain Company K, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3557) granting a pension to Peter Julius; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOSTETLER, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, bills of the following titles; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2120) granting a pension to Bernard Brady;

A bill (H. R. No. 745) granting a pension to Colby Hornaday;

A bill (H. R. No. 2637) granting a pension and arrears of pension to Johanna Meehan and children, heirs of Patrick Meehan;

A bill (H. R. No. 2636) granting arrears of pension to John R. Smith, late first lieutenant in Company B, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Cavalry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2123) granting a pension to Albert L. Jack; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1953) for the relief of Henry C. Groomes.

Mr. HOSTETLER also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3558) for the relief of Charlotte M. Coward, widow of Captain Joel M. Coward; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1307) to establish a land district in the Territory of Dakota, and locating the office at Grand Forks.

L. H. HERSHFIELD & BROTHER.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of L. H. Hershfield & Brother; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. VANCE. I ask that this bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be issued to L. H. Hershfield & Brother, bankers, of Helena, Montana, or their order, a duplicate check for the sum of $2,476.81, which check shall be paid out of the Treasury, in lieu of check No. 1578, issued to said L. H. Hershfield & Brother in payment of bullion bar No. 1034, by Russell B. Hamson, assayer in charge of the United States assay-office at Helena, Montana, and payable by the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, which check was lost in transmission; provided that Hershfield & Brother shall execute a good and sufficient bond in double the amount, in manner and form as prescribed by section 3646 of the Revised Statutes in case of checks not exceeding in amount $1,000.

Mr. SAMFORD. I think this bill should take its place on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes the point of order, the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. VANCE. What is the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The point, as the Chair understands, is that the bill takes money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VANCE. I think the point of order is not well taken. The bill provides merely for issuing a new draft in lieu of one issued by the assayer at Helena, Montana, and lost in course of transmission through the mails. This draft was issued in payment for a bullion bar; and the money for such purchases has already been set apart. This bill does not make any new appropriation of money from the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Nevertheless this legislation is necessary to get the money out of the Treasury. If that is not the object, what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. VANCE. The purpose is to pay for bullion which has already been received at the mint in Philadelphia; and these parties are lying out of the use of their money. The money to pay this draft is already in the hands of the assistant treasurer in New York.

The SPEAKER. The money is in the custody of an officer of the United States, but to authorize payment by him this legislation is necessary.

Mr. VANCE. But if the draft had been regularly received at New York, the money would already have been paid.

The SPEAKER. And then this legislation would not have been necessary.

Mr. WARNER. The payment of this money is already authorized by law. This bill only authorizes the issuing of a duplicate draft.

The SPEAKER. But this legislation does in fact take out of the Treasury money which could not be taken out except by a bill of this kind.

Mr. SAMFORD. If the bill provides merely for issuing a duplicate draft, I believe there is a general law covering cases of that kind.

The SPEAKER. Rule 112 is very comprehensive. The Chair will cause it to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. This bill comes within the terms of the rule. It contemplates the payment of money out of appropriations already made.

Mr. VANCE. Of course I will not undertake to argue the point with the Speaker; but if the amount involved were less than $1,000 the officer of the Government would be authorized to issue a duplicate draft without any legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in ruling upon a question of this kind, does not recognize any distinction between one dollar and a million dollars. While not doubting the equity of the proposed legislation, he must, when called upon to decide a point of this kind, follow the rule. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, from the representations which have been made to me by the gentleman from North Carolina, I am now satisfied of the propriety of the passage of the measure which I objected to awhile ago, and therefore withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read, and the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was again read.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NELSON LYON AND JEREMIAH S. JAMES.

Mr. VANCE also, from the Committee on Patents, reported back without amendment a bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Commissioner of Patents to correct the patent dated the 9th day of July, 1872, numbered 128843, and erroneously granted to Joseph Barsaloux, Jeremiah S. James, and Nelson Lyon, as joint inventors, for an invention which was in fact made by said Barsaloux as sole inventor, and of which, at the time of the issue of the said patent, said James and Lyon were assignees of the entire and exclusive right, title, and interest. The correction shall be made upon the face of the patent, or a certified copy thereof, and by proper certificate thereof, appended thereto, and when corrected the patent shall show that the grant is to said Jeremiah S. James and Nelson Lyon, jointly, their heirs and assigns, as assignees of said Joseph Barsaloux. The said patent when corrected, as herein authorized, shall be as good and valid as if it had been originally granted and issued in such corrected form. It shall run for the term of seventeen years from and after the date of the 9th day of July, 1872; but no person shall be held liable for the infringement thereof prior to the date of such correction, which date, with a reference to this act, shall be entered upon the face of the patent, or stated in such certificate, and shall be noted in the records of the Patent Office.

Mr. VANCE. There is a report which accompanies the bill, which can be read if any gentleman desires it. The case, however, is a very clear one.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL KERNAN.

Mr. SAMFORD, from the Committee of Claims, reported back adversely the petition of Daniel Kernan for relief; which was laid on the table and the report ordered to be printed.

GEORGIA REVOLUTIONARY WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. SAMFORD. I am directed, Mr. Speaker, by the Committee of Claims to report a bill (H. R. No. 3560) to refund to the State of Georgia certain money expended by the said State for the common defense in 1777, and to move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. It is a public bill, and should be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SAMFORD. It pertains only to the State of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. And that makes it a public bill.

Mr. SAMFORD. It is not a bill of a general nature, but only in reference to the claim of one State, the State of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Bills where States are involved in a claim against the United States have been held to be public bills.

Mr. SAMFORD. I am not familiar with the rule on that subject.

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Committee of the Whole on the Public Calendar.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. It is reported to-day by unanimous consent and will be received, no objection being made, and sent to the public calendar.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

DIRECT TAX SALES, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have been directed, Mr. Speaker, by the Committee of Claims, to report back the following resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives a statement of whatever sums of money may be covered in the Treasury, the proceeds of the sale of lands for direct taxes in the State of South Carolina, sold under "An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. CONGER. That is a public and not a private matter.

Mr. BRIGHT. It was referred to the Committee of Claims, and I have been instructed to report it back for the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is a House resolution, but relates to a public matter.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my objection.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM A. AND ADELICIA CHEATHAM.

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3561) for the relief of William A. and Adelicia Cheatham for money illegally assessed and paid the Government under protest; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANK J. TAYLOR.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, from the Committee of Claims, reported back adversely the petition of Frank J. Taylor, praying for compensation for services rendered as stenographer to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases in Memphis, Tennessee, and moved that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to; and the petition was laid upon the table and the adverse report ordered to be printed.

ALVA H. HICKS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 714) for the relief of Alvah W. Hicks; and the same was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FRANK L. DONNELLY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the petition of Frank L. Donnelly for relief; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to ask for the reprinting of the usual number of House bills Nos. 1028 and 2432, to regulate interstate commerce.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ELIAS C. BOUDINOT.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 966) to permit Elias C. Boudinot, of the Cherokee Nation, to sue in the Court of Claims; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL J. BENNER.

On motion of Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 2557) for the relief of Daniel J. Benner, of Pennsylvania, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

JOHN B. SLACK.

On motion of Mr. BRAGG, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John B. Slack, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

HEIRS OF NEHIMIAH STOKELY.

On motion of Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the heirs of Nehimiah Stokely, and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

MYRA CLARK GAINES.

Mr. GUNTER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made the following report:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the motion to withdraw the papers in the case of Myra Clark Gaines from the files of the House, respectfully report that the motion be granted to withdraw said papers from the files, without leaving a copy of the same, no adverse report being made, save one as to part of her claim.

There was no objection, and the motion was granted accordingly.

CHARLES W. ABBOT AND W. W. BARRY, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, House bill No. 2828, for the relief of Pay Director Charles W. Abbot and Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry, of the United States Navy; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL ASYLUM, PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. MORSE also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, House bill No. 64, to authorize the assignment of a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy to duty as governor of the naval asylum at Philadelphia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WAR BONDS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. DEERING, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, House bill No. 1729, for the payment of certain Indian war bonds of the State of California.

The bill was read.

Mr. DEERING. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. BREWER. The bill is subject to the point of order, and it seems to me there is no necessity to take up time in reading the report. I make the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation.

Mr. DEERING. Let the bill go to the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. W. RILEY.

Mr. BREWER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2503) for the relief of John H. W. Riley, of California; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PERSONS IMPRESSED INTO THE UNITED STATES NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2437) for the relief of several persons impressed into the United States naval service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MIDSHIPMEN IN THE NAVY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back a resolution of the House requesting the Secretary of the Navy to report the condition of the Naval Academy as regards the probable number of midshipmen who will enter the Navy during the present year, the entire number of midshipmen in the Navy, and whether or not the number is sufficient for the service; accompanied by a report in writing.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

In their consideration of the resolution the committee referred it to the Secretary of the Navy, whose reply is herewith submitted as a part of this report, and furnishes, as will be seen, a complete and full answer to the information sought by the resolution of the committee, and in the opinion of the committee no further action in reference thereto is required.

Mr. CONGER. Let the letter of the Secretary of the Navy be read.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The letter is rather a lengthy one.

Mr. CONGER. Then let the letter be printed with the report.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, that the same be laid upon the table, and that the accompanying report, with the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] who was temporarily absent when his committee was called, desires to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT ASSOCIATION OF BIRMINGHAM, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. SPARKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bills No. 2259 and No. 2171, a bill (H. R. No. 3562) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to deliver, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, four condemned cannon and thirty-six cannon-balls to the order of the Soldiers' Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut, to be used in connection with a soldiers' monument now in process of erection by said association, and, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, he is also directed to deliver to the said association four condemned bronze cannon, to be used in casting the statue of a soldier to surmount such monument.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPARKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORTON MONUMENTAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. BROWNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) granting condemned cannon to the Morton Monumental Association.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to give to the Morton Monumental Association of the United States so many condemned and unserviceable cannon and cannon-balls as may be required for casting a statue of Oliver P. Morton, late a Senator from Indiana, to be erected at the city of Indianapolis, Indiana.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "so many condemned and unserviceable cannon and" and insert "four condemned and unserviceable bronze cannon and thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater.

OFFICE OF AUDITOR OF RAILROAD ACCOUNTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a letter from the Auditor of Railroad Accounts relative to a deficiency in his office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

IMPROVEMENT OF MONONGAHELA RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of the Monongahela River, West Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HARBOR OF NEWBURYPORT, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, requesting appropriations for the removal of obstructions in the harbor at Newburyport, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SAINT MARY'S RIVER, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of a survey for the improvement of the Saint Mary's River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of messengers, watchmen, and laborers of the War Department for restoration of their former rate of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the president of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting a report relating to the prevention of epidemic diseases; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Origin, Introduction, and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases in the United States.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT VICKSBURGH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a request for an appropriation to complete the road from Vicksburgh, Mississippi, to the national cemetery near that city; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WEAVER. The petitions of many soldiers in relation to House bill No. 2480, for the relief of the soldiers and sailors who served in the Army and Navy of the United States in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and to restore to them equal rights with the holders of Government bonds, now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs, have been referred by mistake to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I ask consent that they be taken from the files of that committee and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, where they belong.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT,] I desire to suggest to the House that if they wish a session to-morrow it might be well to devote it to the conclusion of the general debate upon the report of the Committee on Rules now pending in Committee of the Whole. I think it very desirable that we shall come to a disposition of that question as soon as possible. I understand that there are several gentlemen who desire yet to be heard in the general debate. If there be no objection I would propose that the session of to-morrow be devoted to that purpose.

Mr. WEAVER. I think it would be very inconvenient to have a session to-morrow for debate on the report of the Committee on Rules. Would it not be well to adjourn over to-morrow?

Mr. PAGE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of the report of the Committee on Rules how much longer he intends to allow the general debate to run?

The SPEAKER. That gentleman is not now in his seat. The Chair, perhaps, is able to answer the question. The Committee on Rules desire that general debate shall close on Tuesday next. It is possible that some members of the Committee on Rules may wish to speak on that day.

Mr. PAGE. That would not affect the debate under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Unless the House can come to some conclusion as to what time they will close general debate on the report of the Committee on Rules, it is likely that the debate will run for a week longer. In the interest of legislation, which we are now prepared to enter upon to a very great extent, I think it is desirable that the general debate shall be concluded, allowing the members of the Committee on Rules who may desire to do so an opportunity on Tuesday to make such reply as they may see proper to the arguments which have been made upon their report. If the House will not agree to that proposition, I will then submit the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WEAVER. I must object to a session on to-morrow for debate on the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does that proposition contain any sort of understanding in relation to the debate on the report of the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. FERNANDO WOOD; and upon a division there were—ayes 129, noes 29.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. WRIGHT and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being but 19 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. PRICE. That is nine more than was required on another occasion a great while ago when only ten were called for. [Laughter.]

So the motion of Mr. FERNANDO WOOD was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3563) to amend chapter 2, section 1244, of the Revised Statutes, for the retirement of Army officers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. KENNA in the chair.

CHARLES CLINTON.

The CHAIRMAN. To-day being consideration day, the first bill upon the Calendar for consideration is House bill No. 1542, for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles Clinton, late assistant United States treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,850; being the amount of public money stolen from his office on the 1st day of May, 1871, and refunded by him to the Government of the United States.

Mr. CARLISLE. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, beg leave to report:

That a similar bill was unanimously reported from the committee at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, but was not reached for consideration in the House. The report then made states the facts connected with this claim so clearly and succinctly that we prefer to adopt it rather than prepare a new statement. It is as follows:

"That they have given full consideration to the bill providing for the relief of Charles Clinton, late assistant United States treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, and of all the facts connected therewith.

"It appears from the information furnished from the Treasury Department that on the morning of the 1st of May, 1871, the sum of $5,850 was stolen from the office of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans by some party unknown, and that immediately thereafter the amount was refunded by the assistant treasurer to the Government.

"It appears from the testimony submitted to the committee that a thorough examination of all the facts and into the business of the office of the assistant treasurer by the special agents of the Treasury exonerated the cashier and employés of the office in New Orleans, and the assistant treasurer himself, from all fault or blame.

"It is made to appear that, in addition to the usual duties of the assistant treasurer, he was required by the Secretary of the Treasury to take charge of all the internal-revenue stamps to be sold throughout the Southwest, and to sell the same from his office, without being allowed any increase of force, although the assistant treasurer frequently applied for authority to employ a clerk to take special charge of this business, and informed the Secretary that without an increase of the employés he could not conduct the office satisfactorily.

"The Secretary replied that no appropriation had been made for this purpose, and that therefore the request of the assistant treasurer could not be complied with.

"It appears that while the cashier was engaged for a moment attending to the duties of his office away from the counter, on which were several packages of money lying, some thief fished up one of them by reaching over the barrier in front of the counter and immediately disappeared.

"There is no suspicion, or grounds of suspicion, against the assistant treasurer or his cashier, or the employés of the office.

"It appears that the assistant treasurer was a zealous and careful officer, and that the cashier was also diligent and faithful. Large sums of money passed through this office, and every dollar was faithfully accounted for. There was never at any time any complaint.

"It is also made to appear by the testimony before your committee that the assistant treasurer exercised due diligence and watchful care over the appointments and over the actions of his subordinates.

"The proof absolutely excludes any presumption of fraud or misconduct on the part of the assistant treasurer or his subordinates, or any privity or knowledge on the part of the assistant treasurer whatever."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Immediately after the occurrence of this loss the Secretary of the Treasury directed a special agent of that Department to investigate the circumstances attending it. I hold in my hand the report of that agent, which I hope will also be read, as it will furnish to the committee, I believe, all the information which can be afforded on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE SPECIAL AGENT UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, May 8, 1871.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report relative to the recent robbery at the office of the United States assistant treasurer in the city of New Orleans:

On the morning of the 2d instant I was informed that on the previous day the sum of $5,850 had been stolen from that office by some party unknown. Having no instructions, special or general, to investigate into matters connected with the sub-treasury, I immediately telegraphed to the Department that the above-stated sum of money was said to have been stolen from the sub-treasury, and at the same time asked for instruction in the premises.

The Department, on 3d instant, instructed me by telegram in the following words: "Investigate robbery, being careful not to derange efforts of Clinton, who has employed detectives."

I have closely questioned each one of the employés in the sub-treasury, and have consulted with Detective Smith, who was employed by Mr. Clinton to discover and arrest the guilty party.

I find that between the hours of two and three p. m., on 1st instant, the sum of $27,000 (perhaps a little over that amount) lay on the counter close by the desk of Mr. Shute, the cashier. This sum of money was in several packages of various amounts, and among which was one package of $5,850.

There are two apartments or rooms in this establishment, one room being occupied by the bookkeepers and the assistant treasurer, and the other being the office where the funds are received and paid out. The latter room is occupied by Mr. Shute, cashier and paying teller; John L. Henderson, the receiving teller; and John H. Aufdemorte, a porter who is employed in counting currency at a table in the rear of Mr. Shute's desk, and nearly opposite the window through which he pays out the funds. The counter is nearly four feet high; on the other side of the counter there is a protection about three feet high, the lower part of this protection being common panes of glass and the upper part a slight wooden railing. These panes of glass were not shaded or darkened; consequently, any person standing outside of the counter could see everything that lay on the counter inside of said protection. The counter projects about eight inches outside of this protection, so that an outsider could very easily stand up on this projection by holding on to the top railing, and when in that position could, if the officials inside were absent for a moment, or if their backs were turned toward the counter, very easily, with a pointed cane, extract a package of money almost in an instant.

For a short time between the hours of two and three p. m. on 1st instant the cashier and receiving teller were together in the cashier's vault. While they were there there was no person in the front office except Aufdemorte, the porter, who was engaged at a table counting currency, and having his back toward the counter. At this time the $27,000 was lying on the counter, and among which was the package of $5,850 in currency.

Aufdemorte states that while the cashier and receiving teller were in the vault he heard a slight rustle or creaking noise outside the counter; that he did not look around to ascertain what caused this noise, as he supposed it was the creaking of the foot-board on which persons waiting outside of the cashier's window stand. He also states that at that time there was but one person outside the counter.

Soon after three o'clock Mr. Shute, on verifying his cash accounts for the day, found his cash short $5,850 currency. He recollected that a package of that amount was lying on his counter when he went to the vault, and he found this same package missing.

Mr. Shute informs me that when he discovered the loss he examined the outside of the counter, and that on the projection (which I have already described) he found some sand which appeared to be the foot-print of some person who had stood upon this projection.

This foot-print was right opposite where the money lay on the counter.

Detective Smith was immediately sent for and intrusted with the investigation of the case.

I have consulted with Smith. He and I agree in the opinion that the money was stolen over the counter at the time the cashier and teller were in the vault and the office in the sole possession of the porter, who was busy counting currency, and who had his back to the counter.

It will be seen that under the circumstances, with the money exposed to the full view of outsiders through an unshaded glass, with the aid afforded by the outside projection of the counter, no person in the office except a porter, whose back was turned, a very favorable opportunity was afforded to any expert thief to abstract a package of money from the counter.

Thus far Detective Smith has failed to find any clew to the robbery, and he entertains no hopes of success.

I have no suspicion against Aufdemorte, the porter. I inquired closely into his movements after the robbery was discovered, and I find nothing to excite any suspicion.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. J. KINSELLA,
Special Agent.

Hon. GEO. S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to make any factious opposition to this bill; but I want to call the attention of the committee to the facts of this case. While the reports say that these officers were very careful, very competent, very honest, very watchful, yet the reading of both the reports discloses the fact that nearly $30,000 in money was left lying where anybody could reach over and take it and walk off with it without being observed. Having left the money in that condition, the man whose sworn duty it was to guard that property walks off into another part of the building, goes into the vault with his back to the money; and although he heard a noise, according to his own confession, he never so much as turned around to see what occasioned the noise.

Now, I have very little hope of defeating the passage of this bill, because I have seen so many similar bills pass heretofore. I have not lived thus long in the world, and been for so many years a member of Congress, without learning that men come from the East and the West, from the North and the South, importuning the authorities for appointments to office; their indorsements being good, they are vouched for as capable, honest, watchful men. But when public property—money particularly—is placed in their possession and under their control, it being their special business to guard it well and disburse it properly, every now and then some one of these officers comes here and says, "$1,000, $5,000 (in this case $5,850) has been stolen from me when I was away;" and we refund the money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Now, I submit that no gentleman on this floor would conduct his private business in that manner. Any man in charge of the business of an individual who would so carelessly—that is the proper dictionary word for it—so carelessly lose or allow to be lost the property of his employer would be held to a strict accountability. But so long as we thus vote money away, (shall I say recklessly?—if I may be allowed that expression I will use it,) so long as we vote money away recklessly, without, in my judgment, proper care, just so long will public officials disregard their sworn duty, and just so long will incompetent and careless men—I will not say dishonest men, for I have no right to say that—just so long will incompetent and careless men, regardless of their duty and their oaths, let the money of the Government go, and then come to Congress to have the money refunded; and we will refund it in the future, I will presume, as we have in the past.

With my ideas of duty and my ideas of business correctness and responsibility I cannot allow myself to vote for any such bill as this. I know, sir, that if you had had that money in charge, and could tell no other story than that which this report tells, you would feel that Congress ought not to refund the money, because with proper care and diligence it would never have been stolen.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Before that vote is taken, I desire to occupy a few moments. I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] with some interest. I believe that heretofore I have not had much to do in supporting or opposing the passage of this class of claims through the House. I do not know now that I am prepared to oppose the favorable consideration of this report. I simply wish to say a word about this class of claims generally.

I believe that when a public officer takes an appointment under the Government and is charged with the duty of handling the public moneys, he should become an absolute insurer of the funds intrusted to him. I know that this is a pretty harsh rule; yet the truth is that these officers of the Government are paid upon an average better compensation than is received by men similarly employed in the ordinary pursuits of private life. As everybody knows, all these positions, both great and small, are sought by a great many people. If a man in his private business meets with a loss by burglary or otherwise he pockets the loss, and I think the same rule should obtain touching the public business. I view with alarm year by year the multiplication of this class of claims. Of course, if we pass one we must pass another, and finally all similar claims. I for one would gladly assist in turning over a new leaf and have the rule obtain that no one shall be relieved unless the loss arises from the act of God or the public enemy. The revenues would thereby be protected and much better care and diligence secured from public servants.

Mr. DUNNELL. Without speaking directly in support of the present bill—and I am free to say I will vote for its passage, for it was very carefully considered by the committee which reports it to the House—I wish to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois more especially, as well as to the gentleman from Iowa. I think the rule which they would adopt would be altogether too severe; indeed, it is severer than it is in private life. If the cashier of a bank, while in the exercise of his duty, commits an act of carelessness which comes to every mortal at some time in his life, and the bank loses a thousand dollars, while that cashier is thus careless no bank expects to make that cashier responsible for the loss.

Mr. PRICE. Excuse me, sir; some banks do make the cashier put up the loss at once.

Mr. DUNNELL. Some banks may, but not as a rule.

Mr. PRICE. I think the rule is that they do.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is no corporation which carries the rule to the same extent as the gentleman from Illinois proposes. It is altogether too severe. Now, many of us have had acquaintance with cases which have come to this House for the last few years where it would be extremely unkind and ungenerous on the part of the Government to hold the men responsible for losses incurred. I remember one case where a paymaster was carrying some money across the country in Texas; every possible precaution had been taken, he surrounded the money with a well-set guard, but it seems there was a conspiracy of which he knew nothing against that money in his possession, and he was robbed of some of it. Now if the great Government which that man was serving faithfully and against which he never had a dishonest thought for a moment, should refuse to make good what he thus lost it would be altogether too severe. There is no humanity in such a rule, and I cannot understand how the gentleman from Illinois, eminently humane, should get hold of an idea such as he has announced.

Mr. PRICE rose.

Mr. DUNNELL. I charge that rather to the gentleman from Illinois than to the gentleman from Iowa. It was the gentleman from Illinois who displayed, as I thought, an extra amount of inhumanity.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. DUNNELL. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. If the case presented to the House to-day was similar to the one just now presented by the gentleman from Minnesota, I should not have raised my voice in opposition to it. In that case, according to his own statement, the man having charge of the funds of the Government had used every precaution in his power, when he was overpowered, taking it out of the line of his individual responsibility because he was unequal to the guarding of it, guilty of no negligence, for he had done everything within the range of human possibility for him to do to guard the money. When he had done all this, then as a matter of course we should come up and pay him back again.

But, sir, the reason I oppose the bill before the House is that this man did not do anything of the sort. He laid that money down where anybody could pick it up, and walked off and left it. He did not know anything about it until he came to make up his cash after three o'clock in the afternoon. The two cases are dissimilar. They are as far apart as the poles. Give me a case like the one stated by the gentleman from Minnesota and I will vote for it. But give me a case like the one before the House and I will vote against it every time.

Mr. DUNNELL. One word further. The officers of the Government have recommended this compensation to this officer. It was most carefully examined by the special agents of the Treasury Department, and there is no evidence anywhere in the case that there was anything like willful negligence, or that it was one of the momentary acts of carelessness which come to all men, or that there was any improvident action on his part. Never has he been found wanting in any single instance, and large sums of money, millions and tens of millions of dollars, have passed through his hands. Yet, sir, this amount slipped out as the result, not of any momentary want of precaution which comes to every man——

Mr. KEIFER. Is the gentleman from Minnesota a member of the committee which considered this case?

Mr. DUNNELL. This came from the Committee of Ways and Means, of which I have the honor to be a member.

Mr. KEIFER. Do I understand the accounting officers recommend this?

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand so.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will answer the gentleman from Ohio. I think my colleague from Minnesota on the Committee of Ways and Means is in error when he says the accounting officers of the Treasury have in terms recommended the relief here proposed, but the Treasury Department has furnished to the committee the facts upon which mainly the report of the committee has been based.

The testimony in this case shows that in the year 1871 the Treasury Department imposed upon the assistant United States treasurer at the city of New Orleans the duty of selling the internal-revenue stamps for the whole Southwest, which was a duty in addition to those ordinarily imposed upon that officer by the laws and regulations of the Treasury Department, and which required him to receive and disburse a much larger amount of money and to transact a much larger amount of business than ordinarily was required of him. When this additional duty was imposed on that officer he made, as is shown by the testimony in the case, repeated and urgent applications to the Secretary of the Treasury to afford him additional assistance in his office, in order that he might safely transact that additional business, but it was at all times declined on the ground that there was no appropriation for that specific purpose and no fund out of which the Secretary of the Treasury could pay such additional employés. The assistant treasurer himself said when he went into office that he saw at once the unsafe condition in which the money of the Government would be placed, and he caused such alterations to be made as he could have made for the purpose of making it a more secure place for the transaction of the public business. But with all the precautions which he was able to take this loss occurred.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is somewhat mistaken in his facts in connection with the circumstances attending this loss. It was the money-porter of the office who states he heard this creaking noise outside the counter. It was not the officer himself. This money-porter while engaged in counting a package of money heard, or thought he heard, this noise outside the counter, but supposing it to be occasioned by some person who was there in the transaction of business, which was an ordinary matter, he paid no attention to it.

Now, the cashier and one of his assistants were at the time this loss is supposed to have occurred inside the vault in the office, as I remember the testimony, attending to some of this additional duty in relation to revenue-stamps imposed upon this officer by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PRICE. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman from Kentucky, but I will say in answer to what is said about the porter hearing the noise that the porter was also an employé under that officer

Mr. CARLISLE. He was.

Mr. PRICE. And therefore responsible for his acts or for his nonaction. I suggest to my friend from Kentucky due diligence on the part of this officer would have required the keeping of that money in the vault. He had a vault, and due diligence would have required the keeping of that money in that vault until needed for payment, instead of exposing it upon the counter to be carried off by anybody.

Mr. CARLISLE. I suppose, if not impossible, it would be at least very inconvenient for a public officer who is constantly receiving and paying out money at his counter to undertake to keep that money in his vault until the moment it was needed. The testimony is that the money had just been received from the bank.

Mr. PRICE. In a separate package, not yet broken, and not intended to be broken during that day.

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not know how that may be as to the intention to break it that day; but the testimony is that this money had been received from the bank, brought in perhaps by the very porter in the office at the time, and laid down on this counter; and it was lying there when this thief, or these thieves, by climbing upon a railing outside of the counter, and by means of a hook or a cane, or some other instrument of like character, took the package out. And the committee thought, like the Committee of Ways and Means of the Forty-fifth Congress, that, under all the circumstances of the case, it would be unjust for the Government to require this officer to sustain this loss.

Mr. GARFIELD. If my friend will allow me to say that if this gentleman left the money on the open plain counter, where it could be taken by anybody walking near, it would show want of diligence, but it was on a counter with a wire railing high enough to prevent any person from reaching it by ordinary means. Here was really a case of climbing, where the thief had to climb and get his foot on the ledge of the counter which projected, and by means of a hook reach over and get the money out of the place where for all ordinary purposes it was safe, and where every banker in the world keeps a considerable amount of money lying for immediate payment. I think due diligence was shown.

Mr. CARLISLE. Now, will the gentleman allow me before I take my seat to call attention to another feature of the evidence? There is here among the papers in the case an affidavit made by the superintendent of police of the city of New Orleans who was called upon immediately after the loss occurred to investigate the circumstances and who details them, so far as he details them at all, as they are stated by the special agent of the Treasury Department; and he exonerates the officer from blame. Here is the statement of the officer himself as to what he had done to enable him to transact the business of the office more securely than he could have done as he found it when he first went there. He says in his affidavit:

I immediately saw the dangers to which my office would be exposed with the large sums of money continually passing over the counter, as was required in the daily business of the office during this year—

This was the year in which he was required to dispose of the revenue-stamps for the whole Southwest—and made repeated appeals to the Secretary of the Treasury to allow me to employ a trustworthy clerk to perform the duties of the stamp department. He declined to accede to my request for the reason principally that no appropriation had been made, nor was there any fund from which such an employé could be paid.

That, however, is not the part to which I desire particularly to draw attention. He says, some months previously he had noticed the exposure of this counter, and had raised the protection railing on the outside from the height of a man's head on the floor to about eight feet from the floor, and then supposed that it was safe from any attempt from the outside to abstract papers or money from the cashier's desk. But even after this was done, as has been stated by my colleague on the committee from Ohio, these thieves climbed up on the outside of the counter and, by means of a hook, got this money.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Supposing the property lost had been the property of a private depositor in a bank, would the facts reported by the committee be any defense to an action against the bank?

Mr. CARLISLE. I suppose, as a matter of course, if a banking institution had received this money on deposit from one of its customers the banking institution the moment it got the money inside its office and obtained actual custody of it became indebted to the depositor and the money would be the bank's, and the loss would necessarily be the bank's loss.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The gentleman from Iowa supposes the case of a special deposit.

Mr. CARLISLE. If it were a special deposit, and the banking institution had actually received it from its customer into its own custody and under its own control, I suppose as a matter of strict law the bank could not exonerate itself from a claim of the customer unless it showed a proper degree of diligence.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, it could if it were a special deposit.

Mr. CARLISLE. Unless the bank could show that it was a loss without negligence on its part. It has been conceded here by one of the members of the committee that perhaps there was not that strict care and diligence on the part of the officer which he might have exercised, because he might have been so careful that he would never turn his back on the counter even for a moment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The law does not require that.

Mr. CARLISLE. Of course the law does not require that. But whether or not there was such diligence in this case as would exonerate the officer as a matter of strict law, yet as a matter of equity and justice the Government should not, in my opinion, call upon its officer, who had always been faithful in the discharge of his duty, to sustain this loss.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to reply for a moment to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and I may yet have to call for the assistance of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. HORR,] who represents the Committee on Manufactures. [Laughter.] I allege that the money was insecure; that it was not sufficiently protected. It lay upon the counter where it could be carried off. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] makes this statement in answer to that proposition, that it was inside of a railing eight feet high. But that report discloses the fact that there was a ledge on the outside of the counter four feet up, and no climbing was necessary, but a man could put his feet on that ledge, when his feet would be four feet from the top railing, and it would be easy for him to reach over and pick up the money.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not without a hook.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, without a hook. There is no question but that the money was hooked. [Laughter.] I agree to that. I want to show that the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio does not prove there was due diligence in the protection of the money.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have never known of a man having an arm four feet long.

Mr. KEIFER. It is not my purpose to make an assault upon this bill. I am inclined to vote for it, although, after hearing all that has been said by members of the committee, I think it is doubtful whether we are not setting a bad precedent, one that will encourage carelessness and negligence. I do not believe the case made out by the committee in their report is one which, if the question arose in a court of law, would exonerate a bank or bank officer from liability. I think the usual rule in banks, and in other places where large sums of money are kept, is to have the money kept under the eye of some one person or to lock it up. It is said, in explanation of this case, that there were duties imposed upon this officer which required him to be absent from his counter. But I do not understand that it appears that there was only this one man there, or that this man was obliged to go away and leave entirely exposed all the funds that might be upon the counter. So much for that.

I have noticed since I have been here that a very equitable rule has been applied, and one which I am inclined to follow. In the case of the paymaster spoken of by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] I understand that there was not the slightest suspicion against him, not a particle of doubt that he performed all that the Government requirements made necessary. In that case he had all the guards that he could get from the Government, he had a military guard, yet there was a robbery perpetrated, and there was no negligence or carelessness on his part.

We have a large class of cases coming before us for relief. I happen to have upon my table this morning an application for relief, on account of robbery, on behalf of a postmaster whose office is worth about $40 a year—a hard-earned $40. He kept the money of the Government in his charge in the best place where he could keep it in his own establishment. His place was broken open and this money was stolen, and also some postage-stamps. Now, I believe the uniform rule of this House has been, ever since I have known anything about it, to require, in a case of that kind, that the postmaster and his bondsmen shall make good the loss. There was no carelessness on the part of this man. It was impossible for him in a small village to keep a safe in which to lock the money and the stamps of the Government, yet he must suffer the loss.

I would be inclined myself in all proper cases to vote to make good this loss to this poor man. I understand, however, that the rule is the other way; that there has been no recent case where a poor man has been relieved from the loss of a sum of money, or of stamps, which is the same thing. If we are to have such a rule, then I give notice now that I would like to have it extended to another class of persons, if it is a safe rule to enter upon at all.

While I am not disposed to vote against the unanimous report of a committee that has carefully and considerately examined the case, yet I feel that we ought at least to scrutinize the matter very carefully.

Mr. BARBER. I would like to make an inquiry or two of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.] What provision was made for watchmen in this building?

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not know that any provision was made for watchmen in this building in the day-time, or even at night, so far as the testimony goes.

Mr. BARBER. Is there not a general provision for watchmen in all the sub-treasuries?

Mr. CARLISLE. I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. TUCKER. This bill has been reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, and I think it proper that I should make a remark or two in reference to it. It has been very fully considered. It rests upon this ground. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] asked a question a few moments ago, to which I will address myself.

This party was a bailee for hire of a deposit. But I understand there is no higher degree of care required of such a bailee than that it shall be reasonable care, in the language of Sir William Jones. It is not extraordinary care, far less insurance.

I was amazed at the proposition of my friend on the other side, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] that we ought to hold these officers as insurers of the moneys of the Government deposited with them. If you do that you would either get none but irresponsible people, who do not care whether you break them or not, to fill these offices, or you would get no responsible men at all. No man can be an insurer of public property under these circumstances.

Therefore I apprehend that if this were the bailee of a special deposit there would be no responsibility to the special depositor under the circumstances of the case. Far less should there be with an honest officer who has in good faith discharged his duties and has applied all reasonable care in the custody of public property.

Mr. KNOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. KNOTT. While I agree with the gentleman as to his legal proposition, there is a question of fact affecting the amount of diligence and care exercised by the bailee. Where was this money when it was stolen?

Mr. TUCKER. It was on the counter, protected by a railing, the counter and railing being eight feet high.

Mr. KNOTT. Was it in a vault or in a drawer, or left loose on the counter?

Mr. TUCKER. It was lying loose on the counter, and the reason why it was so left was that it was necessary for some portion of the money to be there in order to the speedy transaction of the public business.

Now, let me say one thing to my friends on the other side. There is nothing easier when a loss has occurred than for somebody to find out how it could have been prevented in the particular direction in which the loss did occur. In other words, as somebody else has said, our hindsight is always better than our foresight. After the thing is over we can always see any number of remedies that would have been proper. But when an officer has done that which any diligent man would reasonably deem sufficient, I do not see that the Government should hold him responsible for a loss of this kind. I think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no knowledge of the facts of this particular case. I rise only to make a remark upon the principle involved. If this Government is to be made responsible for thefts of public money in charge of public officers, what better equity has a public officer for reimbursement than a private citizen would have for losses sustained by him? I know that the tendency is to regard this Government as a great eleemosynary establishment that shall relieve the woes and distresses of the whole human family, at least that part of it within the boundaries of the United States. But, Mr. Chairman, if we proceed upon that principle—if we establish a precedent which will lead us into that line of legislation, without regard to whether the Government by any default of its own has made itself liable for the loss, where are we to stop, and how are we to raise the money to pay for these losses?

It does not appear, from anything I have heard, that the Government was in any manner derelict in this case. This man was in charge of the public funds. It was his duty to take reasonable steps for the security of those funds. If he neglected to do so, it is not the fault of the Government, nor is it the fault of the people who are to pay this money if this bill be passed. Therefore, it seems to me, we are going a long distance in undertaking to indemnify any man, whether he be a public officer or a private citizen, against losses by robbery.

I am a little afraid, also, that when we begin to indemnify public officers for money lost by robbery, it will encourage an enormous amount of robbery in this country. I think there is great danger in that direction. In numerous cases public officers will lose public moneys and will come to Congress to be reimbursed for the loss.

There is nothing in principle that should bind this Government to reimburse these officers for this money, unless the Government was in some way derelict on its part. There is no pretense, as I understand, that the Government has been derelict. The case before the House is simply a case of loss by robbery, to make the best of it. Why should we appropriate money to relieve a person from loss by robbery because he is a public officer, unless we are willing to extend this principle of relief to a private citizen who suffers from a robbery? Are there higher equities in favor of the one than the other? Has a man a stronger claim to be relieved because he holds in his custody the public money than he would have if he held private money? It seems to me there is necessity that we should pause in this career of universal relief to all men and inquire upon what principle we are to extend relief, and to what end the application of the principle will lead us.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. In reply to a remark made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] I wish to state, as I stated when speaking of this matter a few moments ago, that I am not antagonizing this particular bill, except as it belongs to a class of bills that in my judgment, under a proper policy, should not pass. As I understand the policy of the Government, it always has been, and is now, as a general rule, to let the officer bear the loss where a loss is made. Parties in exceptional cases come to Congress for the granting of special relief. Now, I do not believe it is a proper policy for Congress to adopt.

My friend from Virginia says that if we enforce the rule I have laid down the Government cannot obtain public servants to perform its duties. Why, sir, I will go security that the gentleman's district alone would furnish office-holders for this whole country; and if his district will not, I know that his and mine together will—officers, too, perfectly competent for the positions. Now, take the case of postmasters. There are forty thousand of these officers in the United States, who handle the public funds. No one of these officers, excepting those in a few of the great cities, has as much at stake at any one time as an ordinary shopkeeper or retail dealer.

If the dry-goods merchant has his money-till broken open or his property destroyed, he bears the loss. If a postmaster, however, has money stolen or property destroyed for which he is responsible to the Government, he applies to Congress for a special act of relief. Yet in fact as a rule he is better paid for his work than is his neighbor in a private employment. You may adopt this rule and I will go the gentleman's security there will be no difficulty about a full supply of candidates for all these positions although you should hold them as insurers. The danger is, of course, that if you continue this facility of passing such acts for the relief of this great number of office-holders some portion of them, not all of them, not a majority of them, but here and there dishonest men, will put up jobs on the Government. I have no doubt in some instances it has been done and is being done constantly. Therefore I again say that for one I am ready to let the general law stand as it is, and let everybody understand that these special acts ought not to and cannot pass.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I have no other interest in this claim than to have the principle settled. There are some reasons which are patent to me and which make me favor the passage of this claim. On the question of fact it seems there has been an investigation by certain officers of the Government, and they have decided there was nothing corrupt, no malfeasance in office, nothing against the integrity of this Government official. So far as that is concerned it is all in favor of the claimant and against the Government. There was no law to give him a remedy except by application to the Government. By bond he was compelled to pay the loss. Congress received his application and we referred it to one of the most intelligent and able committees of this body, composed of gentlemen of eminent legal ability, who were not only capable to decide questions of law and fact, but gentlemen who would eminently adorn any judicial tribunal in the country. They have made a unanimous report. That report comes to this body in the nature of a judgment of a court on the law and facts; and although it is not absolutely binding on this body, still it has a judicial and moral force which is operating, at least on my mind, in relation to it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman has been in the House a number of years on the Committee of Claims. What has been the custom of the House in its action in reference to this class of claims?

Mr. BRIGHT. I will answer the gentleman, because it lies in the line of my remarks in another connection, but I do not wish to be interrupted now in the progress of my statement of the case.

Here, according to the report of the committee, was the sum of $5,850 stolen from the assistant treasurer at New Orleans while he was engaged in attending to the duties of his office. It was stolen away from his counter on which were several packages of money. Some thief had fished it up by reaching over the barriers in front of the counter, and then immediately disappeared. That is the finding of the committee. Now, what do they say further?

Mr. KNOTT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. KNOTT. As the gist of this claim seems to be in the amount of diligence used, I wish to ask the gentleman whether he considers ordinary diligence, reasonable diligence on the part of any custodian of public money, to consist in placing a package of $5,000 on his counter, where it could be and actually was taken by a thief, and then paid so little attention to the matter that he did not discover the loss until he came to make up his cash balance in the afternoon?

Mr. BRIGHT. I am obliged to the gentleman for his question, and I will give him the answer of the Committee of Ways and Means, and here it is:

> It is also made to appear by the testimony before your committee that the assistant treasurer exercised due diligence and watchful care over the appointments and over the actions of his subordinates.

That is the finding of this committee charged with the investigation of these facts. It is directed to the point which is pivotal in this case, and it is to the effect that there was due diligence, that there was watchful care over the appointments and over the action of his subordinates.

I think these findings on the part of the Government in the first place, and the finding of the committee which investigated in the second place, are powerfully persuasive both of the law and the testimony. The question is presented here before this body, not as one fettered by any law, but in the exercise of a political discretion as well as a legal one this House is to settle the question whether there has been due diligence, watchful care in relation to the custody of the Government funds. Now, in support of that, as already argued, are the two findings of the commissioners of the Treasury and the Committee of Ways and Means.

In the third place, to go behind these findings to the evidence, we perceive the testimony supports the findings. If that be so, the question addressed to this body is, what rule of action will it adopt in relation to this class of cases?

One gentleman says that he would consider every Government officer a guarantor or indemnifier against any loss whatever. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, as already argued by another, that that would be a rule of such hardship as would at once suspend the functions of this Government. Does it strike representatives that perhaps four-fifths of all the business of the whole country, public and private, is transacted through agencies? Of necessity the business of the Government must be transacted through agents.

What is your Government but a system of agencies? You see only the manifestation of your Government. There is nothing visible or tangible in relation to it except it be the agents and these agents are intrusted with the discharge of various duties, and the question comes back to us, What responsibility will we hold these agents to in the discharge of their duties?

I understand the rule of common law to be this: that in a case of gross negligence they punish the agent individually with responsibility. In a case of reasonable or due diligence the agent is held to be excusable.

There is a certain class of cases where the individual is charged with extraordinary or strict diligence. Now, these boundaries are sometimes a little difficult to define in all their applications; but at the same time the great boundary between gross neglect and reasonable diligence is always patent and can be discerned; and, as to the rule of practice that I understand to have been adopted by the Government in the administration of law in reference to this class of claims, we require nothing more than is required in any other business—that is, reasonable or due diligence proportioned to the business to be transacted. If this case comes within that classification, I can see no reason why the relief should not be granted. I think it falls within that class.

Where was this fund? Was it in an unusual place of custody? Not at all. It was at its usual daylight place of custody perhaps, and there for the purpose of being used in the ordinary transactions of the Government. It was not required to be under lock and key perpetually. The banks of the country do not keep their funds during their business hours always under lock and key, but keep them in a place where they can be easily reached and the business conducted with reasonable facility.

We find that the Treasury counter was constructed by the Government after the fashion of a bank counter, with a barricade to secure the funds against the reach of any one on the outside. The officer of the Treasury was not responsible for this construction.

Again, we find that these funds were placed there late in the day, probably to be placed with other funds in the vaults in a short time, and were to all intents and purposes in the presence of the officer; and when he turned his back to attend to other business in the line of his duty, the thief scaled the barricade which the Government had erected and fished up the money. The proof shows that the back of the officer was turned only momentarily, and I do not think he can be charged with gross negligence. He was not asleep, nor drunk, nor attending to any business not in the line of his duty. Will any one pretend to say, because there is any theft at all the responsibility should attach to every agent intrusted with the care of the public funds?

The rule would be so intolerable that it would lay an arrest upon nearly all transactions conducted by agency. It is enough to say that such a rule has been reprobated in all countries where the civil or common law prevails. Civilization would frown upon the tyranny of such a rule. They are only Shylocks who demand the penalty of bonds under all circumstances. Congress has always viewed the class of cases before us with a liberal and equitable spirit. It has been the practice of Congress to give relief in such cases. I cannot pretend to enumerate, but I will mention one, where the Treasurer of the United States was relieved for a theft committed within the granite walls of the great Treasury building, in this city. This is a sample case. Other cases might be mentioned. It may be laid down as a general rule, that where an officer of the Government has not been convicted of malfeasance or gross negligence, but has faithfully and honestly attempted to discharge the duties of his office with proper care and diligence, Congress has granted the relief. Believing the case before us fully within the rule, I feel constrained to vote for the relief.

Mr. BALLOU. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple case, and that the Government should hold its officers just as responsible as associations, as corporations, as national banks, as savings institutions hold their officers for like action.

Now, sir, I do not believe that there is a respectable board of bank directors or a board of trustees of a savings institution in this country that would hold a cashier or a treasurer responsible and have him make up a loss that was sustained under such circumstances; and the Government ought not to hold its officers any more responsible than private associations, bank directors, trustees of savings institutions, should hold theirs. I think in such a case as this, where the money was stolen and where as much attention was paid to the matter of protecting it as is given in the case of the customer of a bank, the Government should refund the money which was lost. It is not an easy matter for a man to raise himself four feet and reach over a railing four feet high and get the money; and of course every man who is a treasurer or a cashier in a bank or other institution must keep the funds on hand for use. They must be on the counter, and if they are stolen under such circumstances as have been stated here, I believe the Government ought to refund the money.
